Yugoslavia television on Sunday quoted Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic as saying the Serbs would permit free passage to trucks carrying aid anywhere in Bosnia, including Maglaj.

Many such promises have been broken in the past, but the arrival of the U.N. team appeared to give substance to Sunday's pledge.

On Feb. 28, NATO jets shot down four Serb warplanes in northern Bosnia. NATO said the Serb planes had ignored several warnings to leave a U.N.-imposed no-fly zone and were observed bombing an area controlled by the Muslim-led Bosnian government.

It was the first military strike by NATO in its 44-year history and came after repeated threats by the alliance to intervene to back U.N. resolutions aimed at ending nearly two years of civil war in Bosnia.

The Belgrade-based Tanjug news agency said Bosnian Serb commander Gen. Ratko Mladic had complained in a letter to Akashi that the French peacekeepers had built their observation posts on the edge of Muslim positions facing Serb forces.

"A self-defense action by our soldiers thus could have serious consequences for the French troops," Mladic said.

The draft constitution followed a basic accord reached in Washington on the outlines of a Muslim-Croat federation that could lead to a confederation with Croatia.

U.S. special representative Charles Redman said the draft constitution will need approval by a constituent assembly and that Bosnian and Croat leaders would be invited to Washington to endorse the accord later this week.

The next step would be to persuade the Serbs to join the federation, he said.

But the Muslim-Croat accommodation is viewed anxiously by the Serbs, who are holding out for independence and union with Serbia.

The Croat-Muslim federation foresees a return of some of the 70 percent of Bosnian captured during the 23-month-old war that has left more than 200,000 people dead or missing.

The Serbs say they are willing to give back some territory, but there are differences over how much and where.

HUD official charged with felonies

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON— While Iran-Contra and Whitewater caught the nation's attention, a publicity-shy special prosecutor in a federal housing scandal won a dozen convictions that lead to the doorstep of former Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce.

Pierce has been the main target of independent counsel Arlin M. Adams' investigation of fraud and influence-peddling at the Department of Housing and Urban Development during the Reagan administration.

But Pierce has not been charged, and his lawyers hope Adams will close the four-year-old investigation without prosecuting him.

"Secretary Pierce maintains that he has been involved in no violations of law while he was secretary for eight years, and there is not one scrap of evidence to support a contrary conclusion," Pierce's attorney Paul L. Perito said.

However, a federal jury found enough evidence to convict Pierce's former executive assistant, Deborah Gore Dean, of 12 felonies involving the steering of federal housing funds to politically connected developers.

Her predecessor as executive assistant, Lance H. Wilson, was convicted of giving an illegal gratuity to a HUD official after Wilson left the department and sought government money for a project.

Pierce told a House subcommittee in 1989 he did not have "hands-on" involvement in awarding federal housing grants. But others said he intervened at HUD on behalf of prominent Republicans.

Pierce refused to testify again before the panel, pleading the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination.

Months later, Adams was appointed to investigate whether Pierce and others engaged in political favoritism and whether he lied to Congress.

Adams has followed a traditional prosecution strategy by starting with small fry — developers and lower ranking officials — and slowly working his way up the hierarchy at HUD during the Reagan administration.

Cats lose 2nd straight to Hawks; K-State moves to postseason NIT

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas coach Roy Williams probably spoke for a majority of the 17,454 in attendance following K-State's game with the Jayhawks.

"That was about as boring of a second half as I've ever sat through," Williams said, following KU's 73-52 shellacking of K-State in the first round of the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament on Friday.

Countless fans roamed toward exits like cattle midway through the second period. They had seen enough. And it wasn't as if they were leaving a bad movie costing $5 or $6. A first-level ticket was valued at $100.

"It was difficult," Williams said of trying to keep his players focused. "I tried to act mad half of the time. I was concerned about how we were playing. I challenged them to win the second half, too."

The second period was a draw with K-State and KU each scoring 39 points. But the game was long decided by then.

Halftime score: Kansas 34, Deryl Cunningham 11 and K-State two.

So, the Wildcats escape to the locker room down 34-13. Yes, 34-13. Cunningham was the only Cat to sink a field goal in the opening period until Demond Davis rattled one in with three minutes left.

K-State shot a horrid 18.5 percent from the floor in the first half, including zero for 11 from three-point land.

Here's a look at four K-State players' field goals in the first half:

Anthony Beane — zero for five.

Askia Jones — zero for five.

Belvis Noland — zero for four.

Brian Gavin — zero for three.

Jones finished the game with two points, fouling out with 9:25 to play.

"I missed my first three pointer when I got open," Jones said, who needed just six points to pass Bob Boozer for third on the all-time scoring charts at K-State. "After that, I rushed my shots. In the second half, I did a better job of getting open, but I got into foul trouble."

Kansas enjoyed solid shooting to start the game, hitting for 52 percent from the field and 66.7 percent from three-point range.

"We dug ourselves a gigantic hole that first half," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "Our movement wasn't very good, and our ball movement was worse. We buried ourselves pretty deep and just couldn't get out."

Altman said it was evident in the first half that the Cats' assurance had been lost.

"They have lost confidence," Altman said of his players. "I think that was pretty obvious in the first half. Then, we were stumbling around and not doing things right."

"We were bad offensively, but they had a hell of a lot to do with that."

Kansas ended a three-game losing streak against K-State in the Big Eight Tournament with the win. The Cats have won five of the past seven meetings. It was No. 11 ranked KU's fourth-straight win.

"Our defense in the first half decided the game," Williams said. "They had four offensive rebounds in the first half. The game got pretty ugly in the second half."

K-State did make a short-lived run at Kansas, cutting the Jayhawks' advantage to 38-25 with 16:35 left.

During that span, the Cats outscored the Jayhawks 12-4, almost equaling their entire first-half production.

But the Jayhawks quickly regained control, using a 10-4 scoring spurt to claim a 48-29 edge with 11:58 remaining.

Cunningham, who was one of K-State's bright spots scoring a career-high 23 points, said he felt the Cats still had a shot after one period. Cunningham sank eight of his 12 shots, far better than any Wildcat, and grabbed eight rebounds.

"We still felt positive," he said. "We felt if we could knock down a few shots and make some good passes, we could still do it. Anthony told the team we could, and I know I believed him."

Beane was the only other Wildcat in double figures, scoring 10 points, but he committed six of K-State's 17 turnovers.

"I've always said the toughest teams are the ones that you can't focus on one or two guys," Williams said. "With Kansas State, you can do that with Askia and Anthony."

■ The Cats went zero for 11 from three-point range during the first half.

■ K-State shot just 18.5 percent during the first half.

■ With the win, Kansas ended a three-game losing streak to K-State during the tourney.

BIG EIGHT TOURNAMENT

Nebraska wins 1st tournament championship

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A massive pile-up of bodies concluded Nebraska's unrelenting three-day tear through the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament.

The Huskers collapsed on each other at mid-court, celebrating their 77-68 victory against Oklahoma State for the championship Sunday at Kemper Arena.

"Emotionally, I'm on a high," said NU's Jeron Boone, who scored 15 points in the title game. "I've never won a championship before."

Neither had Nebraska. It was the Cornhuskers' first Big Eight Tournament championship, and they did it as the No. 4 seed.

The Huskers now enter the NCAA tourney as sixth-ranked in the East Division. Their first-round opponent is 11th-ranked Penn State.

To win the tournament, the Cornhuskers had to down two nationally ranked teams — No. 3 Missouri and No. 22 Oklahoma State.

"This is a giant step for Nebraska basketball," Coach Danny Nee said. "We played at an extremely high level. We came here and got a little respect and legitimacy for our program."

It was Nebraska's fifth-straight win and sixth in seven tries.

"We're just going to be bursting with confidence going into the NCAA Tournament," Nee said.

Eric Piatkowski was the MVP selection, scoring 76 points in the tournament, including a Big Eight-record 42 points against Oklahoma in the first round. Piatkowski's teammates Boone and Bruce Chubick also made the team.

Oklahoma State's Brooks Thompson and Bryant Reeves also made the all-tournament list.

Jamar Johnson led Nebraska with 19 points, shooting eight of 10 from the field. Piatkowski scored 10 points and grabbed 10 rebounds.

Randy Rutherford paced the Cowboys with 21 points, dumping in six three pointers to tie a tournament record.

"Everything went Nebraska's way," Thompson said. "They played good defense, and we didn't execute as well as they did."

The teams battled back and forth during the first period, with Nebraska claiming a 36-33 lead at halftime.

Bryant Reeves was limited to just five points in the opening half, shooting two for eight from the floor.

"I got off to a rough start," Reeves said. "We didn't execute well or shoot the ball well."

"This is a tough loss for us. Nebraska is playing well right now. I think they have a good chance to go a long way in the NCAA Tournament."

The Cornhuskers jumped to a 56-51 lead with 7:40 left, but the Cowboys quickly recovered as OSU tied it at 56-56 with 6:48 left on Rutherford's jumper.

Then Nebraska turned up the heat.

NATIONAL INVITATIONAL TOURNAMENT

Cats to finish in NIT

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State coach Dana Altman didn't want the 1994 season to conclude like this.

That's why he talked with the Cats following a 73-52 loss to Kansas about accepting a National Invitational Tournament bid.

"I don't want it to end on a game like tonight," Altman said after being eliminated from the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament on Friday. "There are 96 teams that get to play out of 300 and some teams. We'd like to be a part of that."

The 96 teams refer to the 64 in the NCAA Tournament and the 32 in the NIT.

The Cats will play Mississippi State (18-10) in the first round of the tournament at 7 p.m. Thursday at Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State was a No. 6 seed in last year's NCAA tournament, marking its second straight appearance in the Big Dance.

The conclusion of the 1993-94 campaign was a rocky one for K-State. Including the Big Eight Tournament, the Cats lost eight of their last nine conference games.

"If something gets going our way, I think we can bounce back," said Altman, whose Cats scored a tournament-record low of 13 points in the first half against KU. "I think they can bounce back. We just have to try and get some things worked out."

Anthony Beane and Deryl Cunningham, both seniors, said they aren't ready to terminate their college careers.

"Our goal was to make the NCAA Tournament — we didn't do that," Cunningham said. "Coach asked us after the game about the NIT. We want to give everything we've got. It's a chance to play."

"Well, we're just glad to get a chance to play," Beane said. "At least I know our season isn't over yet."

Kansas coach Roy Williams said K-State is one of the best 100 squads in the country but has lost its mental edge.

"They are definitely one of the top 96 teams in the country," he said. "My concern is their mental attitude right now. The mental part is more important than the physical part."

The Cats shot 18.5 percent from the field in the first half, sinking just five field goals.

Askia Jones finished with a season-low two points and fouled out midway through the second period.

"They've lost confidence obviously," Altman said. "Offensively, the first half they missed some shots, and Ostertag blocked a few, and then we just started stumbling around after that."

"So, we've just lost our confidence in our offense. We're going to have to talk with them and work with them to get them back," Altman said.

"We're a much better basketball team than we've shown in the last couple of games."

JARED SAVAGE
Collegian

The K-State campus played host to the sixth-annual Big Eight Bodybuilding Championships Saturday at McCain Auditorium.

The day's events began with the prejudging during the morning. All competitors appeared together in their various weight classes and then posed individually as five judges checked them for symmetry, muscularity, definition and presentation.

The classes included men's novice, open and masters divisions, women's open and masters, and mixed pairs. During the prejudging, the top five competitors from each class were chosen to compete in the final judging later in the evening.

"This is my first competition, though I mainly got into it out of boredom," Nicole Bauer, an army corrections officer from Ft. Leavenworth, said. "I played basketball at Colorado University so I've been involved in athletics for quite a while. The most difficult part has definitely been the lack of food and water. All I've been eating is fish, water, rice and supplements to get ready."

Most of the competitors agreed that dieting was the most difficult part of preparing for the contest. Competitors must get their body-fat count down as low as possible and remove as much water from their systems as is tolerable.

Many went with barely any water for up to 36 hours before showtime. This allowed their bodies to flush sodium and develop that "ripped" look so often seen in bodybuilding.

Another first-time competitor was Greg Windham from Overland Park.

"I've been working out for about six years but never have entered any contest," Windham said. "Some people I trained with told me that I had a good physique and should give it a try. I managed to drop 36 pounds in seven weeks, so I feel pretty good about my chances."

Windham also said mental preparation was a difficult part of preparation besides the dieting.

"I have all my family, friends and girlfriend out there supporting me so that makes it a little easier. You just try to stay positive and take it day by day."

Final judging began at 7 p.m. Being much more formal than the prejudging, competitors had the opportunity to do their entire routines set to their choice of music. After everyone from a weight class did their individual routines, they all appeared on stage together, and the judges made their final decisions.

"I just wanted to give it a try," Winston Bowen, who took first place in the men's novice lightweight division, said. "As for my training, I never take anything for granted and go through a lot of mental preparation." Bowen took a little different approach to training than some of his fellow posers.

"I never get more than about 10 pounds over my competition weight. I hit my workouts hard and follow a very regimental diet," he said.

Bowen said he planned to keep competing in what he considered natural competitions where steroid usage wasn't as common as at professional levels. "There's always the stigma of steroids surrounding bodybuilding. I pride myself on being drug-free and having a natural build."

About three quarters through the event, the guest poser, Lou Ferrigno, came on stage and did his routine. Ferrigno, the 6-foot-4-inch, 310-pound former Mr. Universe, well-known for his role as "The Incredible Hulk," did three encore routines and then thanked the crowd for its support.

Many competitors used the Big Eight as a springboard for preparing for future events. Becky Frederes, who placed first in the women's heavy-weight open, intends to compete in the Ms. Kansas competition in October.

"This is my first competition, and my training partner said it would be a good place to start. I'll just keep training and getting better," she said.

Her partner, Kirk Wilson, also competed in the men's heavyweight division.

Windham summed up what many competitors thought after the event.

"Right now, I think this is the last one I'm going to do. But I guess everyone says that after they're done for the night."

K-State wins 1 in Texas, but has losing weekend

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

First, the good news.

It was a former Texan powering the K-State baseball team to its first win at the Aggie Continental Classic at College Station, Tex., on Saturday.

Sophomore Matt Miller, a transfer from Texas A&M, delivered a fourth-inning homer that helped the Wildcats pick up a 5-3 victory over Penn State.

David Johnson lasted four and 2/3 innings to record his second win of the season, with Kevin Wicker getting his second save on the year.

Leading the Cats at the plate were Jay Kopriva, Chris Bouchard, and Tim Decker, each going 3-for-2 on the day.

Now the bad news.

The Cats couldn't even make it nine innings in their first game against USC on Friday, due to the 10-run limit tournament rule.

The Trojans were led by junior centerfielder Walter Dawkins, who hit three home runs in the contest, leading USC to a 20-7 blowout.

The game was tied, 4-4, until the fifth inning, when things got ugly for the Cats.

Dawkins nailed two of his three homers in the fifth, with sophomore shortstop Gabe Alvarez adding a three-run shot to put the Trojans up, 12-4.

The sixth inning wasn't much better, as junior first baseman J.P. Roberge hammered a grand slam, leading USC to another eight-run scoring spree to secure the win.

K-State senior Rob Merriman got the loss, as he falls to 2-2 on the season. Offensively, it was catcher Ryan Dixon leading the Cats, going 2-for-3 with 3 RBI.

Heading into Sunday's games with a 1-1 tournament record, the Cats were looking for a couple wins to boost them into second place in the standings.

It didn't happen.

Facing Texas A&M in game six of the Classic, the Cats were shutout by redshirt freshman Rob Thomas, who allowed just one hit in the Aggies' 8-0 victory.

K-State's Kopriva provided the Cats' lone hit of the game, as Thomas struck out eight Wildcat batters.

The losing pitcher was Jon Albrecht, who lasted just two innings. His record now falls to 3-1.

In the series' seventh game, it was Penn State against the Cats once again, but this time the Nittany Lions came out on top, 5-3.

The Nittany Lions took advantage of six K-State errors to move to 5-6 on the year and 1-3 in the Classic.

After scoring one unearned run in the third, Penn State added another four in the fifth, jumping ahead 5-0.

K-State rallied in the bottom of the ninth, scoring two runs off Penn State starter Randy Geis. With two outs and runners on first and second, the Cats fell short when leadoff man Scott Poepard flew to left, ending the game.

Picking up the loss for K-State was Jon Oiseth, whose record now stands at 2-2. Tim Decker led the Cats at the plate, going 2-3 with two RBI.

With the loss, K-State falls to 9-9 on the year and 1-3 in the Classic. The Cats finish up the tournament with two games on Monday.

■ K-State lost Friday to USC 20-7.

■ Saturday, the Cats beat Penn State, 5-3.

■ Sunday, K-State lost to Texas A&M, 8-0, and to Penn State, 5-3.

Big Eight tourney starts Mad March

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Notes from a weekend of Mad Marchness.

Here's an analogy for all you fans on the condition of the Sunflower State series.

For KU, playing K-State is like playing on that little merry-go-round in the park.

Oh, sure it might throw you off once in awhile, but for the most part, it's a lot of fun.

After covering four-straight days of state

2A basketball in Bramlage Coliseum, I went to Kansas City for the Big Eight tourney championship to learn a bit of wisdom:

There's nothing like a Nebraska/Oklahoma

State matchup to bore a Kemper Arena crowd

silly.

It was only the second time in tournament

history that KU,

K-State or Missouri

wasn't involved in the finals, and it showed itself in championship-day apathy.

The first ticket scalpers I ran into heading toward the arena were asking 25 dollars for a $32.50 ticket. By the time I got to Kemper, they were going for $5.

But it wasn't all bad.

For the first time in Big Eight history,

Nebraska coach Danny Nee showed signs of actually coaching — I mean that he coached in a positive way.

And Eric Piatkowski got a championship

— the kid who signed with Nebraska in the days when you could pencil in Nebraska seventh — just ahead of Colorado — every year.

But times have changed.

And while "Pike" cut down the last net, all the Husker fans that bought those five-dollar tickets chanted, "MVP... MVP."

After putting six teams in the NCAA tour-namment the last two years, the Big Eight had to settle for four this time out.

At the NCAA tournament selection show, which is held at the Hyatt Regency, Tom Butters, the selection committee chairman, said the Big Eight just became a victim of national parity.

"I think what you need to understand is the wealth has spread," he said. "When we talk about parity, we're serious about it."

"The basketball strength is rising in other areas of the country, and something has to give."

But unlike the last two seasons, the conference as a whole might actually be able to make some noise.

The most powerful regional has to be the Southeast, with Purdue, Duke, Kentucky and Kansas the top four seeds.

The Jayhawks get Tennessee-Chattanooga in the first round (they play basketball?) and probably Wake Forest, before facing Purdue, coached by K-State alum Gene Keady, in the Sweet Sixteen.

Missouri, despite almost-purposely tanking Saturday in the Big Eight semis, (nice substitution pattern there, Norm — I didn't know you were 11 deep), landed the last No. 1 seed and got shipped out West to Ogden, Utah to face Navy.

Even the Tigers with their history of first-round tourney flops will live to see the round of 32.

Oklahoma State has to travel all of 60 miles for its regional site in Oklahoma City. Pencil them in for the 16.

Nebraska gets the Ivy League champion, Penn, in the first round before getting Lon Kruger's Florida Gators in the second.

But Nee and Nebraska is 0-4 in NCAA tournament games and 2-6 in games against Kruger. Which record will the Huskers impale themselves on first?

By the way, K-State didn't even make the list of 40-something teams that got consideration for the tournament, and had their bubbles burst.

A shocking development after Friday.

Teams go to wire during semi-finals

■ Oklahoma State defeated Kansas, 69-68.

■ Missouri's loss ended their 15-game winning streak and their 19 straight conference wins.

DEREK SIMMONS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nothing out of the ordinary here.

Both semi-finals matches brought action to the last moments. In the end, The Cornhuskers and the Cowboys were able to outlast their opponents.

Nebraska defeated Missouri 95-84 while Oklahoma State defeated Kansas 69-68.

Nebraska's Eric Piatkowski wanted to take no chances this time.

"I told the guys on the team we had to be up 10 points with one minute left because there's no telling what's going to happen," he said.

Piatkowski's theory proved true as the No. 4-seeded Cornhuskers toppled No. 1 Missouri 98-91 in the semifinals of the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament on Saturday.

With 1:09 left to play, the Cornhuskers enjoyed a 95-84 advantage.

Just one week earlier, Nebraska had dropped a 80-78 decision to Missouri in Columbia.

"It's like turning a page of maturity," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said of his seniors. "All I've been saying all along is that it all starts with how your seniors play. Ours stepped up."

The victory marked Nebraska's first against Missouri in the tournament. The Cornhuskers have now won seven of their past eight games.

Missouri saw its 15-game winning streak snapped, and its 19 straight conference wins end.

But the Tigers are feeding off the loss instead of dwelling on it.

"We're going to use this loss as a plus in the tournament," Mark Atkins, who finished with a game-high 25 points, said. "A lot of our wins during the streak were games in which we played bad. We won in the beginning because we were always playing hard. Then, we lost some focus, but we were still winning. Now we need to get back on a high level."

Melvin Booker, the 1994 Big Eight

Conference Player of the Year, agreed with Atkins.

"This loss may be a good thing for us," Booker said. "We may need a loss to get ready for the Big Dance. Playing in the finals tomorrow probably would've worn us down."

The loss dropped Missouri to 25-3 overall. Nebraska improved to 21-9.

Missouri coach Norm Stewart said the difference from this year and last is that the Tigers are everyone's target now.

"We were the hunter last year, and now, we're the hunted," he said.

After splitting two overtime games with Kansas this season, Oklahoma State outlasted the Jayhawks one more time, 69-68, in Saturday's semifinal of the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament.

"If you like competitive basketball, it was a game you would've probably enjoyed," KU coach Roy Williams, whose Jayhawks have now lost five of their past six semifinal appearances, said.

Bryant Reeves, who scored the final six points for OSU, hit two free throws with 1:45 left. That would end the scoring with the Cowboys on top 69-68.

On KU's next possession, Steve Woodberry was forced to take a leaning jump shot as the Jayhawks' shot clock expired.

Brooks Thompson then threw up an air ball from the baseline with 32 seconds remaining, giving Kansas one last shot.

Woodberry got the call again, taking a six-foot jumper, but missed. Greg Ostertag tried the put-back. No good. A jump ball was called with .3 seconds to go. The officials pondered the time remaining and decided to put .9 seconds on the clock.

Sean Pearson was the inbounder, and his teammates started moving around, trying to get open — only Pearson didn't have the ball yet.

"Everyone started to break before Sean got the ball," Williams said of the last play. "Hell, we're supposed to be looking around for that anyway."

The Cornhuskers outscored the Cowboys 15-5 in the next five minutes and took a 71-61 lead with 1:12 to play.

Reserve Melvin Brooks maneuvered inside for two and drew a foul from Fred Burley. Brooks hit the free throw, giving the Huskers a 66-59 lead.

"When you go to your bench, magic things have to happen," Nee said. "I don't think Nebraska could win without our bench."

Oklahoma State muscled one more run, slicing its deficit to five at 72-67 with 34.2 seconds left. Rutherford hit a 27-foot three-pointer.

After Jamar Johnson hit one free throw, Rutherford took another try with 17 seconds left. He missed but was fouled by Piatkowski. He sank just one free throw.

The Cowboys shot 34.8 percent from the field, compared to 43.9 percent for the Huskers.

Oklahoma State also sank just half of its free throws and hit only 13 of 46 three-pointers.

"I think this is the second-lowest field-goal percentage we've shot all season," OSU coach Eddie Sutton said. "I thought we had good looks, but we just didn't shoot the ball well."

"I think losing the game probably hurt us seeding wise. I think we could've moved up to a higher seed after yesterday's game."

Nee said his team slipped throughout the game but never fell.

"We made some mistakes along the way," he said.

"But my guys, whenever we had a timeout, I never sensed 'Oh, shit, we're in trouble.' They just kept playing hard and kept playing."

Campus organizations described in directory

P.R. project to fill need for information

MEREDITH REILLY

A K-State student is working to publish a directory that comprises more than 100 campus organizations.

Carrie Hook, freshman in public relations, got the idea to make a directory of campus organizations when she was required to do a public-relations research project for a class.

"I wanted to promote K-State organizations because many people don't know all the organizations that are available for students," she said.

"A lot of people don't know what's going on around campus, are too shy to talk to someone to find out, or they've just transferred and want to know what is available."

The pamphlet will give details on clubs and organizations that are available at K-State.

Items such as the organization name, adviser, a brief description of the club, a phone number for more information and restrictions of joining will be listed.

"This is a good way for clubs to be self-supporting for their publicity," Hook said.

More than 135 organizations will be listed in the pamphlet. Each organization paid $10 to be included in the pamphlet.

Hook said the money covers the cost of printing the pamphlets and that no profit is being made.

One organization to be included in the pamphlet is the Highlites dance team.

"We decided to be listed in the pamphlet to promote more people to try out for our dance team and promote more ethnicity throughout campus," Jonita Woodson, sophomore in secondary education and Highlites member, said.

The pamphlet will be printed this summer and distributed next fall. It will be free.

"The pamphlets will be available all over campus," Hook said.

"It will be distributed to all the living groups, residence halls, scholarship houses and on campus in the SGA (Student Governing Association) office."

The pamphlet also will be included in the freshman orientation packets.

Hook said the response to the pamphlet has been very supportive.

"People are very positive about this," she said. "The response has been overwhelming."

Melinda Rogge, freshman undecided, is helping Hook with the pamphlet.

"I'm helping gather information, and when we have it, I'll help process the paperwork," Rogge said.

"I think the clubs are looking forward to it."

Addict arrested after killing spree, charged with 10 counts of murder

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — A crack addict was charged Sunday with 10 counts of murder.

Police said the murders occurred during a two-year killing spree.

Henry Louis Wallace, 28, was arrested Feb. 4 on a misdemeanor larceny charge but was released.

He was arrested again Saturday, and police said four of the 10 murders he is charged with were reported between his release and Saturday's arrest.

Wallace had prior arrests in South Carolina and Washington for sex offenses, burglary and larceny, Charlotte police said.

Police said Wallace was a drifter who settled in Charlotte three years ago.

He had no permanent address and worked in various restaurants, Deputy Police Chief L.R. Snider said at a news conference.

"He was staying around with whoever he could stay with," Snider said.

Most of the victims lived in the same section of east Charlotte as Wallace and were killed in their homes or apartments. In two cases, two women were killed in the same building.

Police didn't offer details as to how they identified Wallace as an alleged serial killer. Snider said police have evidence linking Wallace to all the murders and that he was cooperating with authorities.

Snider said the victims' neighbors helped greatly in the investigation, which was carried out by 75 investigators.

Wallace was charged with murder after nine bodies were recovered, interim Police Chief Jack Boger said. Wallace then disclosed the location of the 10th body, which authorities were searching for Sunday, Boger said.

Based on what Wallace told authorities, they believe he strangled at least nine of his victims.

"It was the common thread that ran through the majority of the cases," Snider said. One of the bodies had been burned in a house fire, and police had not yet determined the cause of death.

"He had worked with some of the victims before," Snider said. "He knew these women." The victims were all young black women, police said. Wallace, a native of Barnwell, S.C., also is black.

Police said they have obtained information since Wallace's arrest that he may be responsible for an 11th murder in South Carolina. Investigators said they have contacted law enforcement agencies across the country to determine if any other murders can be linked to the suspect.

Two additional women's bodies were found Wednesday along Interstate 26 in Berkeley County, S.C. They apparently were strangled early Wednesday and their bodies dragged down an embankment along the interstate, authorities said.

"We are thoroughly convinced now that we have the killer behind bars," Snider said. "We feel the females in this community can feel safer when they go to bed."

A crack addict who police are now calling a serial killer, Henry Louis Wallace, 28, was arrested and charged for 10 murders.

Clutter murders used in death penalty debate

Notorious murder case remembered by state legislators

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Almost 35 years after the Clutter family homestead became a slaughterhouse, Kansas legislators debating the death penalty still speak movingly about Herb, Bonnie, Nancy and Kenyon Clutter.

It was the state's most famous murder case, even without the notoriety brought by "In Cold Blood," Truman Capote's novel that was later made into a black-and-white movie.

In making their arguments, both opponents and supporters of capital punishment refer frequently to the Clutter murders.

"It's a point of remembrance," state Rep. Clyde Graeber and chairman of the House committee that considers capital punishment legislation said.

"It's like a Bible," Rep. David Heinemann, an attorney who as a teen-ager lived four miles from the Clutters' home outside Holcomb in southwestern Kansas, said.

"We can look at it through our own lenses and substantiate our own viewpoints," he said.

Heinemann and other opponents of capital punishment note that Herb Clutter, a strict Methodist, was against the death penalty.

This legislative session, Kansas is closer than ever to restoring the death penalty.

Each house of the Legislature has passed its own bill, and a joint conference committee took up the significantly different versions last Thursday.

Reaching a compromise is expected to take a few weeks. Most supporters think a bill will eventually pass.

Gov. Joan Finney personally opposes capital punishment but has promised to let a bill become law without her signature.

Kansas is one of 14 states without a death penalty. Before the U.S. Supreme Court declared all death penalty laws unconstitutional in 1972, Kansas executed prisoners by hanging.

Among those put to death in Kansas before 1972 were Perry Smith and Richard Hickock, the killers of wheat farmer Herb Clutter, his wife, Bonnie, their 16-year-old daughter, Nancy, and 15-year-old son, Kenyon.

The two men entered the Clutter home before dawn Nov. 15, 1959. They bound and gagged all family members, then shot each in the head.

They left with $40 to $50 and Kenyon's transistor radio.

Hickock and Smith were convicted and sentenced to hang the next spring. They spent five years on death row before receiving their punishment.

"In Cold Blood" was published in 1965, shortly after their executions.

The last inmates hanged in Kansas were serial killers James Latham and George York, who murdered seven people in five states.

They were put to death on June 22, 1965.

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

'Mystified' should rely on honesty

Dear Cassandra,
I know this guy who won't leave me alone. It started at the beginning of the semester. He asked me if I wanted to go to a movie with him. I was busy that evening, but I knew he was a nice guy, so I told him to give me a call the next day. He did, and we went out. I thought the evening was going to be just friends going out, but I think he had romantic intentions. The movie was fun, and he didn't make any advances toward me. He walked me to my door and asked me if I wanted to go out again sometime. I didn't want to hurt his feelings, but in the relationship game, it is best to be honest. If you tell him up front that you are not interested in him, you will actually save him some heartache and confusion. Most men will respect this type of approach.

Dear Mystified,
It is noble of you trying not to hurt your friend's feelings, but in the relationship game, it is best to be honest. If you tell him up front that you are not interested in him, you will actually save him some heartache and confusion. Most men will respect this type of approach.

Vampire movie was shot in Manhattan

J.R. PRATHER Collegian

A graduate of Manhattan High School returned from his home in Los Angeles for the premiere of his latest film.
Steve Balderson, a student at the California Institute of the Arts, was on hand for the Manhattan screening of his film "Children of the Damned" Friday night at the Wareham Opera House.
The film, Balderson's sixth, is based on Anne Rice's novel, "The Vampire Lestat."
Balderson said he chose the novel because it was his favorite of all Rice's "Vampire Chronicles." He presented a copy of "Children of the Damned" to Anne Rice as a Valentine's Day present, but he said she had not been able to look at it for legal reasons.

"She sent me a letter that said she could maybe take an idea of ours subconsciously and use it, and we could sue her later," Balderson said.
He said she could see it if he signs a waiver.
"She was very excited. She thought the box we sent in was beautiful," he said.
"Children of the Damned" was shot in eight days on a 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. schedule on location in Manhattan and produced by Clarence Productions.

Balderson was not specific about the film's budget, but he said it was between $10 million and $25 million.
The cast of "Children of the Damned" features four actors from Los Angeles and several local actors.
Balderson said it had not been difficult to lure actors from the West Coast to Manhattan.
"The characters we cast them as were characters that anyone in Hollywood would want," he said. "They are very demanding roles."
Balderson said he even played a small cameo role himself.
"I die. It's very bloody and wonderful."

Video version of Anne Rice novel 'sucks'

J.R. PRATHER Collegian

Pity the unfortunate few who spent two hours of their precious mortal lives at the Wareham Opera House Friday night watching "Children of the Damned."

Steve Balderson, formerly of Manhattan, now of Los Angeles, wrote and directed "Children of the Damned," an adaptation of Anne Rice's novel "The Vampire Lestat."

It was filmed in and around Manhattan and features a cast of local actors and four actors from Los Angeles.

While Balderson is to be commended for taking on such a challenging project, the only good thing to be said about "Children of the Damned" is that the screenplay stayed fairly true to the novel.

What Balderson seems to forget is that films are not novels. They need action and life. They need to appeal to the eye as well as to the emotions. From the beginning, there was no chance of getting any of that from "Children of the Damned."

In the first place, it wasn't even a film. Balderson shot the whole thing on videotape, which is ironic because, like a vampire, video sucks the life out of everything and everyone. It is a soulless medium, which is why they use it for the six o'clock news.

In addition, Balderson obviously didn't have all the equipment he needed for a feature film. If there was any sound editing besides the soundtrack of famous requiem masses, it would be a surprise.

Traffic noise, white noise and the sound of people stomping around detracted so much from the dialogue that if the audience hadn't already read the novel, they wouldn't know what was going on.

The actors were either shot from so far away or so close or at such weird angles that the performances were incidental. Sometimes the camera focused on an actor's eyeball or nose or ear. What was up with that?

It was kind of fun to play "Guess Where This Scene Was Shot," but other than that, the real children of the damned were those that paid $15 to see this movie.

Former U.N. secretary general accused of WW II brutalities

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON—A Justice Department report accuses former U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim of war crimes during World War II.

The report says Waldheim assisted and otherwise participated in persecuting civilians, executing war prisoners and identifying Jews for deportation to concentration camps.

There is nothing in the 1987 report, which was the basis for denying Waldheim a U.S. visa six years ago, showing that he personally killed, tortured or deported anyone as a lieutenant in the German army in World War II.

But the report said that if Waldheim had been in the United States when it was prepared, the Justice Department would have sought to deport him.

Waldheim headed the United Nations from 1972 to 1982.

"Between 1942 and 1945," the report said, "Lt. Kurt Waldheim assisted or otherwise participated in the transfer of civilian prisoners to the SS for exploitation as slave labor, the mass deportation of civilians to concentration and death camps, the deportation of Jews from Greek islands and Banja Luka, Yugoslavia, to concentration and death camps, the utilization of anti-Semitic propaganda; the mistreatment and execution of Allied prisoners, and reprisal executions of hostages and other civilians."

The 204-page report was prepared by the department's Office of Special Investigations, the primary U.S. agency for investigating Nazi war crimes.

It was kept secret for six years but released late Friday under a federal court order in response to a Freedom of Information Act suit.

Waldheim, 75, was president of Austria from the time he gave up the U.N. post until 1992. He has steadfastly denied ever having any command authority or serving in combat after he was wounded in Russia in December 1941.

"This may be true, but he would have had authority which his supervisors might have delegated him," the report said. It detailed Waldheim's career as an interpreter, liaison, intelligence officer and key aide to German commanders from spring 1942 through fall 1944.

For example, the report cites German and other documents detailing how the German army occupying eastern Bosnia in 1942 sought to put down guerrilla insurgencies.

"There can be hardly a doubt that Waldheim, as the liaison officer, would have played a role in this transfer of approximately 500 persons to the SS for slave labor," the report said.

Later, while serving in a quartermaster group in western Bosnia, Waldheim assisted in acts of persecution against civilians during a most brutal campaign in the Kocara mountain regions, the report said.

"For his service in this campaign," the report said, "he was awarded a high military decoration."

The report said Waldheim has gone to great lengths to conceal the fact that he served in the Balkans and then, once discovered, to obfuscate the true nature of his duties.

It noted that he was repeatedly asked by the United States to submit all relevant documents about his military service but said he withheld some in his personal possession, such as notes he made during the war.

Author encourages imagination, growth

JENNIFER KELLER
Collegian

The imaginations of young readers should be encouraged to grow, a children's author told a group of K-State students and faculty Friday in the K-State Union.

Bruce Brooks, author of young-adult books, said he uses his life experiences to write books, which will allow his readers to fill in the gaps with their own imagination.

"Imagination is our ability and inclination to mentally go beyond what is apparent, and I want my readers to have the chance to use their imaginations with each book of mine," Brooks said.

"Imagination is a part of human functioning which allows the mind to continue expanding and growing. Our minds, acting involuntarily, are always looking for a way to move beyond what they already know."

One of his goals when writing a book is to give only the broad picture and let the readers come up with the details, he said.

It is easier for a child to describe something he or she is unfamiliar with compared to something known, Brooks said.

"We have forgotten how intelligent we were and how much insight we had as children, and now as adults we tend to simplify things when we are teaching them to younger people because we don't want to hand them any difficulties," he said.

"We assume it is easier for children to learn easy things, but when in reality it is easier for them to learn more difficult things because they have the opportunity to let their minds run free."

Parents have a responsibility to encourage the development of their children's imagination and creativity, but they also have the responsibility to protect their children, Brooks said.

"My job is to realize that when I give a child a book I am opening the door for learning and imagination, but I don't need to be the one who closes the door," he said.

One audience member said she thought children should be free to learn without barriers.

"I think children should be able to learn and not have to face all the obstacles that get in their way," Jennifer Gates, sophomore in human development family studies and social work, said.

Lifeguarding offers alternative to summer of flipping burgers

SERAL L. TANK
Collegian

If flipping burgers or punching up numbers on a cash register isn't the way you want to spend your summer, being a lifeguard or swimming instructor may be an option.

University for Man is offering classes in swimming instruction and lifeguarding in March and May.

A course called Water Safety Instructor will give students Red Cross certifications to teach Red Cross swimming classes.

Also being offered is Lifeguard

Training, a course that offers certification for lifeguarding at a public pool or enclosed beaches.

"There are most definitely a lot of summer job opportunities at public pools and beaches for lifeguards and swim instructors," Sarah Forsyth, assistant director of recreational activities and instructor of the courses, said.

Tresa Weaver, educational coordinator for UFM, said most students who take the classes can use their knowledge to get summer jobs.

"K-State students typically go back to their hometowns to work," Weaver said.

"So far there are about 15 students enrolled in the class, and two-thirds already have jobs waiting for them when they are done," Forsyth said.

Although many students return to their hometowns, many go to work at summer camps or stay on campus to lifeguard.

Many camps require WSI certification.

Ahearn Natatorium hired 20 lifeguards during the fall semester, and that number usually remains constant, Forsyth said.

For more information about UFM classes, call 532-6763.

Lisa Morrison, freshman in accounting, said she is planning on taking the swimming instruction class.

Although she has given swimming lessons in her hometown of Scott City for several years, Morrison said she believes extra qualifications can only help her.

Candidates speak about annexation, tuition increase

A transportation system would also be a goal of Dalton's administration, she said.

Under Dalton's plan, local companies and organizations would donate money to a shuttle system. Students could use local cab companies to get rides to campus, and the cab companies would be reimbursed from the shuttle fund.

Silvius said their administration would do what it could to work with the city of Manhattan, including making the possible annexation of the campus as smooth as possible.

"I think it could be a win-win situation for everyone and not a situation where the town wins, the University wins and the students lose," Silvius said.

He said Senate needs to work toward the stabilization of tuition and fees.

Dalton, a business student senator, and Silvius criticized Student Senate for not taking a stand on the Partnership for Excellence issue.

The partnership was a proposal by the Kansas Board of Regents that would increase tuition at the state schools in order to raise faculty salaries.

The proposal is scheduled to be debated as a part of the regents budget this week, but Gov. Joan Finney has threatened to veto the proposal since a bill to bring Washburn University into the state system was killed in the Kansas Senate last week.

Student Senate killed an election on the partnership in February and took another bill calling for a referendum on the issue off the Senate agenda Thursday night.

"I think the timing was poor," Dalton said. "I don't think it was something the Senate should have been doing right before the debate."

K-State was the only one of the six state universities that did not take a stance on the partnership issue.

A referendum was something Senate should have considered last semester, when the regents first created the partnership, Dalton said.

"It is frustrating. My freshman year I paid $700 a semester in tuition," Silvius said. "If the Partnership for Excellence passed, I'd be paying $1,000 a semester. In three years, that is one hell of a jump."

Silvius said he was glad to see Senate vote down a 50-cent increase in the student activity fee.

"It's a nickel-and-dime thing," he said.

Student Governing Association elections are April 12-13.

Dole chides Democrats for stonewalling

he heard from reporters, although he attended one of the Treasury Department briefings and was told about another.

D'Amato also challenged Hillary Clinton, who said through a representative that she learned of the inquiry from the media. Noting that Hillary Clinton's chief of staff, Margaret Williams, attended one of the briefings, D'Amato asked, "What was Maggie Williams doing there?"

Williams was one of three White House aides who testified to a federal grand jury last week about their contacts with Treasury. Seven other administration officials, including three from the White House, are also under subpoena.

Appearing on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole chided Democrats for avoiding hearings.

"We can delay and we can stonewall, but sooner or later there will be hearings," he said.

Democrats argue that hearings would hinder Fiske. Republicans have said they will delay hearings until Fiske finishes his investigation of the Treasury meetings.

Cutler said Clinton would be unlikely to testify in person to Congress, opting instead for written testimony or interviews. But he did not rule out the unusual drama of a president answering to lawmakers.

"It really depends on the gravity of the matter," he told CBS.

McDougal, who has suffered emotional and physical problems, chastised the Clintons for not returning copies of Whitewater documents that he needs to file taxes.

He said the lapse made it appear that the Clintons were hiding something. "It's very stupid," McDougal said. Fiske has the original documents.

Asked about allegations that Madison deposits went to Clinton's gubernatorial campaign, McDougal said, "That's a Republican lie."

New public opinion polls suggested Saturday that Whitewater has affected how Americans view the first lady.

A new CBS-New York Times poll said 27 percent had an unfavorable view of Hillary Clinton, compared to 23 percent a month ago. A Newsweek poll also found that Hillary Clinton's unfavorable rating climbed to 42 percent from 29 percent in February. Meanwhile, a Time-CNN poll said half the people still consider her more ethical than most politicians.

L.I.F.E. members improve fitness levels

RENEE MARTIN
Collegian

Moving her arms in rhythmic motions, Irm Gard, Manhattan resident, worked out Wednesday morning on the rowing machine in the Natatorium's aerobics room.

After completing her workout, she had to brace herself before rising. However, without regular exercise, she said her movements would be even more restricted.

"I probably couldn't walk without exercising," Gard said. "I have osteoporosis and degenerative arthritis. I try to strengthen my muscles and prevent arthritis in my bone structure."

Gard is among the more than 600 members of Lifestyle Improvement through Fitness Enhancement, a program offered by the Department of Kinesiology's Center for Exercise Research that helps faculty, staff, students and community members improve their fitness levels.

"At any given time, we have more than 600 participants," said James Griffing, L.I.F.E. program coordinator and graduate student in kinesiology.

"The percentages break down to approximately 50 percent faculty/staff, 20 percent students and 30 percent community members."

The membership fee includes the use of two weight rooms, an aerobics room, basketball courts, an indoor track and the option to take classes ranging from aqua aerobics to flex and tone.

L.I.F.E. members are encouraged to take advantage of the free fitness testing and fitness program through the Practicum in Exercise Science class, Griffing said.

Students in the class meet with members on an individual basis to test their fitness levels, discuss the test results and plan an appropriate fitness program.

"Our basic tests are for the components of fitness," Griffing said.

"We test cardiovascular fitness by using the bicycle test, body composition by the skinfold test and muscular endurance by sit-ups and push-ups."

"We also do a simple flexibility test with the sit-and-reach," Griffing said.

The fitness tests benefit members, Griffing said, because they allow them to set goals based on their assessments.

Students administering the tests also said they gained from the experience.

"I've learned to put all my knowledge to work and apply what I've learned in my major," Kathy Moore, junior in food and nutrition-exercise science, said.

"I already see it has helped me because it gives me hands-on experience."

The practicum students are required to work at the Natatorium 10 hours a week.

Candidate focuses on higher education

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The former majority leader of the Kansas Senate said Kansans have vast opportunities in higher education, but the system is uncoordinated.

Fred Kerr, republican gubernatorial candidate, spoke to the College Republicans at their meeting Monday night in the K-State Union.

Kerr, a resident of Pratt, said the state has four boards to oversee higher education in Kansas. He said the average faculty salary is low because the higher education system is not running efficiently.

"More coordination leads to better education," Kerr said. "I don't think Washburn should be brought in as an isolated case without thinking about higher education."

Kerr said community colleges and universities should come under one board, but flexibility for community colleges must be maintained.

If a new business is established and is in need of trained personnel, community colleges are quicker and more flexible to respond than four-year institutions because they are out in the community, he said.

"Flexibility in training in specific needs must be maintained," Kerr said. "But the Board of Regents is too slow for community college's quick response."

Kerr said he is also in support of qualified admissions for regents institutions. He said qualified admissions can work to the advantage of students in two ways.

"It provides an incentive to teachers and students to meet the standards set by the board of regents," he said. "It places the freshman students in an environment in which they can succeed."

Kerr said it is important to recognize there is a problem with crime and that it is a problem, not a tragedy.

He said he believes national and state governments do not carry the solution to the problems facing communities.

"People in the neighborhood should address the problem locally," Kerr said. "Problems need to be solved on a community level."

Under the quality of life for all Kansans point of his platform, Kerr said he supports the re-imposition of the death penalty, restrictions of ownership of hand guns and more accurate sentencing for criminals.

"Part of the problem of crime is the abundance and over-accessibility of handguns," he said. "I don't want to get into the building of more prisons."

No flooding expected in Midwest

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Midwest states ravaged by last year's floods should be spared a repeat, but heavy winter snows could combine with spring rains to cause rising rivers in the upper Midwest and Northeast, the National Weather Service said

Monday.

While the nine states hit hardest by last summer's record flooding still are soggy than normal, flooding isn't expected unless spring rains are heavier than usual, weather service hydrologist Frank Richards said.

U.S. MILITARY PLANE CRASHES

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — An American AC-130 aerial gunship crashed into the Indian Ocean off the Kenyan coast Monday, killing one crewman and leaving 10 missing.

Three other crew members were plucked from the water by rescuers, said Army Col. Steve Rausch. Kenyan divers and fishing boats, as well as several U.S. aircraft, were continuing the search.

The plane had taken off from Mombasa, Kenya, and was on its way to Somalia "to conduct a routine mission" in support of U.S. forces there, said a Pentagon spokesman, Cmdr. Joe Gradisher, in Washington. There were no early indications that the plane went down due to hostile fire.

Rausch said the crash would be investigated, but it appeared to be the result of a malfunction.

The AC-130 is a heavily armed version of the four-engine C-130 cargo plane, one of the workhorses of the U.S. military. Four AC-130s have been operating since June from Kenya's port city of Mombasa. Kenya borders Somalia to the south and has long served as a base for both U.S. military and humanitarian efforts aimed at Somalia.

Rausch said the AC-130 crashed into the sea off the resort town of Malindi, about 75 miles north of Mombasa and about 200 yards off the Kenyan coast.

PARTNERSHIP FOR EXCELLENCE

Students lobby at Statehouse

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Few student senators have been out pressing the flesh at the state capital to lobby for any particular cause this semester.

The Partnership for Excellence was to be a lobby subject. Because neither the students nor the Student Senate could come to a decision on the issue, no action has been taken, Ed Skoog, student body president, said.

The PFE would increase tuition in order to increase faculty salaries. It is scheduled to be debated in the state Senate this week.

It is important for the lobbyists to feel passionately about the cause for which they are lobbying, Skoog said.

"If you're not lobbying for something that you believe in, you shouldn't be lobbying," he said.

Generally, a lobby team of student senators is appointed by the student body president and the Legislative Affairs Committee to formally present various student concerns to the state legislature.

Students that have an interest and knowledge about the material are able to go with the team, Skoog said.

Items are usually set or proposed by the Legislative Affairs Committee, Jeff Peterson, senior in animal sciences and industry and former student senator, said.

"We were going to have a lobby day a week ago, but between the stalemate on the Partnership for Excellence, the attorney general and other universities pulling out, we thought it best not to do it now," Skoog said.

Kansas Attorney General Bob Stephan has questioned the constitutionality of using students' funds. He recommends that they not be used to persuade legislators for or against an item if it doesn't represent the entire student body's opinion, Skoog said.

The attorney general isn't the primary reason for not lobbying, David Frese, vice president, said.

RESIDENTS REBEL AFTER MAN THREATENS WELFARE

FRESNO, Calif. — Irrate residents shot, stabbed and beat a man who allegedly tried to steal two cars by pointing a gun at children.

Raul Perez, 19, was attacked after he crashed one of the cars into a wall because a locking bar prevented him from turning the steering wheel, police said.

Perez was in critical but stable condition Monday. He had not yet been charged.

According to police, Perez pointed a gun at a 3-year-old boy Sunday and demanded that the youngster's uncle turn over his car keys. The uncle complied, then ran inside the house with his nephew.

But Perez was unable to start the car. He ran to a nearby street, pointed his gun at an 8-year-old girl, and demanded that her father give him the key to the locking bar on his car's steering wheel, police said.

The father said he didn't have the locking bar key. Perez jumped into the vehicle anyway. A woman and infant who were in the car jumped out, police said.

Using a key that was in the ignition, Perez drove off, but did not remove the locking bar. He crashed into a cement wall just a few yards away, police said.

That's when the neighbors pounced, according to police.

The car's owner had obtained a gun and shot Perez in the left leg. Other residents stabbed Perez in the chest and beat him.

Police said they did not plan to file charges against the neighbors or the car's owner.

ATTORNEY UNDER INVESTIGATION

WASHINGTON — Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell, whose billing practices during his private law work in Arkansas are under investigation, resigned from the Justice Department Monday.

"After a thoughtful weekend, I believe that my continued service will not be as effective as it has been; that the distractions on me at this time will interfere with my service to the country and the president's agenda; and that my family, although totally supportive, is being harmed," Hubbell said in a statement.

He denounced that "private issues" involving his former law firm were "elevated to public speculation," and said he was confident that when discussions over compensation and reimbursement matters are done, they "will be resolved satisfactorily."

Attorney General Janet Reno said Hubbell was leaving to resolve "old private disputes" that she knew nothing about.

"Webb Hubbell gave fully of himself to make America a better place and I am going to miss him," the attorney general said. "I don't believe he did a thing wrong."

EXPERTS QUESTION IRA'S ATTACKS ON AIRPORT

LONDON — The three recent mortar attacks on Heathrow Airport looked like an unprecedented failure for the IRA — 12 mortars fired and not a single explosion.

Political and military experts wonder whether a paramilitary organization that first used mortars in 1972 and has spent two decades perfecting them could suddenly misfire so spectacularly.

About half the mortar shells fired by the IRA in Northern Ireland actually detonate, said Paul Beaver, senior publisher of Jane's Information Group.

Cmdr. David Tucker, head of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist squad, said there appeared to be "a consistent mechanical defect" in the 12 mortar shells, each of which contained up to a pound of Semtex plastic explosive.

"As far as we are concerned, all of the devices were potentially viable," said Metropolitan Police Commissioner Paul Condon. "They contained explosives; they could have detonated."

John Hume, a leading Catholic lawmaker in Northern Ireland, is convinced the IRA fixed the mortars so they wouldn't go off.

But Col. Andrew Duncan of the International Institute for Strategic Studies believes that if the IRA designed the mortars not to go off, they would have said so.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefits now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

Penalty bill expansion opposed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate will not accept any expansion of the capital punishment bill it passed, possibly forcing the House to abandon its quest for a much tougher law if it wants anything approved this session.

"It does not appear there is sufficient flexibility on the part of enough senators to approve any changes in the death penalty bill that passed the Kansas Senate," Sen.

Jerry Moran, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said Monday.

"I think that leaves the issue with the House needing to concur with the Senate version of the House bill, if we are to present a bill to the governor this session," he said.

Moran, R-Hays, a member of the conference committee trying to reach a compromise between the Senate and House versions of the death penalty bill, made his assessment after talking to senators since the committee's first meeting last Thursday.

The Senate will not bend, and will stick with its version, Moran said.

That version calls for making death by lethal injection an alternative to life in prison for seven specific types of murders — relating to kidnapping, sex crimes, multiple murders and killings of law enforcement officers and prison guards and inmates.

The House version would make capital punishment apply to all premeditated murders, felony murders and four selected types of murders.

House members of the conference committee had suggested expanding the bill to include the killing of a witness in a criminal case, but Moran said even that proposal was not acceptable to some of the 22 senators who voted for the Senate's very narrowly-drawn bill.

"Even though I personally think the one suggested amendment is reasonable," Moran said in an interview.

Firm's billing records to be reviewed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Rose Law Firm in Arkansas appears to have been paid twice by the government for the same $30,000 work in a savings and loan case now embroiled in the Whitewater controversy, according to a federal official who has reviewed the billing records.

Webster Hubbell, now the No. 3 Justice Department official, was the supervising attorney for Rose in the case, which involved the failure of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan in Little Rock, Ark.

Hubbell resigned Monday, saying distractions from the probe at his former law firm "will interfere with my service to the country."

Hubbell recently acknowledged that the Rose firm, where Hillary Rodham Clinton also was a partner, had questioned him about billings for past clients, including S&L cleanup work. He did not identify the cases under review.

According to a federal official who reviewed billings in the Madison cleanup case and spoke to The Associated Press only on condition of anonymity:

— The Rose firm submitted a bill for $2,400 in work. Later, the firm resubmitted the same $2,400 figure covering the same period of time as part of a $27,000 bill to the government for work in the case.

— The $27,000 figure was in turn submitted again as part of an $80,000 bill to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which hired Rose to sue an accounting firm blamed in Madison's failure.

The official said the records indicated the FDIC paid all three bills, suggesting Rose was overpaid by about $30,000 for its work in settling the lawsuit against the Frost accounting firm.

"The records show those (smaller) bills being paid" before the amounts were resubmitted, the official said. "The only other possibility is that this is a billing error."

Rose was paid $400,000 by the government in the Madison-Frost case and in all has earned more than $1 million in some 22

S&L cleanup contracts it has won from the government.

Ron Clark, the firm's managing partner, did not return four telephone calls since last week seeking comment.

Hubbell lamented that private issues involving his billings at the Rose Law Firm were elevated to public speculation. He said he was confident the dispute would be resolved satisfactorily.

Justice Department representative Carl Stern said of the matter, "I don't know anything about it."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Partnership a dangerous proposal

If the proposed tuition increase passes, students in Kansas who are eager to learn will be priced out of a college education.

The Kansas Board of Regents' budget and students' tuition are in the dangerous political waters of the Kansas Legislature once again.

This year, the regents have proposed a plan called the Partnership for Excellence that would increase tuition by 29 percent during the next three years at K-State.

Some funds from the tuition increase, coupled with a 3-percent increase in general state funds, would be used to increase faculty salaries to the level of K-State's peers.

Few students could argue against the need to increase faculty salaries. Quality teachers are a must for quality education.

However, using students' tuition to fund faculty salaries is another move in the state's dangerous underfunding of higher education.

Students at the six state universities have already dug deep into their pockets during the last 10 years to pay for tuition increases, but the state has not been as generous.

Tuition at state schools has already increased 139 percent in the last 10 years, but state funding has only increased 48 percent.

That is 26 percent less than the average increases for other state programs.

Despite these inequities, the regents under the partnership are asking students to commit to three years of tuition increases without a guarantee that the state will also kick in its share of the plan for the remaining two years.

The students could pay their share this fall only to have future increases gobbled up by the political sharks on the floors of the House and Senate next year.

The regents tried to cushion the blow of the tuition increase by including a $2.5-million increase in financial aid in the partnership plan.

Unfortunately, the bureaucracy and red tape of the regents financial-aid system will make it difficult for students on the edge to get help.

If this tuition increase passes, there will be students in Kansas who are eager to learn who will be priced out of a college education.

Twenty-nine percent is just too much to ask from students whose pockets are already empty.

SGA positions calling your names

Just do it.

This line from the Nike™ shoe commercials could also apply to the upcoming K-State Student Governing Association elections in April.

I would encourage people who are even thinking about running to make the decision to go for it and throw their hats into the ring and run for office.

Several students have said it's not worth their time because SGA does not do anything meaningful. Wrong — whether you like it or not, SGA has the power to raise fees, appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars and plan activities for the campus. That's just a tip of the iceberg.

SGA members also express opinions on a variety of topics. For example, higher education in Kansas is getting the shaft, and K-State students are getting a big part of it. If you are angry or even concerned about issues such as plus/minus grading or the Partnership for Excellence program, then run.

Several offices are available for election this year, from policy-making positions to management positions and a variety of other duties. They all have different time requirements ranging from some that meet once a week or more to those that meet about once a month. Descriptions of offices up for election include:

■ Student body president — works with the Kansas Board of Regents, the Kansas Legislature and the University president. The president is responsible for representing the views, positions and concerns of the K-State student body. The student body president, as the chief executive of K-State student government, has the power to veto bills and create committees if deemed necessary.

■ Student body vice president — represents the students at meetings and leads the executive branch when the student body president is unable to serve. The vice president also will lead the Educational Opportunity Fund committee and make appointments for University-wide committees.

■ Union Governing Board — makes the policies and designs the procedures used for the K-State Union. There are one- and two-year positions available.

■ Fine Arts Council — meets with the fine-arts departments and helps them plan programs and allocate money for these programs.

■ Board of Student Publications — sets general policy for the Collegian and Royal Purple. In addition, the board selects the editors and advertising manager for the Collegian and Royal Purple. Members also manage the budget for both publications.

■ Student Senator — has probably the most diverse job description. All legislative powers of the K-State student government are vested in this body. All senators must serve on committees and make group visitations. Except for senators from the Graduate School and the College of Veterinary Medicine, all senators must keep one-hour-a-week office hours.

So, what do you have to lose by running? Candidates, except those for student body president and vice president, are limited to spending $78.60 for each race; therefore, no one should out-spend anyone. And, everyone has to live by the same election rules to ensure an even playing field.

So, as I said, what do you have to lose by trying?

The filing deadline is 5 p.m. March 28. Applications and more information are available in the Office of Student Activities and Services on the first floor of the Union.

If running for office is still not for you, be sure to vote April 12 or 13 for the students who will represent you and your interests during the upcoming year.

Heterosexuals flaunt sexuality as much, if not more, than gays

Dear Editor,

Aaron "Hank" Wilcox's letter in the March 14 Collegian is a direct reflection of the hate ideology, intolerance and ignorance that fuels heterosexist discrimination.

It was intolerant by refusing to see gays and lesbians as human beings first and foremost who are intelligent, creative and beautiful.

It was ignorant in its failure to recognize that people already "join clubs and have conventions that support (your, Hank's) sexual preference."

All of my K-State fees go to this blatantly patriarchal, heterosexual institution in which you find it perfectly OK to flaunt your heterosexuality.

There is no need for a "hetero-nympho club" because heterosexuality is played out in a bigger realm — the society at large, in which support and encouragement of heterosexuality flourishes.

Sexuality is inherent in each of us and cannot be separated from our beings. We all take it to work and school with us.

If anything, heterosexuals more evidently mix sexuality and academic education as you have, Aaron, by clearly establishing your heterosexual identity for all to see in the school newspaper.

Gays and lesbians will always be here and will always be queer. Thank God!

Speakers reiterated facts about safety human consumption of BST

Dear Editor,

The Dairy Science Club sponsored a presentation on the use of BST with Drs. John Shirley, Janice Swanson and Jeff Stevenson, where more than 50 students and members of the community attended.

Since this was not covered by the Collegian, and interest was shown by the student body and community, I felt people should have a chance to realize the true facts about the use of BST in dairy cattle.

The most important fact to remember is that BST is a naturally occurring hormone in dairy cattle and is not unsafe for people to consume.

As for the economic impact, the total U.S. production is projected to increase by two-thirds of 1 percent during the first year and by 2 percent at the end of five years.

Because of the use of BST, this increase will not offset the loss of production due to the floods in the Midwest and the market gains by NAFTA.

BST will allow a small dairy to be more competitive because the use of BST will increase production more cheaply than by increasing the number of cattle and amount of land.

Thank you to the Dairy Science Club for sponsoring the forum and to the speakers.

► REVIEW OF A REVIEW

'The Crucible' unfairly judged by inexperienced reviewer

Dear Editor,

It is extremely unfortunate — to say nothing of the misleading result — that your sole review of KSU Opera Theater's production of "The Crucible" should be written by a freshman non-musician whose only credentials were that once he saw a high-school production in southern Kansas of Arthur Miller's play.

"The Crucible" is not a usual work for college students to sing. We were lucky to have just the right combination of talent that could pull this off, and did they ever!

It was like watching a great tennis match; throughout the performance, they all merged into a unit of action, setting fire to each other, contributing to the dramatic thread.

"Melodramatic" was the word your young cub reporter used to condemn the unsuitable application of music to Miller's play.

I should hope so; it is scarcely less than that to be choosing between lying to live or dying for principle. Nor was it amusing to see how the frustrated high-jinks of young libidos can get so thoroughly out of hand.

But of such stuff is good theater made, and in this work, Miller and Ward are equal partners. Bravo to all for daring to do it and for doing it so incredibly well.

And next time, may we please have someone assigned to review the opera who, if not an expert musician, is at least willing to do more research?

► POLITICAL CORRECTNESS

Use of Native American symbols not always case of exploitation

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the recent column by Dan Lewerenz concerning the use of American Indian names and symbols as "mascots" by university athletic departments.

Our country is replete with Indian names. Rivers, cities and states (including Kansas) all bear Indian names — why not athletic teams?

As a proud graduate of the University of Illinois, I can assure you that institution's use of both a name and a symbol derived from American Indian culture is neither disrespectful nor mocking.

The university goes to great pains to ensure that the symbols are treated appropriately.

It commemorates the heritage of all the people of the state of Illinois.

It's a shame we can't ask the Illiniwek (the confederation of Indians after which the state and U of I sports teams are named) what they think, but they died in the early 1800s as a result of a prolonged famine and a war with rival Indian groups.

Perhaps they would appreciate being commemorated?

And maybe they wouldn't appreciate university newspaper columnists speaking for them. We just don't know, do we?

While I agree with columnist's points about obviously disrespectful names and symbols, I also believe that a legitimate line can be drawn between these insensitive uses of Indian symbols and those that depict Indians in a positive way.

I also think it's a shame we can't honor and enjoy each other's cultures without the territoriality and defensiveness that so often seems to accompany them. And I can assure you I have more brain cells than most coleslaw.

Injured cat ignored by passers-by example of apathy, cruelty

Dear Editor,

At about 1:15 on Monday afternoon, I was driving on Manhattan Avenue and came upon a cat that had been hit by a car and was lying in the middle of the road.

It was obviously still alive, and I would like to know how long it had been lying there. I also would like to know how many people drove past this cat without even considering stopping to help it or at least move it to the side of the road.

I am appalled at this display of disrespect, neglect and cruelty to such a helpless creature.

Whoever hit the cat probably didn't do it on purpose, but he or she should have pulled over immediately to assist the cat.

Everyone who drove by without doing anything is just as guilty of neglect. The apathy this scenario revealed to me is disgusting.

I would hope everyone's excuse for not helping animals, people, etc. that are obviously in need of help is something they can live with, because, to me, there is no excuse for blatant neglect.

Cats lose to Trojans, Aggies in Texas

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

For the second time in Texas tournament play, the University of Southern California used a home run to beat the K-State baseball team.

The Trojans ripped five home runs in Friday's 20-7 victory against the Wildcats, with three coming from the bat of center fielder Walter Dawkins.

Looking to redeem themselves after Friday's loss, the Wildcats had a 1-3 tournament record heading into Monday's first contest.

Despite a strong outing from Cats' starter Kevin Wicker, K-State couldn't produce any runs on four total hits, losing 3-0.

Wicker pitched the entire game, going seven innings and allowing just three runs on five hits.

The key blow to the Cats came in the second inning, when Lionel Hastings connected for a two-run homer.

For K-State, it was freshman Scott Poepard powering the Cats at the plate, going 2-for-4 in the game.

K-State fell to 1-4 in Classic play, 9-10 overall, while USC finished 6-0 in the tournament and improved its record to 18-5 on the year.

It was another close game late Monday afternoon, as the Cats tried to salvage one more win out of tournament play, this time against the Texas A&M Aggies.

Both teams were scoreless at the end of seven, so the game was forced into an extra inning. The Aggies, batting in the bottom of the eighth, finally crossed the plate to pick up the 1-0 win.

Once again, the Cats struggled offensively, getting only two hits the entire game. Both Jay Kopriva and Chris Hess had 1-for-2 outings against the Aggies.

K-State's Shane Hicks, making his first starting appearance for the Cats, pitched a complete game,

A&M finished the series with a 3-2 record and now sits at 17-8 overall.

The Cats managed just one win in Texas, a 5-3 victory against Penn State on Saturday, making their tournament record 1-5. K-State's overall record stands at 9-11 after this weekend's games.

The Cats play again Thursday with a 1 p.m. game against Oklahoma State. The game is the start of the Big Eight season.

QUEST COLUMN

Texas ego could sweep the Kansas plains clean when league realigns

There are three things Big Eight Conference sports fans should be aware of now that four Texas schools — Baylor, Texas A&M, Texas and Texas Tech — are in our conference.

The first has to do with the biggest thing Texas has produced: the Texas ego. The Arkansas people cited Texas domination as one reason the Razorbacks went to the Southeast Conference.

Since the Texas schools comprise one-fourth of the total in the expanded conference, Texans will think of it as a Texas conference with some schools from outlying states in it.

An Oklahoma governor once said that no state could outlie Texas. Be prepared for a lot of hot air coming from the South.

The second has to do with football. In the existing Big Eight, football is a fact of life, as is basketball.

In Texas, football is a way of life, and basketball is a minor sport. It took an act of the legislature to convince Texas high schools that a football player should make passing marks in order to represent the school on the gridiron.

The third area of interest is that each of the four schools has its own characteristics.

Big Eight schools are more homogeneous than the Bears, the Aggies, the Longhorns and the Red Raiders.

Let's consider the four.

Texas A&M. When the Aggies come to Manhattan, go to the game early. Seven buses will arrive long before the game begins.

They will not be buses for fans.

That's the band, about 300 people in military uniforms, and they will play martial music throughout the game and march with great precision during halftime.

Aggies (there are no Aggie alumni; once an Aggie, always an Aggie) stand throughout the game (they invented the Twelfth Man tradition), and they have very organized cheers with venerable traditions.

One is: "Farmers Fight! Farmers Fight! Fight! Farmers Fight!" At the end of the game, win or lose, they will give one last cheer: "Beat the Hell out of (next opponent)!"

Aggies hate Texas. The "Aggie Fight Song" begins with "Goodbye to Texas University ..." and the chorus begins with "Saw Texas' horns off ..."

Texas. Upon arriving at the game in Austin, you will enter the biggest stadium in Texas, seating 80,000 people. Before the game, a Lone Star flag just a little smaller than the football field will be spread out over the field, and, in addition to "The Star Spangled Banner" and "The Eyes of Texas Are Upon You," the Longhorn band will play the state song of Texas, "Texas Our Texas."

If you leave Austin after a game at night, look at the 20-story skyscraper in the center of the campus. It houses the library and ordinarily is bathed in white light at night. But if the Horns have won, the tower is bathed in orange light. In the 1970s when the Horns were frequently ranked No. 1, lights in the tower formed the numeral "1."

Texas Tech. It is really the University of West Texas, claiming all the territory west of Fort Worth. That's a lot of territory with no really big cities.

K-Staters should empathize pretty well with the Red Raider fans since they share a lot of common values, and indeed, Lubbock, Texas, is about the same distance from Liberal as is Manhattan. Tech came into the Southwest Conference after World War II and has never won a football championship.

When you visit Lubbock, you will see what most people expect to see when they visit Kansas: flat land. Lubbock is flat as a billiard table. The streets running one direction are numbered. The streets running perpendicular to them are "Avenue A," "Avenue B," etc.

Lubbock is a generic town.

Baylor. This is a Baptist school in the Bible Belt. When Texas tried to appropriate the slogan "The University," Baylor responded with "Thee University." It's the smallest of the four (12,500 enrollment) and the oldest (chartered by the Republic of Texas in 1845). When the Bears come to Manhattan, expect a good-looking team in white uniforms trimmed in green and gold helmets, plus a good-looking band, and when you go to Waco, visit the campus.

It looks like the place you would like to send your children, which is exactly why it looks that way. "When the Saints Go Marching In" is to Baylor fans what "The Wabash Cannonball" is to K-Staters. The Bears went to the Cotton Bowl in 1975 and 1981, both times quarterbacked by Kansans — Neil Jeffrey and his younger brother, Jay, both from Overland Park.

Two Baylor stories indicate the fanaticism of Southwest Conference people regarding football.

In 1974, when, for the first time in 50 years the Bears won the SWC, Coach Grant Taeff said he handled all the football fever very well until an elderly man with tears in his eyes came to him and shook his hand too emotionally overcome to speak. Taeff said that incident shook him.

The other story allegedly took place the same year at the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth. One seminarian asked another: "Does God care about football?" The other responded, "No, but his son, Grant Taeff, does."

Apparently, our conference will get a new name — Big Twelve. That sounds pretty prosaic. (Maybe Big Dozen?) Would the powers that be like a more descriptive name? How about Prairie Conference? I'd vote for Big Prairie Conference (what's a conference name without "Big" in it?).

However, "prairie" sounds redneck, and that hits a little too close to home. That's the word the Collegian used to describe the Texas schools, and — of course — that's the word the Texas schools are using to describe all the schools of what used to be the Big Eight.

CLUB TEAM DIGEST

►RUGBY TEAMS HAVE VICTORIOUS WEEKEND

The K-State men's rugby team crushed Springfield, Mo., this weekend, 53-0.

The Cats were playing to end a two-game losing streak against Springfield.

"I don't think they are a bad team — we just played damn good ball and capitalized on opportunities," Shawn Wauflie, third-year player, said.

Jan Ledford and Mike Skahan both scored two tries to lead the Cats' scoring attack. Also scoring for the Cats were Eric Saathoff, Matt Robke, Dwayne Amos and Danny Blea.

"We played 80 minutes of total rugby," Blea, K-State men's rugby coach, said.

"We kept possession of the ball and set the tempo of the game."

One player had an excellent game at fly half and was a key factor in the game.

"Dow Richards read the field well today and knew when to kick the ball to relieve pressure," Blea said.

The rugburs lost to Springfield last semester in the finals of the Kaw Valley Cup Tournament.

Prior to the men's game, the K-State women's rugby team beat Kansas, 15-13.

"I thought they played great considering 70 percent of them had not played before," Ladonna Grenz, K-State women's rugby coach, said.

The win gives the women a third-place seed at the Western Territory Tournament this April.

"I think in a couple of years, this team will be able to compete nationally," Grenz said.

►TEAM SPLITS GAMES IN PRACTICE TOURNEY

The K-State women's soccer team played host to a Big Eight Conference practice tournament last Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

The women lost to the University of Nebraska, 2-0, but came back and beat the Kansas, 2-1.

"We did not have our heads in the Nebraska game," Lori Canova, K-State goalie, said.

"We got it together against KU." The tournament was organized to give the teams some friendly competition before the Big Eight tournament in April.

"Nebraska just out-played us. We also had a bad passing game, which we evaluated and improved against KU," Heather Hamilton, K-State women's soccer coach, said.

Erin Thomson and Amy Massaglia both contributed a goal in the win over KU.

The Wildcats finished third in the Big Eight Tournament last year and are 6-3 so far this season.

Green earns all-American

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Three athletes traveled to the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships at the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis Saturday.

One returned an all-American. Nicole Green, competing in her first indoor national-championship meet, earned all-American status by finishing ninth in the 400 meters.

Despite missing the finals of the event by three-hundredths of a second, Green was among the top eight Americans competing.

"It would have been really disappointing if she hadn't run aggressively and not made the finals," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Green finished fourth in her preliminary heat with a time of 54.22. Her time of 53.79 at the Big Eight Indoor Championships qualified her for the national meet.

The time also shattered the school record.

Rovelto said Green may have started the race too quickly and just didn't have enough energy to finish the race strong.

"She ran the way I asked her to," Rovelto said.

"She was still an all-American for the first time, and that's a great accomplishment."

Green entered the event ranked third.

"She made a huge amount of progress during the indoor season," Rovelto said. "I can't be disappointed."

The results, Ed Broxterman said, were disappointing. Broxterman, a sophomore, also competing in his first indoor championships, finished 14th with a leap of 7 feet, 1/2 inch.

"I just didn't do some things the way I was supposed to," Broxterman said. "But I'm glad I made it — it was a lot of fun competing there."

Broxterman said he was not nervous during the competition, but he learned a lot from the experience.

"It was a great learning experience for Ed," Rovelto said.

"He could have and should have gone higher, but he learned a lot, and he's got time to use it."

Francis O'Neill placed eighth in the preliminaries of the 3,000 meters with a time of 8:18.14, more than 12 seconds slower than his qualifying time of 8:06.

Rovelto said the sickness and little nagging injuries O'Neill battled during the fall may have caught up with him during the race.

"He's just not fit," Rovelto said. "He missed out on a lot of miles earlier, and I think it put him behind a little bit."

The Cats won't have time to celebrate as they will hit the road again Friday, bound for College Station, Texas, for the Aggie Invitational at Texas A&M.

Dante McGrew, Kathy Janicke, Dee Dee Tribue-Epps and Mike Becker all will rejoin the team for the outdoor season.

McGrew qualified for the NCAA outdoor championships last season in the triple jump.

Rovelto said Janicke and Tribue-Epps both should make significant contributions in the long jump.

"These are three of our better athletes," Rovelto said.

Mike Becker will compete in long-distance events.

Irma Betancourt is expected to return midway through the outdoor season from a back injury sustained in a cross-country race.

Safety tips, classes available

Before you venture into the water, learn a few simple safety tips that will make your activities more enjoyable. And you could save a life.

1. Bring extra gear, such as a map, matches, suntan lotion and first aid kit.
2. Swim only in the designated areas Tuttle Creek provides for swimming. Any other area may have hazards of which you are unaware.
3. Wear a lifejacket.
4. Don't dive into any lake. Tree stumps, rocks and floating logs can cause serious injury.
5. Don't pretend to be drowning.

6. Learn CPR. Call these numbers for information on lessons:

■ American Red Cross 537-2180
Teaches CPR and first aid.
No regularly-scheduled classes.

■ Memorial Hospital 587-4264
Teaches CPR the last Saturday of every month.

■ The Saint Mary Hospital 776-2855
Teaches CPR once a week, alternating between evening and day classes.

7. Don't mix alcohol and swimming. Over half of all drownings are alcohol-related.

8. Learn the rules of operating your boat before you set sail:
■ The lead boat always has the right of way.

■ Powerboats must yield to sailboats and boats being rowed or paddled, except in a narrow channel.

■ When meeting an approaching boat, stay to your right and as far apart as practical, so it's easier and safer to cross each other's wake.

DEAR CASSIE,

Student suspects discrimination was factor in societies' decisions

Dear Cassandra,
 Every semester, I receive hordes of letters from honorary societies like Chimes Junior Honorary Society, Mortar Board Senior Honorary Society and Spurs commending me for my outstanding academic achievement and offering me a chance to join their team. With a solid background in my field and years of practical experience in engineering (my father is a CEO in an automobile company), I was hoping that my application would be considered favorably. I may not know all the criteria used for selecting a candidate, but one thing that is crystal clear is that there is a lot of discrimination as regards to this. I'm an international student and would like an opportunity to be part of these organizations and contribute to their functioning, but year after year, I get sympathetic replies stating that there aren't enough openings available. I have given all that I have to be a part and parcel of the American society, but to no avail. What more must it take to please these organizations?

Signed,
 Victim in a cruel world

Dear Victim,
 I would be sorry to hear that racial prejudice was the reason you were not accepted into these societies. But that is a definite possibility. However, when I was reading your letter, I noticed several misspelled words and some bad grammar. Many organizations are very critical of applications and résumés that have spelling and grammar mistakes. You may want to have someone look over the material you hand in to organizations when you apply for membership in the future.

Kull performs jazz sax

ROBYN NASH
 Collegian

The resounding notes of the saxophone will echo throughout All Faiths Chapel when Jim Kull, assistant band director and director of jazz studies, performs a jazz recital at 8 tonight.
 Kull, who has been playing the saxophone for 20 years, said he finds jazz more challenging than music written for the saxophone and piano.
 "In your typical jazz piece, most of the things that the musician plays that is written down is the beginning and the end," Kull said.
 "It gives you the opportunity for immediate composition, and also, it gives you a chance to interact with the music involved."
 "Since there are not as many notes written down, more is left to chance. It's more spontaneous."
 Works by Thelonious Monk, Bobby Watson and Horizon, James Williams and Bill Evans will be performed.
 Along with Kull, other performers will be Joe Brumeloe, assistant music professor, on piano; local musicians Bill McFarlin on trumpet and Michael Brown on bass; and Dave Borberg, senior in finance, on drums.
 "It's nice to have so many good musicians to play with," Kull said. "It makes it more fun."

Corps provides local aid

"Our initial activity will be to plan some programs and also to work with health-promotion and disease-prevention programs. We want to pilot some ideas."

and family studies

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

Let's face the facts — college is expensive. If it wasn't for student-loan programs, some students probably wouldn't be able to attend.

Another hard fact is that, someday, those students will have to pay back those loans, plus interest.

The Kansas Health and Safety Extension Corps is a new program being set up to help students with their educational expenses and student loans while they help communities.

The corps is part of a national initiative and is one of 15 set up around the country by the federal government.

There are 12 sites that are part of the corps in Kansas, including one on campus as a part of the 4-H Extension.

The main purpose of the corps is to provide communities with services they need, Glendia Henley, project coordinator, said.

There are three things that come out of participation in the corps, Henley said.

"Things get done in the local community, the community is strengthened using community resources, and participants in the corps program have the experience and the opportunity to provide community leadership," she said.

Corps members who participate on a full-time basis are paid minimum wages for a year to cover basic living expenses.

During this time, participants receive training in CPR, First Aid and First Response to help with community safety if needed.

"After 1,700 hours of service, participants will receive up to $5,000 a year as a post-service stipend, which may be used to pay off student loans or to pay for other school-related costs such as books or tuition," Henley said.

The corps will work with a local partnership council in each community to determine what the primary needs of the community are.

The corps is just getting started in Kansas, so the projects and activities it will assist in have not yet been decided, said Michael Bradshaw, associate professor of human development and family studies, who is involved with the program.

There isn't definite time set for the start of the program either, he said.

"Our initial activity will be to plan some programs and also to work with health-promotion and disease-prevention programs," Bradshaw said. "We want to pilot some ideas."

However, there are several counties that are not participating in the program for various reasons, said Sharolyn Flaming, county extension agent and home economist.

"A lot of the counties are not participating because there is a substantial financial obligation involved," Flaming said.

Students who are interested in getting involved should contact the local cooperative extension office for the county or community they want to work in.

Dissidents return home

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two released; Christopher leaves for Russia

BEIJING — Punctuating its resistance to U.S. pressure, China freed two dissidents and eased the surveillance on others Monday, just as Secretary of State Warren Christopher left town.

The timing of the dissidents' release seemed intended to deliver the same message their detention did — international efforts to link foreign trade to human rights won't work in China.

In Shanghai, dissidents Wang Fuchen and Yang Zhou were returned home at about noon, just as Christopher left China for Russia.

President Clinton has said China must make significant progress on human rights to gain renewal this June of its most-favored-nation trade status, which provides for the lowest available tariffs.

Although Christopher attempted Monday to put a positive spin on the trip, Clinton wasn't so upbeat.

"I was disappointed at the results of the meeting with the secretary of state," he said. "Our policy is the same. We'll just have to wait and see what happens between now and June."

To drive home the message that China would not bow to any outside pressure on human rights, authorities detained at least 17 dissidents before and during Christopher's visit.

Before Christopher left town, the Chinese did throw a few crumbs his way, which may help the administration renew MFN status while claiming human rights progress.

But surveillance began to ease as soon as Christopher left. Xu Liangying, a noted scientist who issued a human-rights appeal timed for Christopher's visit, said two policemen posted outside his apartment door were withdrawn, and he was allowed to leave the building.

An activist who was released on Sunday, however, spent all day Monday at the local police station being questioned about her contacts and activities. But it didn't stop her from writing a letter Monday to the national legislature, the National People's Congress, which opened its annual two-week session last week.

The letter reminded delegates that this year is the fifth anniversary of the military crackdown on the 1989 Tiananmen Square democracy movement, and it blamed the clash on the government and military.

"The students and residents were completely unarmed and ought not be accused of creating turmoil," she said.

Dissidents who had left Beijing last week, apparently to evade police harassment, had not returned home Monday. Wang Dan, a top student leader from the 1989 democracy movement, went to the southern coastal city of Xiamen. The whereabouts of China's most famous dissident, Wei Jingsheng, were not clear, but his secretary said Monday that he had not returned to Beijing.

The Chinese provided some new details about political prisoners and promised to turn over information on another 106 Tibetan prisoners. They agreed to resolve some outstanding emigration problems and signed a memorandum on how to carry out an earlier agreement that allows the United States to investigate suspected prison labor sites.

Extremists continue to fight peace process

Leaders avoid arrest; residents' rights are restricted

ASSOCIATED PRESS

K FAR TAPUAH, Occupied West Bank — Leaders of one of the banned Jewish extremist organizations moved underground Monday, vowing to continue their struggle against the Middle East peace process from their hiding places.

The mountaintop settlement where the leaders reside had an eerie feel to it Monday.

A fierce wind shook the collection of trailers and prefabricated homes in this center of extremism deep in the heart of the West Bank.

"There will be more guard duty for all of us tonight now that David's gone underground and Lenny's disappeared," said Kuzriel Meir, a Vietnam veteran who moved here 18 months ago.

David Axelrod and Lenny Goldberg are two senior activists in the outlawed Kahane Lives, an offshoot of the Kach movement that calls for ousting Arabs from the occupied lands.

The two are among the latest Jewish extremists to go underground to avoid arrest.

They occasionally call Israel radio or television from hiding, vowing to continue the fight against the peace process which they believe will end with Israel handing its biblical birthright back to the Palestinians.

"This witch hunt against us is a prelude of what will happen to everyone in opposition," said Reuben Ben-David, a 34-year-old grocer and supporter of Kahane Lives.

Residents complained of harassment by the police who have restricted their movements and taken their weapons.

Meir claimed that police pushed into his home last week seeking to arrest his wife, who was mistaken for someone else.

"They treated us like Arabs," he said. "You can't have the same kind of laws for Jews as Arabs. We're at war."

Kahane Lives supporters said their office in the United States has sought legal aid from the American Civil Liberties Union.

"We would also make a deal with the devil in order to save the people of Israel from disaster of Yasser Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin," said Mike Guzovsky, a former resident of Tapuah and now a wanted man.

He was speaking on army radio in a telephone call from New York.

Less than one-third of the 50 families that live here are supporters of Kahane Lives, yet the settlement is seen as the center of the organization.

"If you live here, you're on the list," said Meir, 52, who served three tours in Vietnam.

So far, police have rounded up seven leaders of the militant anti-Arab Kach and Kahane Lives groups from across the West Bank and questioned a leading settler rabbi in Hebron.

Kfar Tapuah resident Binyamin Kahane, son of assassinated Rabbi Meir Kahane, who inspired the two groups, was jailed last week.

Baruch Marzel, the head of Kach, still remains at large.

Two armed soldiers guarded half a dozen children in a playground of the settlement 22 miles north of Jerusalem.

Residents have not sent their children to elementary school in the neighboring settlement since Baruch Goldstein, an American-born settler, massacred 30 Muslims in a Hebron mosque Feb. 25.

Ben-David wanted to see the army pull out and leave them to fend for themselves.

"I'd prefer it if the government would say to us, 'Keep your weapons — we're pulling the army out.' The Arabs thumb their noses at the soldiers anyway. They'd never do that to us," he said.

Students need unified stance to lobby ideas

"We don't have a lot of money," Frese said. "That's the main reason we're not lobbying."

In the past, lobbying has not been a problem, Peterson said.

Peterson went to Topeka this semester to see what legislators had heard about students' opinions on the partnership.

He said the state senators and representatives he talked with had heard that the students were in support of the program.

Peterson is opposed to the partnership, but he said he did not lobby. He said he expressed his personal opinion to some legislators but made it clear he did not speak for all students at K-State.

"I can't speak on behalf of the student body because we don't have an official student opinion," Peterson said. "We used to have an official position that was printed in paper. At least we had something to lobby for. Right now, we don't have a stance. We need to have a unified position to support to lobby."

Michael Henry, student senator, said senators don't take their personal agendas to the state house.

"We usually don't do that because we want to look unified."

Without a solid student opinion on an issue, Skoog said he did not feel comfortable being a spokesperson.

However, Skoog said he has talked to politicians about the partnership.

"Lobbying is broadly construed," Skoog said. "Is lobbying going to testify before a group of politicians or grabbing the lapels of the senators and persuading them to your point of view? If it is, that's not what I've been doing. If lobbying is talking to politicians, then I guess I've been lobbying."

Skoog said he has a pretty dim view of lobbying. Often, lobbying can be an excuse to get out of school and meet the suits, he said.

It's a bad habit that is necessary at times, he said, but when there's no overwhelming consensus, there's no point in pursuing it.

Lobbying is a powerful tool, but more is accomplished for K-State by the Student Advisory Council to the Board of Regents, Skoog said.

The SAC is made up of the student body presidents from each of the six regents universities. Members of the group sit on regents committees and present students' views at board meetings.

"If we focus more on the advisory, we will be able to make more positive changes," he said.

Low risk of heavy rainfall in east and midwest regions

The weather service saw greater risk for the eastern parts of the Dakotas and western Minnesota, as well as Pennsylvania, New York, western New Jersey and western New England.

The heavy winter snows are to blame, Richards said.

"It's sitting there waiting to melt," he said. "We are not forecasting a flood. Flooding will depend on whether we have a rapid melt accompanied by heavy rainfall."

Overall, the entire eastern half of the United States has above average risk for flooding this spring because of heavy soil moisture, strong stream flows and heavy snow, Richards said.

The risk of heavy rainfall in the east and midwest is low right now because weather patterns are not carrying moisture from the Gulf of Mexico over the flood-prone areas, reducing the chance of major precipitation, he said.

In the west, snowfall was far short of normal this winter, meaning some areas could have water supply shortages, Richards said. There is time during the next six to eight weeks for more snow to fall and ease the potential shortage, he said.

Risk of water shortages is greatest in Nevada and parts of eastern Oregon, Idaho, northern Utah, central Washington and extreme northeastern California, according to a weather service map.

One other weather worry for the northern tier of the United States is river ice, which can break into huge chunks and cause ice dams at narrow points. That can cause floods upstream, Richards said, or trigger sudden surges that flood areas downstream.

"Some of these ice flows are as big as cars," he said. "Anything in their way is going to pay the price."

Rebels attack missionary hospital

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone — Suspected guerrillas ambushed and killed an Irish priest, a Dutch couple and their 3-year-old daughter as the foreigners fled an eastern town reportedly under rebel attack, colleagues said Monday.

Four nuns from the United States, Ireland and Nigeria escaped by speeding their vehicle through a hail of gunshots, a survivor said. A doctor from New Zealand also got away.

The foreigners were fleeing Panguma, about 140 miles east of Freetown, when they came under fire from armed men Saturday, said Augustine Brima, a worker at the Catholic Pastoral Center in nearby Kenema.

The nuns, priest and physicians were working at a Catholic missionary hospital in Panguma, which was reportedly attacked by rebels.

Rebels were suspected of carrying out the attack on the fleeing foreigners, but that could not be confirmed.

The Holy Ghost Fathers in Dublin identified the priest as Felim McAllister, 52, who had been in Sierra Leone since 1968.

Sister Naughton was driving the car following McAllister's. She told the Dublin Evening Press and the Evening Herald that she saw McAllister die in a barrage of gunfire and sped on as her vehicle was riddled with bullets.

The Holy Ghost Fathers said those who escaped were Dr. Ann

Greening of New Zealand, who was injured, and the nuns were Madeleine Naughton of Ireland, Justina Arima of Nigeria and Mary Ann Tippet and Arthur Gordon of the United States.

A priest in Freetown who identified himself only as Father Healy said the gunmen who opened fire on the vehicles were believed to be rebels who have been fighting the government in the region for three years.

Illegal aliens cause hike in service costs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Illegal residents cost Florida's state and local governments $884 million last year in school, medical and other public services. Now, the state wants the federal government to foot the bill.

Gov. Lawton Chiles will use a new report calculating the cost of services for Florida's estimated 345,000 illegal aliens to support a planned lawsuit.

"For millions of people seeking a better life, their arrival on American soil has been a dream come true," Chiles said Sunday in a statement. "However, federal immigration policy has created a nightmare for state and local governments in Florida forced to shoulder enormous burdens caused by that policy."

The report, "The Unfair Burden: Immigration's Impact on Florida," is the state's first attempt to put a price on services used by legal and illegal aliens.

Chiles discussed the report at a news conference on Monday in Miami, one of the leading destinations for immigrants from Cuba, Haiti and other Latin American and Caribbean nations.

"Immigration is the exclusive domain of the federal government," Chiles said. "But, as this report documents, Washington's neglect has left Florida's taxpayers with a multi-billion-dollar tab."

About 50,000 legal immigrants flock to Florida each year. With almost 1 million foreign-born non-citizens, or 7.3 percent of the population, Florida has the third largest immigrant population, trailing only California and New York.

Chiles is more concerned with the estimated $884 million paid out last year to care for illegal aliens.

"The actual cost of undocumented immigration is likely to be even higher, but it is very difficult to calculate," the report said.

Clinton offers hope in world job growth

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — President Clinton urged America's major trading partners Monday to band together and solve a global unemployment crisis, but the call to arms drew a lukewarm response.

Referring to citizens around the globe, Clinton told participants at an international jobs conference, "We dare not let them down."

The president offered economics ministers from the world's seven-most industrialized countries hope of sparking a new round of worldwide growth.

But he brought no major new initiatives.

Instead, he repeated past calls for Japan to do more to spur consumer and business spending through tax cuts and increased government spending and for Europe to cut interest rates further.

He warned that the world was watching.

Clinton said every advanced economy faces a "choice between hope and fear, between stagnation and change, between closing up and opening up."

While delegates from other nations praised the president's initiative in bringing them together to search for solutions, some said they were disappointed that he did not provide any more specific solutions. Many said the problems were too complex to be settled by two days of closed-door talks.

Asked about Clinton's call for further Japanese tax cuts and spending increases, Seiichi Kondo, a member of Japan's delegation, said, "He's said that before, and Japan is working on it."

French Finance Minister Edmond Alphandery said that Clinton's calls for European interest rate cuts had become quite standard.

He said that even after an economic recovery is underway in Europe, there will still be an unemployment problem.

Clinton was far more upbeat in his speech, saying that government stimulus in Japan and interest rate cuts in Europe, when coupled with deficit-reduction in the United States, could spark worldwide growth and drive down a jobless level that is expected to hit a record 35 million in industrialized countries this year.

He said the problem in the United States was stagnating wages in the last two decades, while in Europe it was chronically high unemployment levels.

"I ask for this conference to summon the same collective energy and intellect and ideas and experience to one of the greatest problems of our era — the challenge of creating and maintaining a high-wage, high-growth society in mature, industrial countries," Clinton told the delegates assembled in an historic restored theater in downtown Detroit.

Before his speech, Clinton discussed the jobs situation with the other economic ministers over breakfast. He had first proposed the idea of a jobs conference at last year's economic summit of the world's seven-richest industrial countries — the United States, Japan, Germany, Britain, France, Canada and Italy.

In a published interview over the weekend, Clinton had seemed to suggest that the United States would unveil a major new initiative to attack the unemployment program and seek agreement in time for this year's economic summit in Naples in July.

But after Clinton's speech, his aides sought to lower expectations about what might come out of Detroit.

"We are not planning any kind of program with the kind of concreteness that was suggested" in the weekend interview, W. Bowman Cutter, a White House economics official, said.

Economics officials from other countries said what they had heard of the U.S. proposals sounded rather modest. One involved a proposal to improve the quality of jobless statistics in the G-7 countries.

German Economics Minister Gunter Rexrodt called that proposal "superfluous" because such an initiative was already being conducted by the 24-nation Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development.

Expansion plan to give Union needed facelift

TAWNIA ERNST

Collegian

The K-State Union may have a facelift to iron out its wrinkles and bags should students choose to support the expansion.

During the April 12-13 elections, students will have an opportunity to vote for or against a Union enhancement fee that would be set at $25 for full-time students and $12.50 for part-time students for the next 26 years.

These fees would go toward improvements in the lighting system, the heating and cooling system, an expanded food court area, retail store space and the Union Programming Council.

Liz Ring, student senate communications chair, said she hopes to have senators, Union Governing Board members and concerned students talk to student groups and living organizations about the expansion.

She said she would also like to see a tour of the Union set up to show people the infrastructure problems the Union is facing.

The project, if passed, would cost about $9 million and would be completed in 1997 or 1998, David Frese, student body vice president, said.

If the project is put off for another five years, Skyler Harper, associate University architect in facilities planning, said a 6-percent inflation rate per year is likely. Now is as good a time as any, he said.

"We're trying to get the most bang for the buck and still be able to bring the Union into the 90s and the next century without the look we have now," Harper said.

"Now's a good time. Interest rates are great, SGA is supportive and the administration seems very supportive."

The improvements are important to keep up with the times, Ed Skoog, student body president, said.

"A campus union embodies the principles of the University itself," Skoog said. "The rest of the University is advancing, and the Union has remained behind."

"Since students built the Union and maintained it, it is our responsibility to make improvements again," he said.

The first year's fees would go into a reserve for the UPC, Frese said. "It would be seed money to get better programs," he said.

The UPC has had a program budget of about $30,000 since the mid-80s, Brent Coverdale, arts and sciences senator and next year's UPC president, said.

This is not only the lowest program budget in Kansas but in the Big Eight, Coverdale said. UPC could use the funds, he said.

"A lot more opportunities would be extended to students," Coverdale said. "We would have better facilities to hold events and attract bigger names."

The second year's fees would go to the physical reconstruction of the Union.

The first area of concern is the infrastructure. Equipment needs upgrading. This includes the electrical system, the heating and cooling system, removal of asbestos and the Union's handicap accessibility, Skyler Harper, associate University architect in facilities planning, said.

"We want to bring the original building up to today's standards," Harper said.

"With all these mechanical, electrical plumbing systems, we want to update them to make them safer, more sanitary and a lot more energy-efficient," he said.

Many of the systems are almost on the brink, Skoog said, but it's not a crisis situation yet.

UNION EXPANSION CONSIDERED

- Presentation of plans, 12:30 p.m. today, Union Courtyard
- Tour of problem areas, 7 p.m. March 27, open to the public

The Union expansion/enhancement project would make improvements or changes on the following:

Men's Glee Club attends Harvard convention

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

A campus singing group traveled to Cambridge, Mass., last weekend to sing and see a little bit of East Coast culture.

The K-State Men's Glee Club attended the Intercollegiate Men's Chorus Convention at Harvard University March 10-12.

K-State was among several glee clubs chosen, including the University of North Carolina, Cornell University, Harvard, Morehouse College and Pennsylvania State.

"It was the Midwest twang against the East Coast accent," said Troy Olson, junior in advertising and director of public relations and advertising for the K-State Glee Club.

Some of the activities included in the convention were conductors' meetings, joint seminars on fundraising techniques and a conductors round table.

"It was kind of a learner's session to discuss what different groups do and how they do it," Olson said.

It was a good experience for all the glee club members, Gerald Polich, associate professor of music, said.

"We had an opportunity to hear different groups with different styles of music," Polich said.

Cancer claims life of director

PHILL SPIKER

Collegian

Tom Lewis Gallagher, 61, died Saturday, March 12, at his residence after a long battle with cancer.

Gallagher became the director of Computing and Network Services at K-State in 1970.

After serving as director for 22 years, he was reassigned as director of Systems Development for the provost's office in 1992.

Gallagher earned his bachelor's and master's degrees from North Texas State in the 1950s.

He then earned his doctorate of science degree from the University of Washington in 1967.

Jane Brown, who worked with Gallagher for 23 years, said Gallagher thought computing was the forefront to education.

"He thought that because one state university has the opportunity of computing technology, then they all should," she said. "He was instrumental in seeing that these universities got computing technology for students and faculty."

Shirley Campbell, business operations manager for Computing and Network Services, said his office was like a close-knit working environment, almost like a family.

"I think he was mostly responsible for this," she said.

Campbell said she doesn't remember anyone ever leaving the department because he or she didn't like it there.

"They usually left because of a better job opportunity or to go back to school," she said.

Kathy Leonard, accountant at Computing and Network Services, said he was extremely easy to work for, and he always was willing to give you an opportunity to do more.

"A lot of students were hired and then over the years promoted to higher positions in the department with his approval," she said.

FUNERAL SERVICE

Tom Gallagher's funeral will be at Edwards-Yorgensen-Melton funeral home 10:30 a.m. Wednesday.

Memorials may be sent to either the KSU Foundation for the Center for Basic Cancer Research or Home Care-Hospice and can be left at the funeral home.

The family will receive friends after the funeral from 1 to 3 p.m. at Dickens Avenue Church of Christ, 2510 Dickens Ave.

CHAIRMAN OF LARGEST MEXICAN BANK KIDNAPPED

MEXICO CITY—A financier who chairs Mexico's biggest bank has been kidnapped, apparently by the same band of criminals who have abducted other businessmen for ransom, a high-level source said Tuesday.

Alfredo Harp Helu, chairman of Grupo Financiero Banamex-Accival, was seized from his car Monday as he was being driven to work, local news reports said.

A source close to the investigation said authorities believed Harp was kidnapped by Mexicans who have been involved in the abductions of other businessmen.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the kidnappers had no political motives and were only seeking ransom.

Dozens of Mexican businessmen, wealthy cattle ranchers and farmers have been kidnapped for ransom in the past two years, bringing calls for police crackdowns. Harp's disappearance comes at a time of increased social unrest in Mexico following an uprising by poor Indians in southern Mexico.

There was no indication Tuesday that the bank or Harp's family had been contacted by kidnappers. Nor was there any public claim of abduction, nor any link reported to rebels in southernmost Chiapas state.

Police officers manned roadblocks Tuesday on major highways leading out of Mexico City and the bank's headquarters was cordoned off.

FORMER EMPLOYEE KILLS SELF, 3 CO-WORKERS

SANTA FE SPRINGS, Calif.—A man who had been fired by an electronics company showed up with a gun Monday and killed three former co-workers before apparently shooting himself to death.

Employees at Extron Electronics ran for the doors and dived under tables as Tuan Nguyen, 29, of Huntington Beach went on his rampage. Los Angeles County sheriff's Deputy Fidel Gonzales said.

The gunman had apparently punched in the code needed to enter through a rear door. Ivan Perez, the company's marketing manager, said. "He was an ex-employee, so he already had the code," Perez said.

Perez said security codes are changed monthly. But he and other company officials would not say if codes are changed after an employee is fired.

Sheriff's deputies found the gunman's body inside the building near one of his victims. He had a .38-caliber pistol in his hand and a gunshot wound in the head, Gonzales said.

The gunman had been fired after working at the company for about 2 1/2 months, sheriff's Lt. Don Bear said. "He was terminated during a probationary period for unsatisfactory performance about 2 1/2 weeks ago," Bear said.

3 CHARGED IN SWEDEN ART MUSEUM BURGLARY

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Three men were charged Tuesday with stealing works by Pablo Picasso and Georges Braque valued at $52 million from Stockholm's Modern Art Museum.

Court officials said Krystian Marczak, 24, a Polish citizen, and Kenneth Vikstrom, 23, a Swede, were charged with grand theft and hiding stolen goods. Marczak's brother, Erwin, 23, was charged with being an accomplice to grand theft and receiving stolen goods.

Court officials said they were unsure of Erwin Marczak's citizenship.

"There may be some mastermind that we are not aware of," District Prosecutor Sven-Erik Alhem said, indicating more people may have been involved in the Nov. 8 burglary.

The three men were arrested in December, along with another man and a woman who were freed after an investigation.

PHONE OUTAGES DISRUPT CITY

LOS ANGELES —

Emergency calls were blocked and business was disrupted Tuesday when the city's telephone service was knocked out by a fire at a switching office that routes up to 3 million calls an hour.

Outages apparently caused more frustration than life-threatening situations. With 911 service out, helicopters, fire trucks and police patrolled the city to look for emergencies.

The fire, caused by an electrical malfunction, broke out shortly before 1 a.m. at the downtown Pacific Bell building as AT&T subcontractors worked on a unit that powers one of the West Coast's busiest switching offices, PacBell representative Gary Sanderson said.

Emergency service, knocked out in the San Fernando and San Gabriel valleys, was restored about nine hours later.

NUCLEAR TALKS DELAYED AGAIN

TOKYO — North Korea Tuesday threatened to halt international inspections of its nuclear facilities again, saying the United States was not carrying out its part of its agreement.

Among other things, North Korea's communist government said the United States was setting unreasonable conditions for suspension of annual military exercises with South Korea.

U.S.-North Korea talks on nuclear and other issues were scheduled to open in Geneva on Monday. But delays in working out an exchange of high-level envoys between North and South Korea appeared likely to delay the meeting.

'CHILDREN OF DARKNESS' REVIEW

Because of a reviewer's error, the film "The Children of Darkness" was incorrectly reviewed as "Children of the Damned" in Monday's Collegian. Because of a copy editor's error, the budget for the film was stated as "between $10 million and $25 million." The correct budget, as quoted by director Steve Balderson, is between $10 million and $25. The Collegian regrets the errors.

Fitness club gives new strength to oldest patron

JENNIFER KELLER

Gripping the sidebars with his 82-year-old sweaty palms, Roy Church sets the timer for 15 minutes and begins walking with the movement of the treadmill belt.

Church is the oldest patron at Nautilus Fitness and Aerobic Center in Aggieville. He exercises six days a week at the center and said working out with college students doesn't bother him a bit.

After years of back problems and arthritis, Church visited different doctors and chiropractors to try to get some help.

"When I was getting my back checked, the doctors and chiropractors all told me I should maybe start some sort of exercise program to strengthen my muscles," Church said.

After he decided he was going to start working out, Church just needed to find a place where he could exercise.

"At first, I had no idea where to exercise because the only exercise I ever did before was a little walking and a lot of square dancing. But then I saw this ad for Nautilus.

So, I thought I'd see what was down there," Church said.

After looking at all of the equipment and machines at Nautilus, he joined the health club immediately, Church said.

"The first time I met Roy I thought it was great he was concerned about his health and getting in shape, and he has turned out to be one of our most loyal customers," Gayle Winter, owner of Nautilus, said.

Church started out nine years ago exercising three times a week, but now he works out six days a week and takes off Sundays.

His daily routine consists of 15 minutes on the treadmill, some time on the bicycle and then different exercises on the weight machines.

"Walking on the treadmill is my favorite thing to do, but I can't use it the whole time because everyone else wants it, too," Church said.

Church said he will continue to exercise because it makes him feel good.

"I see Roy every morning because he works out at the same time that I am working, and I really admire his dedication," John Scott, Nautilus employee, said.

Dance team takes first place

JILL DuBOIS
Collegian

For the first time in K-State's history, the campus dance team has won a national competition.

The Classy Cats traveled to Minneapolis, Minn., last weekend to compete in the United Performing Association dance competition and brought home two first-place trophies and one for second place, Margaret Turner, Classy Cats adviser, said.

Eight squad members attended the competition and performed a pom routine that earned them a first-place finish and a second-place jazz-funk routine.

The Classy Cats advanced to the final round of the competition, where they performed their jazz-funk routine again and placed first overall.

They competed against 12 other schools from across the country, including Drake University and the University of Wisconsin, Turner said.

"We wanted to win and prove ourselves and go out with a bang, and we did," Christine Welsh, junior in accounting, said.

"We were a little nervous at first because we had no idea what it would be like, and we weren't sure what to expect."

Turner said she was very proud of the group.

"They've had a rough year, and they hung in there," she said.

"They're fighters. They were determined to do well, and they went in there and won it. They're an excellent squad."

Turner said many people at the competition complimented the group.

"People said, 'You're from Kansas, right, the Jayhawks?' and I answered, 'No, the Wildcats.' By the time we left there, everyone knew we weren't from Jayhawk country," Turner said.

One squad member had to overcome injury to perform.

Michelle Wiedle, sophomore in history and pre-law, strained a hamstring two weeks before the competition. She injured it again during the first performance. She danced in the final competition anyway.

"We were so pumped up that I didn't even notice it. I had to do what I had to do," Wiedle said.

The squad will perform their pom and jazz-funk routine at Thursday's men's basketball game against Mississippi State University and will be presented with their trophies then. After that, the trophies will be displayed in the Union.

"Any time anyone distinguishes themselves in competition, we all should feel a sense of pride. We're very proud of them, especially here in the athletic department," Max Urlick, athletic director, said.

This is the last year for the Classy Cats. Next year, a drill team will be under the direction of the K-State Marching Band.

"It really upsets me," Wiedle said. "We've worked really hard, and we have a great squad. When something's working, why change it? It doesn't make sense to me."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Highway plans threaten sacred ground

Imagine your congregation being subjected to the noise of a freeway overpass built practically on top of your place of worship.

Imagine your church, synagogue or mosque being bulldozed to make way for more parking access to the local mall.

Imagine your congregation being subjected to the noise of a freeway overpass built practically on top of your place of worship.

Students of Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence are facing a similar scenario.

The Douglas County Public Works Department, Kansas Department of Transportation and the Federal Highway Administration want to build a trafficway that would bypass Lawrence. They want to alleviate some of the traffic from Interstate 70 through Lawrence to Kansas Highway 10.

The only problem is that the proposed route for the bypass intrudes upon 50 acres of ground considered sacred by Haskell students and members of 500 Indian nations.

It is the site of a sweat lodge, a place for spiritual purification and renewal.

Many of the students think of it as the center of the world and go there to pray.

Although Haskell's Board of Regents opposes the construction of the trafficway and proposed an alternate route, highway officials rejected the proposal and plan to begin construction late this summer.

Supposedly, tribal religious practices and sacred grounds are protected by the American Indian Religious Freedom Act of 1978 passed by the U.S. Congress. The lack of enforcement of this act has spurred new legislation to redefine the act and put some teeth in it.

Hopefully, Haskell students will not be praying beside an off ramp by the time legislators get around to correcting this injustice.

Call your congressional representatives and urge them to stop the construction.

Values, spirituality becoming part of public dialogue

It's about time. Topics such as values, morality, spirituality and God are returning to public discourse after being exiled to the realm of Sunday morning coffeetalk by our nation's cultural elite.

According to one journalist, with more than 20 years of experience covering politics, the tremendous interest in values and spiritual issues evident in popular culture is a response to a hunger and yearning for truth.

David Awbrey, editorial page editor of the Wichita Eagle, delivered a speech about the resurgence of spiritual values in our culture at the Kansas Student Leadership Forum: "Faith and Values in Leadership" on March 6 in Topeka.

During his career as a journalist, Awbrey has covered the presidential campaigns of Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan.

Through those experiences, he developed a greater understanding of the difficulty of bringing personal spiritual values to public life.

"It's not wrong to bring God and spiritual values into public discourse," he said.

Awbrey said popular culture is moving away from hedonism and is becoming more introspective and value-oriented.

Although journalism is a relentlessly secular profession, he added, it is becoming much more open to values.

The recent successes of journalists and writers who stress the importance of values in public life support Awbrey's claim.

The meteoric ascension of Rush Limbaugh, syndicated radio-talk show host who has more than 20 million listeners per week, most clearly demonstrates that a large portion of the public is starving for a values commentary.

The rise of other journalists, such as nationally syndicated columnist Cal Thomas, a recent addition to the opinion page of the Kansas City Star, also shows that popular culture is eager to hear from a more values-oriented, spiritual perspective.

Bill Bennett's best-seller, The Book of Virtues, a work Awbrey found encouraging, is another example of this new openness to values.

Society's openness to values is an important development in our nation's culture war, which is a real war.

Just as traditional wars could be described as a conflict within several arenas such as land, sea and air, the culture war is fought in several arenas, too. The rhetoric war was one arena of conflict Awbrey referred to.

He claimed that Christians, in particular, are losing the rhetoric war largely because they actively demonize those with whom they disagree. For example, he referred to the tactics of Fred Phelps as the way not to deal with the gay issue.

The reason our society is opening up to public discussions about values is because the solutions our leaders have engendered for our most serious problems have proven to be hollow and ineffective in recent decades.

The anti-discrimination laws passed in the 1960s haven't alleviated racial tensions significantly.

Nor have those laws caused a single person to stop being racist.

Congress has passed more crime legislation and has funded the construction of more prisons, but the rate of violent crime has risen more than 500 percent during the past 30 years.

Condoms and AIDS education are becoming more prevalent, although more people are dying of AIDS every year.

These problems are not indicative of a policy crisis, but a spiritual crisis.

Our renewed interest in values, morality, spirituality and God show we are looking for ideas that are true and effective in a broken society.

Perhaps, then, we are finally ready to consider spiritual solutions to spiritual problems.

North side of campus neglected by Collegian

Dear Editor,

We are steady readers of the Collegian (our sole source of information) and believe it is important for a paper to get through to all its readers' interests.

We also feel the news of other places and political views are important.

Even though you are hitting some of these areas well, there are a few we would like to see the paper touch on.

For example, the Second Annual Horseman Association's cutting-horse competition in Weber Arena was in the paper Monday.

This contest was Saturday. How did we find out about this? We drove by and saw the trailers. We — students of this University — had to stop and ask a competitor what was going on. We spoke to a future alumnus and were told the events that happen on the north side of the campus are hardly ever in the Collegian.

We feel we should have at least been able to read about it in the Collegian the day before the competition.

Even though some of the readers could not care less about some "stupid horse competition," we could not care less about what time Chimes is having its meetings.

So, please allow your readers to be informed about all the happenings around campus.

UNION

Flag an OK idea, but make it purple, please

Dear Editor,

Before that K-State flag goes up on the Union parking lot pole, as a recent column suggested, keep some things in mind.

During the Gulf War, somebody thought to fly a large yellow ribbon from one of the old KSAC towers across the street. A fine thing to look at, but the yellow didn't really stand out.

Dare I suggest even visitors from another planet would not be impressed that we can do better than turn a campus showpiece like this into a forgettable flag.

Make it a long, long, flowing rainbow banner — and make sure the duldest provincial on campus (of whatever origin, color, etc.) is at least aware that it stands for something important.

Finance the whole project for 100 years with what's already been packed down the rat-hole of the hated diversity overlay.

Does anyone doubt which of the two will do the most good?

Grandparents' love a source of family strength

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

My Grandfather Gibson will turn 75 a week from tomorrow.

In July, he and my grandmother will have been married for 56 years. Grandma will turn 74 in September.

Here's the really scary thing, though — they still hold hands in public.

Yikes!

The way they love each other reflects the way we were raised. They raised their three daughters to be good people and to accept no limits. They in turn, taught us to care for others and to stand on our own.

The walls in Grandpa and Grandma's house are covered with pictures of their parents and of all of us.

If there is one thing I regret, it's that I never learned much from my paternal grandparents. Grandpa Shrimplin died when I was about 3, and Grandma Shrimplin had a series of strokes that left her unable to speak much. She's in a rest home now.

I would give anything to know where the picture that she showed me of the Shrimplin family is.

It was the first time she had her picture taken with Grandpa, and she was angry in it because Grandpa wouldn't put his arm around her. She had books and books of pictures that disappeared also.

Grandma Gibson took me aside last summer and showed me all her pictures, explaining who all the people were and the relations between them.

I got to see the woman I was named after and the man my brother got his middle name from.

I found out that before my mother and father were born, long before my grandparents even really knew each other, relatives from both sides of my family lived across from each other.

The pictures on the wall took on new meaning.

If I were ever going to get married, I would want it to be like their marriage. After 56 years, they are still so much in love that the way they look at each other puts Lauren Bacall and Humphrey Bogart to shame. (For those of you who are caught in the recent past, insert Ethan Hawke and Winona Ryder. There's no real comparison, but it's the closest I can come.)

When Grandpa had her first heart attack, Grandpa seemed so lost. He ate dinner with us, but I could see that he wasn't really there. When she went to Wichita for the angioplasty, he followed behind in the car.

When they moved from "the big town" to "the great Southwest," Grandpa seemed to grow younger before our eyes. Going from teaching to farming was good for him.

The first time he told Grandma that he didn't think he would change socks that day, she looked at him strangely and said "OK, Dale. Whatever you want."

He meant irrigation socks.

My favorite thing about their house is spending the night there. I rarely feel as safe as I do then.

When I was little and was in the hospital, Grandpa stayed by my bed while I slept.

When my brother had a wreck and was in the hospital, Grandma brought a handheld mirror in so he could look at the stitches in his forehead.

Both of them send my Grandmother Shrimplin flowers every holiday.

We spend alternate Sundays at their house, as well as Thanksgiving, Christmas and my parent's anniversary.

Grandpa has a standard prayer, and each time, my brother and I mouth it with him. He knows this, of course.

So, you get three of us saying "Heavenly father, we pause once again to give thanks for the blessings you have bestowed upon us. Grant this food to its use in our bodies, us to thy service, Amen."

It's one of the great parts of holidays with my grandparents.

I'm sure they've had their problems, and I know it was hard living through World War II. Still, they stayed together, and their love grew strong enough to last 56 years. I'm sure when they got married, they weren't thinking that far ahead though.

In an era of spousal abuse and one-night stands, my grandparents are my model for a good marriage. This column is for them.

Happy birthday, Grandpa. I love you, grandma. Tell Grandpa I love him too, and pet Momma Kitty and Little Yella' for me. I'll see you for Sunday dinner.

Wildcats work out the kinks in early-season Texas tourney

BRIAN SIEGRIST
Collegian

If you've ever pulled out your driver on the first tee box after a long winter layoff and put your shiny new golf ball into the lake, you know how the K-State golf team felt after its first round of the 1994 season.

The golfers opened up play for the season Monday in Austin, Texas, in the first round of the Southwest Classic Tournament.

The Cats ended the day 22 strokes off the pace and in 11th place after posting a team score of 316. Southern Methodist claimed the top position on the leader board with a 294 team score.

The Wildcats, however, rebounded Tuesday to post a 301 team score and move into a ninth-place finish for the tournament.

"We were really disappointed with how we played yesterday," sophomore Troy Halterman said. "Most of us were playing well up until this. We had a really good practice round before yesterday."

Halterman was among the five-member Wildcat team that struggled in the first round on the par-72 Circle C Golf Course to shake off the rust of a long winter.

The Wildcats were led by sophomore Jason Losch, who fired a 75. He finished in 15th place.

GOLF TEE OFF

The K-State golf team will play its next match after spring break. The Wildcats will play against Southwest Missouri State March 28-29.

Tuesday, the Wildcats were again led by Halterman, who posted a one-over-par 73 and moved up to 29th place. Losch was also among four Wildcats who improved their first-round scores, posting a two-over-par 74 to go with his first-round 75, good for 15th.

"We played a lot better today," K-State coach Mark Elliot said. "It was good to get the first round out of the way and get rid of some of the preseason nerves."

Southern Methodist's Christian Chernock overtook first-round leader Dan Sjostrom of Southwest Texas for the individual title.

Sjostrom led after the first round, shooting a four-under-par 68, but was overtaken by Chernock's 69 in the second round to go with his first round 71.

Southern Methodist went on to win the tournament team title with a score of 593. However, SMU had to go to a playoff to dispose of New Mexico State, winning on the first hole, 14 to 17.

K-State's 617 total was 24 strokes off the pace, but the Wildcats' second round 301 was fourth best among the field. Most of the other schools in the tournament were southern schools with two to three tournaments already under their belts.

"There is a big difference between practicing and playing in tournaments," Halterman said. "The other teams have an advantage because they have played in more tournaments."

The Cats ended the tourney in 11th place with a score of 316. They were 22 strokes off the pace.

PARKS AND RECREATION

Various summer outdoor work opportunities exist for students

BRENT BROWN
Collegian

■ About 300 jobs are available with Manhattan Parks and Recreation.

■ For more information, call Marilyn Dickens at 537-0056.

Employment opportunities with Manhattan Parks and Recreation prove to be popular among students of all ages.

There are paid summer positions for those 16 years of age and older, and though the job descriptions are all a little bit different, Jim Colley, recreation superintendent, said the time-frame works well for students.

"This job is compact, late May through early August, so it is a great opportunity for students," Colley said.

All of the applications must go through the personnel office, Marilyn Dickens, human resource and personnel officer, said. In the past, students have taken many of the paid positions.

"Generally speaking, the applicants are seniors in high school or college students," Dickens said.

Some college students also are interested in the internship possibilities that are offered.

"We have had lots of K-State students," she said.

Colley said some students are attracted to these jobs because most of the work that is offered is done outdoors.

"Because of the normally good weather in Kansas during the summertime, this makes working more enjoyable," he said.

A number of summer work positions are available.

"We will hire about 300 people for the various positions offered," Colley said.

Jobs range in pay depending on the work and the responsibilities, but most offer ample hours.

"Depending on the job, we can guarantee you 40 hours a week," Colley said.

A list of job descriptions can be picked up at the City Hall personnel department.

From this list, prospective employees should choose their top three position preferences, Colley said.

"This allows people to choose the positions they are interested in," he said.

Applications are now being accepted. For more information, contact Marilyn Dickens at 537-0056.

COLUMN

NIT may not be as great as NCAA, but heck, something is better than nothing for seniors

Well, the Wildcats did not make it to the NCAA Tournament. Unfortunately, there was no real surprise with that decision.

K-State did make it into the National Invitational Tournament, so at least the seniors will have the opportunity to take part in post-season play.

K-State will play the Mississippi State Bulldogs at 7 p.m. Thursday at Bramlage Coliseum. The Cats are 17-12 overall, while the Dogs are 18-10.

So, what exactly does going to the NIT mean?

On one level, it is good that a team like the Cats will not finish their season out with a game like the 73-52 loss to the Jayhawks.

There are four seniors on the team who have put a great deal of time and energy into their time playing with K-State.

"Those four guys have spent a lot of time here, and I'd like to have them walking off that floor in New York City a couple of weeks from now," Altman said.

Deryl Cunningham, K-State's most aggressive player, is coming off a career-high 23 points against Kansas in the Big Eight Tournament. He was the one K-State player who showed up for the game against the Jayhawks. Cunningham's ability on the boards might be the key for the Cats going beyond the first round.

Anthony Beane has carried the nicknames "Mr. Clutch" and "Federal Express" (when it must get there overnight) this season, and the game against the Bulldogs should give Beane one more chance to show the home crowd his last-second ability.

The game against the Bulldogs will allow Askia Jones at least one more chance of breaking Bob Boozer's career-scoring record. Jones has 1,682 points, and just four more will tie him with Boozer for third.

Ron Lucas, who has come on during the second half of this season, will also have one more chance to play in front of the Wildcat fans when he plays against the Bulldogs.

On another level, though, it will be interesting to see how the Cats will pull together — or fall apart. Last year, K-State went to the NCAA Tournament after pulling a couple surprise wins in the Big Eight Tournament. The Cats beat both Nebraska and Kansas, finally losing in the championship game to Missouri, 68-56.

The Cats then lost to Tulane in the first round of the Big Dance, 55-53.

Despite the two losses at the very end, the season was considered a success. K-State had a 19-11 year, and Altman won Big Eight Coach of the Year.

TREY JOHNSON

Additionally, the trip to the first round of the NCAA Tournament in Orlando, Fla., was K-State's 21st trip.

Any trip to an NCAA Tournament is a good way to end the season.

The same can't be said for a trip to the NIT.

"Well gosh darn it, everyone wants to go to the NCAA Tournament," Altman said. "Our players went there last year. With the seniors, their expectations were to go back. Our fans' expectations were to go back. Everyone wanted to go back, and we are not there."

The NIT is composed of the next 32 teams after the NCAA selection committee selects its top 64 teams and tournament members.

By extrapolating this, the winner of the NIT is the 65th best team in America.

Chants of "We're 65 — we're 65," are just not as exciting as yells of "No. 1 — No. 1."

Winning the pre-season NIT, like Kansas did this year, is something to build a season on. Ending with games in the NIT shows that problems existed during the season.

K-State went to the NIT in 1992 and won in the first round against Western Kentucky. The team then lost to Notre Dame, 64-47, in the next round.

That year, the Cats were in a rebuilding stage of the basketball program. This year, they are going with three senior starters and one coming off the bench.

The teams that go to the final are not all bad — some just had a bit of bad luck heading into the stretch. The Cats are considered by many to be in this group.

"I hope our guys are excited. I want to play," Altman said. "You look at some teams in there, and there are some good teams. Some name teams — Arizona State, Stanford, USC."

The finish waiting at the end of the tourney is not too bad. New York City and Madison Square Garden.

Since the teams headed into the NIT are good, some quality ball should be played.

At the same time, a lot of other good games are going on elsewhere. Turn-out at NIT games is not always something to brag about.

"Thursday, they've got the tournament going on in Wichita, the NCAA Tournament," Altman said. "They have the National Junior College Tournament going on at Hutch."

Events other than just other basketball games may detract people from coming out to watch the Cats.

"Our spring breaks starts Friday, but as a general rule, our students like to leave yesterday — they've probably already gone," Altman said.

"It is not a great day to have the game."

"I hope our students will come. I hope people will come. I think our group of seniors deserves it."

"I'm hoping instructors will give a few tests on Friday and make some of those students stay around," he said.

It may not be the NCAA, but it is a chance to watch a game.

The Cats had their problems this season sinking the ball in the basket and playing with a lack of intensity the last few games, but post-season is an all-new season.

Personally, I will enjoy watching the four seniors and the rest of the Cats work together out on the floor.

Hopefully, it will not be my last chance this season.

SPORTS DIGEST

► TIGER PLAYER ARRESTED; SUSPENSION POSSIBLE

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Paul O'Liney, a key reserve on Missouri's basketball team, was arrested early Tuesday for allegedly punching a woman in the face several times outside a nightclub.

Coach Norm Stewart said the junior guard likely will be suspended for at least one game.

The incident happened outside a downtown Columbia club around 1:30 a.m. Tuesday, Sgt. Eric Meyer said. The player was charged with misdemeanor assault.

► HUTCHINSON ADVANCES IN JUCO TOURNEY

HUTCHINSON — Roy Hairston scored 31 points as Hutchinson beat Bossier Parish, La., 99-83 in the first game of the 47th annual National Junior College tournament Tuesday.

In other games, Chattahoochee Valley, Ala., beat Hiwassee, Tenn. 109-87, and Connors State, Okla. beat Atlanta, Ga., Metro 79-68.

Jimmy Stewart, invisible rabbit star in 'Harvey'

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
 Collegian

A lot of people have playmates when they are young — possibly imaginary friends, who know all their secrets. Someone to play games with, or just talk to when they're alone.

However, by the time people reach, oh, 9 or 10, they give up imaginary friends and start playing with the neighborhood gang. Well, most people do. Elwood P. Dowd hasn't given up his play-friend. In fact, he didn't meet his friend, Harvey, until he was much older.

Elwood was walking out of a bar one day when he stumbled upon Harvey, a 6-foot-3-1/2-inch tall white rabbit (or "Pooka," as Elwood refers to him). Since that day, Elwood and Harvey have been lifelong pals. They go to bars together and take walks with each other. They even have conversations with other people (Elwood doing most of the talking, of course).

Harvey and Elwood are the central characters in the film classic "Harvey," based on the Pulitzer Prize-winning play by Mary Chase. The film was directed by Henry Koster.

James Stewart plays the disillusioned Elwood. Stewart is just delightful, as always. He brings that every-guy, hometown presence to every part. This was, perhaps, one of Stewart's best all-time performances ("It's a Wonderful Life" notwithstanding).

Of course, Harvey plays himself. The real fun of "Harvey" is in its classic, screwball comedy plot line. Elwood's sister, Veta, played by Josephine Hull (who will be familiar to classic-movie lovers), is upset with him. She is embarrassed for her family.

Her daughter can't find a suitor because Elwood has disgraced their family. Hull is outrageous. Her distinctive voice and the way she gets so worked up will send you into spirals of laughter.

MOVIE REVIEW

Union Program Council will present the classic film "Harvey" as part of the Kaleidoscope series. It will show at 8 p.m. today, at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Thursday and at 8 p.m. Friday in Forum Hall.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Reader says roommate's girlfriend has made herself too much at home

Dear Cassandra,
 One of my roommates has this girlfriend who is constantly at our house. At the beginning of this year, it was not a problem at all. (Or should I say it was bearable?)

Now I have a major concern. She is constantly using our dishes and does not wash them.

Also, my roommate (her boyfriend) hardly ever cleans, either. I can't speak for my other roommates, but I am getting sick of it.

She doesn't pay rent, and yet she walks in the door without knocking, as if she owns the place. She even comes over when her boyfriend is not there.

I think she has everything she owns at our house.

What should I do? Should I confront her or confront her boyfriend? Also, I really don't wish to make my roommate mad, either.

Tired of being walked on

Dear Tired,

Your problem is not unusual. The first thing I would do is talk with your other roommates and determine whether she is a problem with them. According to what you have written, it sounds as if they aren't really crazy about having her around, either. If so, approach the boyfriend as a group.

Address the problem with specifics: She doesn't do the dishes; she used up all the toilet paper; she plays her ukelele at all hours in the night.

The boyfriend can then take these concerns and address them to his girlfriend.

Let's face it: She will be around as long as they are seeing each other. You can just clean up some of her bad habits.

'Black Womyn' a tale of AIDS victims

RHONDA LEE
 Collegian

"What About Black Womyn?" was performed Tuesday night at Forum Hall by an acting company based in Columbus, Ohio called Living Dream Inc., before about 150 people.

The play was about African American women with AIDS and how the characters lived their lives after their diagnosis.

The play was done in Reader's Theater style, which is when the actors or actresses do not use typical stage movements. The entire show is done in one place, and limited props are used.

The author of the play decided to use this style because, he wanted to connect with what the writer was trying to say, Lorraine Hemshell, the actress who played Naomi in the production, said.

Naomi, the lead character, was a middle-aged woman who contracted AIDS from her husband. She was in many ways the support and mother figure for the other two characters.

She was determined to fight the virus and keep on living. Her husband had "died from the virus, and her son from a drug overdose.

Billy, or Ms. Billy as he preferred to be called, is a homosexual transvestite played by Ron Shelton. Billy was not exactly sure how he got the AIDS virus. He wanted to be at real peace with himself.

At the end of the play, he was the last to die. He left the stage asking if anyone in the audience would be willing to hold his hand at his bedside as he did for his dying friends. With that he left the audience with something to think about.

Finally, there was 22-year-old Ruth, who as she put it did not know she was Black until she was 19-years-old.

She got the virus from possible venial drug usage. Ruth was very naive and unaware of the dangers that she opened herself up to. Ruth gave birth to a crack addicted, H.I.V. positive baby. Feeling as though she had to put the baby out of its misery, she smothered it.

She also was looking for real peace, and she thought she could find it in the men that came before her.

Danielle Davis, sophomore in accounting, said the play perpetuated a lot of energy and emotion. "It gave me a sense of direction. It gave me confirmation of the direction of where I am going and where I'm coming from."

Lorraine Hemshell said if her character saved one life tonight she had accomplished her goal.

"Life is full of relationships. It goes full circle. If I can tell one someone that AIDS is in the community, to make her think, then my job is done."

Cats look to end skid in NIT

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State will play at least one more game in Bramlage Coliseum this year. Following a 73-52 loss to Kansas in the first round of the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament, Coach Dana Altman and the Wildcats decided if they were given the opportunity to play in the National Invitational Tournament, they would take it.

Sunday night, the Cats accepted the offer.

K-State will play host to Mississippi State in the first round of the NIT at 7 p.m. Thursday in Manhattan. The Cats bring in a 17-12 overall record, while the Bulldogs sport an 18-10 mark.

"I don't want it to end on a game like tonight," Altman said after being eliminated from the Big Eight Tournament on Friday. "There are 96 teams that get to play out of 300 and some teams. We'd like to be a part of that."

The "96 teams" refers to the 64 in the NCAA Tournament and the 32 in the NIT.

K-State was a No. 6 seed in last year's NCAA tournament, losing in the first round to Tulane, 55-53.

The conclusion of the 1993-94 campaign was a rocky one for K-State. Including the Big Eight Tournament, the Cats lost eight of their last nine conference games.

"If something gets going our way, I think we can bounce back," said Altman, whose Cats scored a tournament-record low of 13 points in the first half against KU. "I think they can bounce back. We just have to try and get some things worked out."

Anthony Beane and Deryl Cunningham, both seniors, said they weren't ready to terminate their college careers.

"Our goal was to make the NCAA Tournament — we didn't do that," Cunningham said. "Coach asked us after the game about the NIT. We want to give everything we've got. It's a chance to play."

"Well, we're just glad to get a chance to play," Beane said. "At least I know our season isn't over yet."

Oklahoma, which also lost in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament, also accepted an NIT bid. The Sooners, 15-12, will play host to Vanderbilt, 16-11, at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday.

The Sooners will play in the NIT for the sixth time and the third in four years.

K-State is making its third appearance in the NIT. The Cats beat Western Kentucky in 1992 before losing at Notre Dame. In 1976, the Cats lost a first-round game to Kentucky.

Non-season ticket holders can purchase tickets beginning at 8 a.m. today. All student tickets are $5 and went on sale Monday.

The Cats shot 18.5 percent from the field in the first half against Kansas, sinking just five field goals.

Askia Jones finished with a season-low two points and fouled out midway through the second period.

"They've lost confidence, obviously," Altman said. "Offensively, the first half, they missed some shots, and Ostertag blocked a few, and then we just started stumbling around after that."

"So, we've just lost our confidence in our offense. We're going to have to talk with them and work with them to get them back," Altman said.

"We're a much better basketball team than we've shown in the last couple of games."

Anthony Beane tries to put up a shot between KU's Jacque Vaughn and Steve Woodberry in the Cats' 73-52 loss to the Jayhawks last Friday. Beane scored 10 points in the game.

BIG EIGHT TOURNAMENT

Kansas clobbers K-State in 1st round

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — K-State planted itself in a hole and just couldn't climb out.

"We dug ourselves a gigantic hole that first half," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "Our movement wasn't very good, and our ball movement was worse. We buried ourselves pretty deep and just couldn't get out."

The result was a 73-52 loss to Kansas in the first round of the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament last Friday at Kemper Arena.

The Jayhawks went on a 13-2 run late in the first half, taking a 28-11 lead with 3:24 left. Steve Woodberry and Richard Scott each had four points during the scoring spurt.

K-State scored just one more field goal in the first half. Demond Davis rattled in a shot with three minutes to go, giving the Cats just 13 points for the opening period. Deryl Cunningham scored eight of the Cats' 13 points.

Cunningham, who was one of K-State's bright spots, scoring a career-high 23 points, said he felt the Cats still had a shot after one period. Cunningham sank eight of his 12 shots, far better than any other Wildcat, and grabbed eight rebounds.

"We still felt positive," he said. "We felt if we could knock down a few shots and make some good passes, we could still do it. Anthony (Beane) told the team we could, and I know I believed him."

K-State did make a short-lived run at Kansas, cutting the Jayhawks' advantage to 38-25 with 16:35 left. During that span, the Cats outscored the Jayhawks 12-4, almost equaling their entire first-half production.

But the Jayhawks quickly regained control, using a 10-4 run to claim a 48-29 edge with 11:58 remaining.

"That was about as boring of a second half as I've ever sat through,"

Kansas coach Roy Williams said.

But Williams said he tried to keep his players on track.

"It was difficult," Williams said of trying to keep his players focused. "I tried to act mad half of the time. I was concerned about how we were playing. I challenged them to win the second half, too."

The second period was a draw with both teams scoring 39 points.

Beane was the only other Wildcat in double figures, scoring 10 points. But he committed six of K-State's 17 turnovers.

BIG EIGHT TOURNAMENT FINALS

Huskers win 1st tourney

Nebraska defeats OSU, earns No. 6 seed in NCAA

DEREK SIMMONS

Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — In Nebraska's 98 years of basketball, the team never enjoyed a championship.

Until last Sunday. The Cornhuskers collapsed on each other at midcourt, celebrating their 77-68 victory against Oklahoma State for the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament championship Sunday at Kemper Arena.

"Emotionally, I'm on a high," said Nebraska's Jeron Boone, who scored 15 points in the title game. "I've never won a championship before."

Nebraska won the tournament as a No. 4 seed.

To win the tournament, the Cornhuskers had to down two nationally ranked teams — No. 3 Missouri and No. 22 Oklahoma State.

"This is a giant step for Nebraska basketball," Coach Danny Nee said. "We played at an extremely high level. We came here and got a little respect and legitimacy for our program."

It was Nebraska's fifth-straight win and sixth in seven tries.

"We're just going to be bursting" with confidence going into the NCAA Tournament," Nee said.

The Cornhuskers will be looking for their first win in the NCAA Tournament as the No. 6 seed, facing No. 11 Pennsylvania.

Eric Piatkowski was the MVP selection, scoring 76 points in the tournament, including a Big Eight-record 42 points against Oklahoma in the first round. Piatkowski's teammates Boone and Bruce Chubick also made the all-tournament team.

Oklahoma State's Brooks Thompson and Bryant Reeves also made the all-tournament list.

Jamar Johnson led Nebraska in the final with 19 points, shooting eight of 10 from the field. Piatkowski scored 10 points and grabbed 10 rebounds.

Randy Rutherford paced the Cowboys with 21 points, hitting six three-pointers to tie a tournament record.

"Everything went Nebraska's way," Thompson said. "They played good defense, and we didn't execute as well as they did."

The teams battled back and forth during the first period, with Nebraska claiming a 36-33 lead at halftime.

"When you go to your bench, magic things have to happen," Nee said. "Melvin Brooks had a magic game. I don't think Nebraska could win without our bench."

At the end of the game, after Jamar Johnson hit one free throw, Rutherford took another try with 17 seconds left. He missed but was fouled by Piatkowski. He sank just one free throw.

Nee said his team slipped throughout the game but never fell.

"We made some mistakes along the way," he said.

"But my guys, whenever we had a timeout, I never sensed, 'Oh, shit, we're in trouble.' They just kept playing hard and kept playing."

'Pike' takes team to record season

DEREK SIMMONS

Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nebraska's Eric Piatkowski didn't want to disappoint his relatives.

But history proved the Cornhuskers might do it again. Nebraska had lost six of its last seven opening-round games in the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament.

This year would be different. The Huskers swept through the tournament, winning their first ever championship in 98 years of basketball.

How crucial was it that Piatkowski and Nebraska didn't falter this year?

"It was very important," Piatkowski said. "I have a lot of family here (at the tournament). At breakfast, my younger brother, my older brother and his wife said, 'Please let us stay here for awhile.' I said we would try our hardest."

The result at 2:20 p.m. last Friday afternoon was a 105-88 blowout of Oklahoma, sending Nebraska to the semifinals for the third time in 10 years.

Piatkowski's kin would stay another night.

The game against the Sooners might have been more memorable for Piatkowski, as the senior dumped in a career-high and tournament-record 42 points.

He made 14 of his 23 field-goal attempts and connected on 10 of 13 free-throw attempts.

Just a year ago, Nebraska lost in the first round to K-State, 47-45.

"Last year, we came out like a bunch of zombies against K-State," Piatkowski said.

Oklahoma's Stacey King had the previous record with 38 points against Missouri in 1989.

Piatkowski said he noticed the record listed in the media guide before the game against the Sooners, but he didn't think much about it.

"A funny thing happened before the game," he said.

"I was looking at the media guide and as I skimmed through it, I saw Stacey King had 38 points.

"When I had 37 points with about a minute and a half left, we called a timeout.

"The players on the bench said, 'You've got a chance.' From then on, my teammates just started looking for me."

With 46 seconds left, the record was his.

Piatkowski drilled a four-foot jump shot in the lane, giving him 39 points and the new standard.

"I think the job that Piatkowski did today speaks for itself," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said. "He's the best

Eric Piatkowski shoots a jumper during the Huskers' game against K-State on Feb. 26. Piatkowski was named MVP of the Big Eight tournament and had 76 points in the three games.

basketball player that I've coached or been associated with."

Piatkowski erased four Cornhusker records in the tournament — points in one game with 42; field goals attempted with 23; field goals made with 14; and career scoring in the tourney with 136 points.

He finished the tournament as the MVP and scored 76 points in three games.

However, Nebraska's situation was completely different in mid-January. The Huskers lost four straight Big Eight games and six of eight before beating Kansas at home, 96-87.

"If you look back three weeks ago, people were saying, 'No way, NCAA. Maybe NIT,'" Piatkowski said.

Including the win against Kansas on Feb. 23, Nebraska won six of its last seven games.

The Big Eight Tournament title gave the Huskers an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament, where they drew a No. 6 seed in the Eastern Regional.

Nebraska will face No. 11 Pennsylvania in the first round March 17.

Nebraska will be looking for another first against Penn — its first NCAA Tournament victory.

Piatkowski said the Cornhuskers' jaunt through the Big Eight Tournament will give the squad faith in their first NCAA game.

"This gives the team a lot of confidence," he said. "I think we are bursting with confidence heading into the tournament."

Looking to the NIT

Askia Jones guards the ball from Kansas' Scot Pollard during the Cats' 73-52 loss to the Jayhawks. The Cats will play in the first round of the National Invitational Tournament Thursday at Bramlage Coliseum.

.3 SECONDS SEPARATE COLORADO FROM OT WITH MISSOURI

DEREK SIMMONS

Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Colorado was three-tenths of a second away from an apparent 1990 revisited.

But an official's whistle interrupted the Buffaloes' quest to upset the No. 1-seeded Missouri Tigers last Friday in the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament at Kemper Arena.

With 0:00.3 seconds remaining and the first-round game tied at 62-62, Missouri's Paul O'Liney stepped to the free-throw line. O'Liney hit both attempts after a foul on Ted Allen, handing the Tigers a 64-62 victory.

The Buffaloes pulled the upset in 1990, beating the Tigers 92-88 in overtime. Colorado was a No. 8 seed, and Missouri was the highest seed then as well.

"That was a tough call," Colorado coach Joe Harrington said. "I really thought we were going to overtime. I really thought we were."

Colorado's Donnie Boyce played only 3:46 of the game.

Boyce left the game after landing on a Missouri player's foot, hurting his ankle. He was averaging a league-high 26.8 points per game in conference action.

"It's a real shame that the game had to end the way it did," Boyce said.

Missouri led 29-26 at halftime, eventually building a 57-51 lead with five minutes left. But Colorado used an 8-2 run to knot the score at 59-59 with 1:51 to go.

After a bucket and a free throw by Jevon Crudup, the Tigers built a 62-59 edge, only to have it erased with Allen's 22-foot three-pointer with 33 seconds left.

"Part of it is I don't think Missouri really got up for us," Harrington said. "They didn't show Colorado any respect. Let's face it — the game could've gone either way."

NEBRASKA PUMMELS OKLAHOMA; PIATKOWSKI BREAKS RECORD

Nebraska wanted one more shot at the big dog.

The Cornhuskers got just that, smothering the Oklahoma Sooners 105-88 in the first round of the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament last Friday.

The victory carried the Cornhuskers to the semifinals, where they met No. 1-seeded Missouri. The Tigers edged the Huskers 80-78 last week in Columbia to finish the Big Eight Conference season unblemished at 14-0.

Eric Piatkowski poured in a career-high and tournament-record 42 points for Nebraska.

"I feel it's just a great opportunity," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said about the Huskers' third shot at Mizzou. "If we get a break here or there, and if God believes in the Nebraska basketball program, and we beat Missouri, we could get into the NCAA tournament."

After Nebraska established a 70-59 lead with 12:02 left, Oklahoma ignited with a 15-5 run, bringing the Sooners within three at the 6:55 mark.

Calvin Curry also hit a pair of three-pointers.

But the Huskers combated with a 12-2 scoring spurt, putting them on top for good at 87-74 with 5:02 left.

Five Cornhuskers scored in double figures.

The opening-round victory for the Cornhuskers was their first since 1991 when they beat the Sooners 117-113 in overtime.

BIG EIGHT TOURNAMENT SEMIFINALS

Tigers toppled; Hawks plucked

■ Nebraska avenged its loss to Missouri from a week ago by defeating the Tigers in the semifinal.

■ With its loss to Oklahoma State, KU has now lost five of its six Big Eight semifinal appearances.

DEREK SIMMONS

NEBRASKA 98, MISSOURI 91

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nebraska's Eric Piatkowski wanted to take no chances this time.

"I told the guys on the team we had to be up 10 points with one minute left because there's no telling what's going to happen," he said.

Piatkowski's theory proved true as the No. 4-seeded Cornhuskers toppled No. 1 Missouri 98-91 in the semifinals of the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament on Saturday.

With 1:09 left to play, the Cornhuskers enjoyed a 95-84 advantage.

Just one week earlier, Nebraska had dropped an 80-78 decision to Missouri in Columbia.

"It's like turning a page of maturity," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said of his seniors. "All I've been saying all along is that it all starts with how your seniors play. Ours stepped up."

The Huskers went on to capture the tournament crown.

"We vowed that we would turn this program around," said Piatkowski, who continued his scoring tear with 24 points. "We're playing the best basketball of our careers."

The victory marked Nebraska's first against Missouri in the tournament.

Missouri saw its 15-game winning streak snapped and its 19-straight conference wins end.

KANSAS 69, OKLAHOMA STATE 68

Kansas and Oklahoma State are accustomed to games like this.

After splitting two overtime games with Kansas this season, Oklahoma State outlasted the Jayhawks, 69-68, in Saturday's semifinal of the Phillips 66 Big Eight Tournament.

"If you like competitive basketball, it was a game you would've probably enjoyed," said KU coach Roy Williams, whose Jayhawks have now lost five of their past six semifinal appearances.

Bryant Reeves scored the final six points for OSU and hit two free throws with 1:45 left.

On KU's next possession, Steve Woodberry was forced to take a leaning jump shot.

Brooks Thompson then threw an air ball from the baseline with 32 seconds remaining, giving Kansas one last shot.

Woodberry got the call again, taking a six-foot jumper, but missed. Greg Ostertag tried the put-back. No good. A jump ball was called with .3 seconds to go. The officials pondered the time remaining and decided to put .9 seconds on the clock. KU would have one more shot.

Sean Pearson was the in-bounder, and his teammates started moving around, trying to get open — only Pearson didn't have the ball yet.

"Everyone started to break before Sean got the ball," Williams said of the last play.

MEN'S BIG EIGHT TOURNAMENT STATISTICS

Phillips 66/Big Eight Tournament Records set or tied in 1994

Nebraska sophomore Erick Strickland broke a tournament record by hitting 8-14 (57 percent) for the highest three-point percentage.

Oklahoma State junior Randy Rutherford tied a tournament game record with six three-pointers made against Nebraska. He is tied with four others.

Oklahoma State junior Bryant Reeves broke a tournament record with his 40 free throw attempts in the three games of the tournament.

Oklahoma State junior Bryant Reeves tied the tournament record with 15 free throws made against Kansas.

Nebraska senior Eric Piatkowski set a tournament record with a career high 42 points against Oklahoma.

Missouri set a tournament record with 28 three-point goal attempts against Nebraska.

Eileen Feeney set six K-State records from 1976 to 1980 that still stand. She is now the assistant coach at Texas A&M.

Feeney looking forward to expansion possibilities

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

With Texas A&M joining the expanded Big Eight Conference in 1996, one former K-State standout will have the opportunity to coach against her alma mater.

Eileen Feeney, K-State's all-time leading scorer in women's basketball, is now in her 10th year as assistant coach for the Aggies. Feeney works with A&M coach Lynn Hickey, who also held that position at K-State from 1979 to 1985.

"I really enjoy it here a lot," Feeney said. "Coaching with Lynn Hickey has been fun, and it's given me many opportunities."

Originally from East Hanover, N.J., Feeney garnered all-county and all-state honors while guiding her high-school team to a conference title and a North Jersey championship in 1976.

So, how did this East Coast native end up playing ball in Manhattan?

"I clicked my heels together a couple times," Feeney said. "Really, though, I knew that K-State had a quality program, and it was an early basketball powerhouse."

"1976 was the first year schools could offer full scholarships for women, so my high-school coach sent K-State some tapes of me. I was one of three women who received a scholarship that year."

In her four-year career with the Cats from 1976 to 1980, Feeney set six K-State records that remain unbroken.

Besides being the all-time leading scorer with 1,670 points, Feeney is tied for the most rebounds in a single game, holds the highest free-throw percentage, the highest career scoring average, the most career field goals and the most career field goals attempted.

She said participating in the national and regional tournaments each year was exciting, but she is most grateful for the friends she made through basketball.

"It was fun to play for a team that got so much national attention, but it was great to play alongside all my teammates. They were such quality players, and we all still manage to keep in touch with each other."

Feeney graduated from K-State in 1980 with a dual degree in history and social science. After graduation, she went on to play with the women's Pro-League basketball team in its final year of existence.

"The women's Pro-League only lasted about four years, and I joined it in its last year. I played for the New Orleans Pride for a while before I joined the New Jersey Gems. It was nice to be playing back in Jersey again."

After her stint in the pros, Feeney returned to Manhattan for three years as a graduate assistant for Hickey before both left for their current positions in College Station, Texas.

Feeney and the Aggies are gearing up for postseason play this week in the NCAA Tournament, as they play host Wednesday to the Florida.

EILEEN FEENEY

Then: Feeney is the all-time leading scorer in women's basketball at K-State. She played as a Wildcat from 1976 to 1980, setting six K-State records that still stand today. Feeney also played for one year in the now-defunct women's Pro-League.

Now: Feeney is in her 10th season as the assistant coach for the Texas A&M women's basketball team. She was a graduate assistant at K-State for three years before moving to Texas A&M.

Feeney's team received an at-large bid for the tournament and is competing in the West Regional bracket. A&M finished the season 21-7, capturing second place in the Southwest Conference.

The recent expansion of the Big Eight has Feeney excited about what lies ahead for women's basketball.

"Adding more institutions to the conference will just make it so much more competitive," she said. "Three out of the four Texas schools joining the Big Eight have women's teams in the NCAA tournament this year. You'll just be amazed at how much more talent you're going to see."

What does Feeney think about returning to K-State in 1996, when the Aggies will meet the Cats in conference play?

"It will be fun to compete again in the Big Eight, but I guess I'll just have to ignore my Purple Pride for a little bit."

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Wildcats capture more league games in 1993-94 season

JEREMY CRANTREN
Collegian

The K-State Wildcats accomplished many of their goals this season, but they still aren't satisfied with the 13-14 record they posted this season.

This season, under new coach Brian Agler, the Wildcat basketball team finished with five Big Eight Conference wins, which was four more than they won the season before.

Even with the improvement, assistant coach Kelly Kramer said more progress should come in the future.

"We feel good about our progress," Kramer said. "During the last month, we played the best basketball of the season."

"We're still not satisfied, though. We are heading in the right direction."

Progress could be seen throughout the season after a rocky start for K-State.

The Cats lost early games against Wichita State, Ohio State and Minnesota, but then they came back during conference play and defeated Oklahoma, Oklahoma State, Iowa State and Missouri.

They almost upset Colorado in Boulder, Colo., when the Buffaloes were ranked in the top five in the country. In fact, the Cats were leading by 13 points at one time in the second half.

"Once we got our system installed, things started to improve," Kramer said.

"We run a motion offense, so we knew that it would take time to get things rolling."

Despite playing their best basketball of the season in the final month, the Cats bowed out of the Big Eight Tournament in the first round after a loss to Oklahoma State.

Kramer said the loss was tough for the Cats.

"We went into the game feeling like we could win," Kramer said. "It was a disappointing performance for us, but there was some bright spots like the play of Stacy Neal and Andria Jones."

"They had hardly played all season, and they made huge contributions against Oklahoma State. I was happy for both of them and also really proud."

K-State's coaching staff is holding a positive outlook for the upcoming season as they only lose three players from this season's squad.

"We seriously think that we will be able to contend for the Big Eight championship next year," Kramer said.

"We need to improve our ball handling and passing. We also need help down in the post."

Also returning next season are Shawnda DeCamp and Shanelle Stires.

Stires was selected second team all-Big Eight. This season, the duo led the Cats in scoring, and DeCamp was selected as the Big Eight's Newcomer of the Year.

"I'm really familiar with her background because I coached against her in high school," Kramer said of DeCamp.

"We really didn't know how big of an impact that she would make, but she had a great season."

TRACK

Trio competes in nationals; outdoor team to travel

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

K-State's track team will start the outdoor season logging some frequent-flyer miles.

The team will travel to College Station, Texas, for the College Station Relays at Texas A&M Saturday.

The following Saturday, March 26, the Wildcats will be competing in the Arizona Shoot-out in Tucson, Ariz.

"I think I'll need a break after these trips are over," said Ed Broxterman, who competed in the high jump at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships last Friday at the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis.

Nicole Green and Francis O'Neill also competed in the meet in the 400 meters and the 3,000 meters, respectively.

Green, competing in her first indoor national-championship meet, earned all-American status by finishing ninth in the 400 meters.

Despite missing the finals of the event by three-hundredths of a second, Green was among the top eight Americans competing.

"It would have been really disappointing if she hadn't run aggressively and not made the finals," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Green finished fourth in her preliminary heat with a time of 54.22. Her time of 53.79 at the Big Eight Indoor Championships qualified her for the national meet.

The time also shattered the school record.

Rovelto said Green may have started the race too quickly and just didn't have enough energy to finish the race strong.

"She ran the way I asked her to," Rovelto said.

"She was still an all-American for the first time, and that's a great accomplishment."

Green entered the event ranked third.

"She made a huge amount of progress during the indoor season," Rovelto said.

"I can't be disappointed." The results, Broxterman said, were disappointing.

Broxterman, a sophomore, also competing in his first indoor championships, finished 14th in high jump with a leap of 7' 1/2".

"I just didn't do some things the way I was supposed to," Broxterman said.

"But I'm glad I made it — it was a lot of fun competing there."

Broxterman said he was not nervous during the competition, but he learned a lot from the experience.

"It was a great learning experience for Ed," Rovelto said.

"He could have and should have gone higher, but he learned a lot, and he's got time to use it."

O'Neill placed eighth in the preliminaries of the 3,000 meters with a time of 8:18.14, more than 12 seconds slower than his qualifying time of 8:06.

Rovelto said the sickness and little nagging injuries O'Neill battled during fall 1993 may have caught up to him during the race.

"He's just not fit," Rovelto said. "He missed out on a lot of miles earlier, and I think it put him behind a little bit."

Dante McGrew, Kathy Janicke, Dee Dee Tribue-Epps and Mike Becker all will rejoin the team for the outdoor season.

McGrew qualified for the NCAA outdoor championships last season in the triple jump.

Rovelto said Janicke and Tribue-Epps both should make significant contributions in the long jump.

"These are three of our better athletes," Rovelto said.

Mike Becker will compete in long-distance events.

NCAA TOURNAMENT

League represented by 4 teams

TREY JOHNSON

Collegian

Half of the Big Eight will be trying to make the trip all the way to Charlotte, N.C., for the Final Four this year.

Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma State and Nebraska each made it into the first round of the Big Dance. The games will be played March 17-18.

The first three teams had been assured of bids for the last several weeks, while Nebraska took on a new life during its last several games and made the run to the NCAA.

Missouri finished the regular season perfect in the conference. The Tigers' 14-0 record was the first since Kansas did it in 1971. With a 24-2 record overall, Missouri was a lock for a tourney bid.

Tiger coach Norm Stewart now takes his Tigers into the NCAA Tournament with a No. 1 seed in the West bracket. Their opponent during the first round is 16th-ranked Navy. The winner of this game will face the winner of the Cincinnati-Wisconsin game.

The Jayhawks will leave for the first round of the NCAA without the run they had looked for. During the Big Eight tourney, Kansas lost to Oklahoma State, 69-68.

The Jayhawks enter the NCAA tournament with a 25-7 overall record.

Kansas is seeded fourth in the Southeast division of the Big Dance and will play Tennessee-Chattanooga during the first round. The winner of that match will face Wake Forest or Charleston (S.C.).

The Cowboys lost to the Cornhuskers in the championship game of the tourney, but they still managed to get a No. 4 seed in the Midwest bracket of the NCAA tournament.

Oklahoma State will travel just one hour for its game against No. 13 New Mexico State in the first round.

Having the 12th man in Oklahoma City, Okla., should help the Cowboys advance.

The Cornhuskers will enter the tournament hoping to win their first game in the Big Dance.

The Huskers are ranked sixth in the East Division and will face 11th-ranked Pennsylvania in the first round.

VOLLEYBALL

Search for coach continues

JEREMY CRABTREE

Collegian

After sifting through more than 50 applicants, K-State's Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has narrowed the field to five or six finalists to fill the vacant volleyball coach position.

The search is being led by K-State's senior associate athletic director Jim Epps and a selection committee.

"The selection committee received about 50 applications during the past couple of weeks," Epps said. "Then they came up with five or six finalists that we feel good about."

Epps said the next step for the finalists is for them to visit the campus during the next two weeks.

The coaching vacancy resulted from Coach Patti Hagemeyer's resignation Jan. 19, after three seasons at K-State.

In her three seasons with the Wildcats, she failed to have a winning season and won one Big Eight Conference match.

Max Urlick, K-State Athletic Director, said the athletic department is looking for a certain mold in the new coach.

"The most important thing in hiring anyone is finding someone who is very emotionally stable," Urlick said. "They must have excellent communication skills."

"There are also six or seven other things that I look for. I think that their technical knowledge is important, and their values and ethical conduct must reflect their own behavior. Their experience and background are important, along with organizational skills," he said.

There is also another important factor in making the decision that is hard to explain, Urlick said.

"I call it the chemistry of the X-factor," Urlick said. "You can't really put your finger on it. If they have it, then it just seems like a natural fit."

"You can just tell when someone has it."

When the finalists visit campus, they will have a chance to explore the environment and will be interviewed a final time.

"We'll see how they come across," Urlick said. "We'll then get a cross-section of opinions and see how they can direct our volleyball program in the future."

"Then we will make the decision and get on with it."

Urlick said the new coach's role at K-State won't be an entire rebuilding process.

"We have a good group of talented young ladies," Urlick said. "They have a lot of potential, so it shouldn't be a rebuilding job by any means."

Clark: playing quality teams will help K-State improve

NICOLE POELL

Collegian

It was a long weekend, but K-State baseball coach Mike Clark said competing against some of the top programs in the nation was why his Wildcats participated in the Aggie Continental Classic in College Station, Texas.

"We've got to keep playing at this level against the quality teams," Clark said. "We've got to keep improving. I told the guys we can't let down, and we'd better get used to playing this way and at this caliber."

The Cats saw a high-caliber team early in the tournament, facing the USC Trojans in Friday's game.

The contest was close for four innings, until the Trojans treated the Cats to a home-run derby in the fifth and sixth innings.

Tied 4-4 going into the fifth, the Trojans' Walter Dawkins nailed two of his three homers that inning, while teammate Gabe Alvarez added a three-run shot to put USC ahead 12-4.

The sixth inning didn't get any better for K-State, as Trojan first baseman J.P. Roberge hammered a grand slam, leading USC to another eight-run scoring spree and securing the 20-7 victory.

K-State's Rob Merriman took the loss, falling to 2-2 on the year. Offensively, it was catcher Ryan Dixon who lead the Cats, going 2-for-3 with three RBI.

The Cats regrouped in time for Saturday's matchup against Penn State, as they picked up their first and only Classic win during the weekend, 5-3.

Matt Miller gave the Cats a power boost in the fourth inning, as his first home run of the season put K-State up 2-1.

K-State starter David Johnson tallied his second win of the year, going four and 2/3 innings, and Kevin Wicker picked up his second save.

Heading into Sunday's games with a 1-1 tournament record, the Cats were looking for a couple of wins to boost them into second place in the standings. It didn't happen.

Facing Texas A&M in game six of the Classic, the Cats were shut out by redshirt freshman Rob Thomas, who allowed just one hit in the Aggies' 8-0 victory.

The losing pitcher was Jon Albrecht, who lasted two innings. His record fell to 3-1.

In the series' seventh game, it was Penn State against the Cats once again. This time, the Nittany Lions came out on top, 5-3.

K-State rallied in the bottom of the ninth, scoring two runs off Penn State starter Randy Geis. With two outs and runners on first and second, the Cats fell short when Scott Poepard flew out, ending the game.

Picking up the loss for K-State was Jon Oiseth, whose record stands at 2-2. Tim Decker led the Cats at the plate, going 2-for-3 with two RBI.

Facing nationally ranked Wichita State earlier last week, the Cats lost both games by two runs Tuesday and one run in Wednesday's contest.

While Clark was happy with his team's improvement against the Shockers, he said it's the little things that keep hurting the Cats.

"We made some mistakes, and they capitalized on them," he said. "Good teams take advantage of the mistakes that the other ones make. Once you get a good team down, you've got to keep them down, and we didn't do that."

Wildcats eliminated after 1 game

"Our defense in the first half decided the game," Williams said. "They had four offensive rebounds in the first half. The game got pretty ugly in the second half."

K-State shot a horrid 18.5 percent from the floor in the first half, including zero for 11 from three-point land.

Askia Jones finished the game with two points, fouling out with 9:25 to play.

"I missed my first three-pointer when I got open," said Jones, who needed just six points to pass Bob Boozer for third on the all-time scoring charts at K-State. "After that, I rushed my shots. In the second half, I did a better job of getting open, but I got into foul trouble."

Kansas enjoyed solid shooting to start the game, hitting for 52 percent from the field and 66.7 percent from three-point range. The Jayhawks finished the game shooting 48.1 percent, as compared to the Cats' 31 percent.

Altman said it was evident in the first half that the Cats' confidence had been lost.

"They have lost confidence," Altman said of his players. "I think that was pretty obvious in the first half. Then, we were stumbling around and not doing things right."

Kansas ended a three-game losing streak against K-State in the Big Eight Tournament with the win.

"I was a little disappointed we didn't come out sharper offensively," Altman said. "I thought our defense was OK. They did a lot of trapping."

"I thought two things set the tone for the game. One, Greg Ostertag blocked two or three shots in a row inside. Our players got hesitant. Then, we started shooting from outside and were zero for eight or nine on open threes. Occasionally, you've got to knock a few of those down. They also took the ball out of Anthony's hands this time," Altman said.

"I thought we made bad judgments as well."

Let the competition begin.

The race for the student body president and vice president entered Day No. 3 with Steffany Carrel, senior in public relations, and Nabeeha Kazi, sophomore in political science, as the second team to announce its candidacy Wednesday.

The first students announced their candidacies on Monday.

"Voice of the Students" is the motto Carrel and Kazi are using, stressing the importance of communication between students and faculty.

"I've learned how to listen to students and convey their needs and wants to the faculty," Carrel, an Arts and Sciences Student Senator and Student Senate Representative to Faculty Senate, said.

"I find that communication and facilitation are the two most important things to candidacy. Nothing can get done unless there's communication," she said.

Carrel stressed that she has listened to the students' opinions and has taken action on behalf of them.

"Last May, the plus/minus grading system passed, and when we came back in the fall, we heard a lot of opposition to it," she said. "I listened to the students and conveyed their needs and wants to the faculty, and now we no longer have the plus/minus system."

Carrel also helped with the passage of the Undergraduate Minors Program, which has been around since 1969 but has never been put into effect.

Carrel and Kazi also stressed that their friendship will help them be a more effective team.

"We've been friends for the past year," Carrel said. "We've worked with each other, and we like and respect each other. We make a stronger leadership team than someone who is working with a complete stranger."

Carrel and Kazi said they support Union expansion and the city's annexation of K-State, as long as the students aren't hurt.

"We need to work with the city so the student voices are heard," Kazi said.

Kazi said there are also quite a few academic policies in effect that are designed to help students but are hurting them instead.

"The academic-dismissal policy was changed in the fall," she said. "Now, students will be dismissed if they have a bad first semester. We need to work on it next year to make it more student friendly."

The team also opposes a proposed policy to make classes offered only in Winter Intersession part of the curriculum in some programs.

"We have to stop that proposal in its tracks," Carrel said. "There's no financial aid for those classes, and we can't start making students stay here over winter break. It could be very expensive for out-of-state students."

Making sure that policies passed by Faculty Senate that affect students are not too punitive and have the students' best interests at heart is one thing Carrel and Kazi will focus on if elected.

CANDIDATES QUALIFICATIONS

Steffany Carrel (presidential candidate): two years Arts and Sciences Senator, two years Student Senate Representative to Faculty Senate, chair of Academic Affairs on Student Senate (all of this year, most of last year).

Nabeeha Kazi (vice presidential candidate): only student on K-State International and Multicultural Task Force Team, Vice President of the Pakistani Students Association, appointed as Ed Skoog's Deputy Vice President, member of Chimes, was a member of Cultural Committee for the Latin American Students Association last year.

Information center may be eliminated

TAWNYA ERNST

Collegian

The K-State Information Center, formerly U-LearnN, may be out of business if a funding cut by Student Senate Tuesday night is not overturned.

During an allocations meeting, Student Senate voted to cut funding for the center from more than $8,500 to nothing.

The center is a phone center people can call to get general reference and University information.

David Frese, student body vice president, said Senate is low on funds, and that could be one reason for the cut.

"I think it was a knee-jerk response to the idea that we're low on money for allocations," Frese said.

Ed Skoog, student body president, said this kind of response to a lack of funding is not going to resolve the money situation. He said he does not want to be responsible for eliminating a student service.

"I'm not going to be the person who kills U-LearnN," Skoog said. "I respect Student Senate's attempt to be fiscally responsible, but this isn't being fiscally responsible. It doesn't save students a dime. We're still collecting the money. It would just be relocated elsewhere."

The center is not a necessity, Jeremy Blair, sophomore in marketing and former employee at the information center, said.

"I sincerely think that U-LearnN is a nicety. There's not a real need for it," Blair said. "We got paid to provide students with information that was readily available. All we did was lead them by the hand."

Blair said he uses the service but that it's not worth $8,000.

"There's other resources that could use the money," he said. "I use U-LearnN, but we're running short on money, and we don't need to be spending it on extras."

Derek Kreifels, one of the student senators who wrote the amendment to cut the funds, said it was a matter of priority, not saving.

"In a way, we're not saving money," Kreifels said. "But when you have a tight budget, as in any business, you have to prioritize. This is not a personal attack on the center."

"It was not a spur-of-the-moment decision to say 'Let's kill U-LearnN,'" he said. "This has been thought about for four to five years."

Billie Miller, the center's director, and several student senators will try to re-open the issue at the Student Senate meeting at 6 tonight.

Miller said they will try to get the original allocation of $8,588 back, which was about the same as the budget last year.

"We could have functioned perfectly," she said.

The allocations meeting started March 10 and was recessed until Tuesday, Frese said.

Union plans include retail stores

TAWNYA ERNST

Collegian

K-State's Union could look similar to a mini-mall if plans to bring in retail stores and expand the food services go into effect.

Renovation and expansion of the food-service area would be one phase of the expansion project.

Most of the expansion would be included in a 20,000-square-foot addition to the north, Skyler Harper, associate University architect in facilities planning, said.

The plans include having a three-tiered dining area, Harper said.

"We plan on doing major shifting with the bookstore and food services," he said. "We would like to build a new entry on the north, as well as an open patio."

"We're really concerned about the image the facilities give to prospective students and guests," Harper said.

The possible northward expansion of the Union is not the only change that could affect the area between the Union and Seaton Hall.

Harper said expansion planners have discussed the construction of a plaza that would be partially funded by the University.

The administration would be willing to provide about $500,000 for the plaza reconstruction and about $30,000 a year for the next five years to the project, David Frese, student body vice president, said. This would total at least $650,000 during the next five years, he said.

If the food-service area is expanded to the north, the bookstore may be expanded to take over part of the existing Stateroom. This would locate the entire bookstore on the first floor. The old lower level of the bookstore would be opened up for retail space.

A mini-mall of sorts would be established with the possibility of fast-food restaurants, a travel agency, a flower shop, a clothing store or music store using that space.

The purpose of allowing outside enterprises is to help build a retail base, Frese said.

"Right now, we barely break even on the building," Frese said. "We want to build a revenue base to keep money coming in and to become more self-efficient."

Ed Skoog, student body president, said preliminary contacts have been made with retail stores and restaurant chains.

Students split on expansion

TAWNYA ERNST

Students appear to be on both sides of the fence concerning the K-State Union expansion and enhancement issue.

During the open forum Wednesday, a sparse crowd mingled in front of the proposed designs for the Union.

A panel of student government officers and the associate university architect were in attendance to discuss the project and answer questions.

Some of the students present questioned the necessity of the changes.

"I don't know how necessary it is," Kenny Sheehan, fifth-year architecture student, said. "We've already had so many fees tacked on, and with the tuition increase, I don't see how it will pass. I wouldn't vote for it."

Sheehan said he found the idea of bringing in franchises interesting but that at the same time, the Union Station has done a great job of providing those services.

The matter of money is not necessarily his main

Student Governing Association election packets now available

SARA ABRAHAM

Collegian

If you want to run for office, now's the time to do it.

Election packets for the upcoming Student Governing Association elections are now available in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Union.

Any full-time student at K-State can be a candidate for the positions of student body president, student body vice president and for positions on the Union Governing Board, the Fine Arts Council and the Board of Student Publications, Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said.

Full-time students within each college are also eligible for Student Senate positions representing their specific college.

This year, the Fine Arts Council will have three student positions that are elected, Nolfi said. This is the first time the Fine Arts Council will have elected seats on it.

In previous years, the various departments benefiting from the Fine Arts Council nominated representatives, and the president of the council appointed student members, Nolfi said.

Student Senate will also have more positions up for election this year as a result of legislation it recently passed. Currently, there is one senator for every 300 full-time students and one senator for every 600 part-time students in each college.

Under the new legislation, a college would not have to increase by the full 300 or 600 students before it receives another representative. The new senator would be added when the college increases by at least 100 full-time students or 200 part-time students.

As a result, there will be 58 Senate seats open for election this year, as compared to 55 last year. The colleges of Agriculture and Business Administration, as well as the Graduate School, will all have one more Senate seat this year.

To run for election to any of these seats, candidates need to turn in an official filing form to the Office of Student Activities and Services by 5 p.m. March 28.

"They'll have a general information meeting after the filing deadline," Nolfi said. "They'll get more information on what they're supposed to do, and they'll draw for who'll be on the ballot in what order, those types of things."

Parties need to register with the Office of Student Activities and Services by 5 p.m. April 4, one week after the candidate filing deadline. Candidates who wish to be affiliated with a particular party should register their affiliation with the party by 5 p.m. April 4 as well.

DESKTOP PUBLISHING FIRMS CUT AND PASTE

SAN FRANCISCO — Adobe Systems Inc. and Aldus Corp., the leading makers of desktop publishing software, said Tuesday they would merge in a stock swap valued at about $525 million.

The companies said the move would help them better compete in an evolving electronic publishing industry.

"We could have both gone on our own, but we looked to the future, and we felt in this case that adding one and one together created three," Paul Brainerd, president and founder of Seattle-based Aldus, said.

The deal is subject to numerous conditions, including approval by regulators and shareholders. Shareholders are expected to approve the merger in July.

Aldus and Adobe Systems, based in Mountain View, Calif., dominate the market for personal computer programs used by individuals and businesses to create documents such as newsletters, magazines and newspapers. Their products generally don't overlap, but they do have competing programs used by graphic artists to make illustrations.

The companies would continue to sell all their products for the foreseeable future, Brainerd said.

John Warnock, chairman and chief executive of Adobe, would hold those posts in the merged company. Adobe president Chuck Geschke would be president of the combined company, which will be based in Mountain View. A name has not yet been decided.

FOSTER'S DEATH REPORTED 'CLEARLY A SUICIDE'

BOSTON — The police chief who investigated the death of White House deputy counsel Vincent Foster has turned his report over to the special counsel investigating Whitewater and said, from his standpoint, the case is closed.

The death of Foster, whose body was found last July in a park in northern Virginia, was "clearly a suicide," U.S. Park Police Chief Robert Langston told the Boston Globe on Tuesday.

"This case is closed," Langston said after handing over his report along with boxes of forensic evidence and interviews Tuesday to special counsel Robert B. Fiske Jr., who is re-examining Foster's death as part of the probe into President Clinton's investment in the Whitewater Development Corp.

Langston said his report should end rumors that Foster was murdered or that his body was tampered with after his death.

"We're anxious for them to put this to rest," Langston said. "It's been unfair for the politicians and the media to put the family through this. If Whitewater is the issue, then let Whitewater be the issue. But the suicide has never been the issue."

But one of Fiske's top aides told the New York Post that the question of Foster's death is still open.

NEW TREATMENT FOR SICKLE CELL DISEASE

BOSTON — Injections of steroid drugs appear to considerably shorten episodes of severe pain that afflict victims of sickle cell disease, a study found.

These painful crises are the most common complication of sickle cell disease and account for substantial missed time from work and school. They occur when misshapen red blood cells get stuck in blood vessels.

Typically, the episodes are treated with narcotics until they spontaneously subside. However, there is no accepted treatment to make them clear up faster.

In a report in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, Dr. Timothy C. Griffin and others from the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas report on promising results with a new approach.

The doctors found that two large injections of methylprednisolone, given 24 hours apart, cut the episodes by nearly a third.

SUSPECTS DEAD, AGENTS WOUNDED

PHILADELPHIA — A shootout Wednesday between drug suspects and federal agents in a crime-infested neighborhood left two suspects dead and two agents wounded.

The confrontation occurred at an intersection as four agents and a police officer followed four drug suspects in a car, according to Bob Reutter, agent in charge of the FBI's Philadelphia office.

When their car stopped, the suspects opened fire and the agents fired back, Reutter said. Witnesses in the north Philadelphia neighborhood reported hearing 20 to 25 shots.

Reutter declined to provide more details other than to say the agents were participating in a federal-local investigation dubbed the Violent Traffickers Project.

STRIKE FORCES 3 PLANT CLOSINGS

DAYTON, Ohio — A United Auto Workers union reached a tentative agreement with General Motors Corp. Wednesday to end a three-day strike at two brake plants.

The strike has forced three other plants to close in Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. Others were likely to shut down within days as they ran out of parts made at the Ohio brake plants.

The strike by 3,000 workers at GM Delco Chassis Division plants in Dayton began Monday after negotiators failed to agree on a new three-year contract.

GM representative Charles Kronbach said the agreement was reached after an eight-hour bargaining session Wednesday.

Neppi was arrested for DUI on a bond of $500 and issued a notice to appear for leaving the scene of an accident, transporting an open alcoholic container, being a minor in possession of alcohol and possessing a fake ID. Bynum was issued a notice to appear for being a party to a violation.

At 7:42 a.m., Dan Siemsen, of Manhattan Technical Center, 3136 Dickens Ave., reported a theft. Loss was $1,870.

CORRECTION

NIT TICKETS VARY IN PRICE

Because of a source's error, the price of National Invitational Tournament tickets was incorrectly stated in the March 14 Collegian.

The correct price is $5 per student with a valid K-State ID and $12 per ticket for the public. Each student may purchase only one ticket at the $5 price.

Because of an editor's error, the same issue stated the NIT game would be televised. The game between K-State and the Mississippi State Bulldogs will not be televised.

The Collegian regrets the errors and any inconveniences that may have resulted.

After 56 years of blacksmithing, Martin Roberts has decided it's time to hang up his hammer.

80-year-old local blacksmith calls it quits

"I knew I would serve to death on a farm."

MARTIN ROBERTS

Manhattan resident

JODI WOLTERS
Collegian

After 56 years of bending and mending iron, 80-year-old Martin Roberts of Manhattan is hanging up his hammers and retiring from blacksmithing.

Martin said the blacksmithing business is not as good as it was when he started.

"Now, there is less of a demand to repair plow shears," Roberts said.

His days of repairing farm machinery and doing ornamental artwork on houses are over.

"He simply can't do it anymore," Marjorie Roberts, Martin's wife and bookkeeper for 55 years, said.

Martin started blacksmithing when he was young. He grew up on a farm during the years of the Depression.

Knowing he could not make it as a farmer, he turned to blacksmithing.

"I lived in a little town called Fostoria, which is northeast of here," he said. "I knew I would serve to death on a farm."

Martin started out working as an apprentice for another blacksmith to learn the trade.

Marjorie said times were tough when the couple started out, and they had to support themselves with extra income.

"We use to buy old houses and remodel them," she said. "Also, we sold trash barrels."

Throughout his years as a blacksmith, his business has relied heavily on the farm economy, Martin said.

"When there was a year the farmer could not raise a crop, that was a tough year for us."

Martin said the changes in the area have affected his work.

"Manhattan was just a nice little town, and when the dam went in, it took a lot of my work. It took those big farmers and their land above the dam out."

Martin described the long hours that go along with blacksmithing.

"It took me a long while to learn it. It is a lot of hard work. I used to leave the house in the morning about 4 a.m. or 5 a.m. and not get home that night until 8 p.m. or 9 p.m."

The long hours and hard work have paid off.

Martin has an award in his house honoring his 55 years in the business. Marjorie attributes the couple's success to determination.

"It was a lot of work, but we were very successful in it," she said.

Debates rage on about Whitewater

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Rep. Dan Rostenkowski said Wednesday that Whitewater hearings are inevitable, but House Speaker Thomas S. Foley refused to budge from his opposition despite another Democratic defection.

The subject of hearings didn't come up as President Clinton had a White House news conference, but the president was asked if he stood by a 1992 assertion that he and his wife lost nearly $70,000 on the Whitewater deal. He did not answer directly.

"I don't have anything else to say about that right now," Clinton said. "We are cooperating fully right now with the special counsel. I wish you would let them do their work."

Rostenkowski, one of the most powerful lawmakers, predicted a congressional investigation of Whitewater while saying most Americans are tired of hearing about the case.

Rep. Lee Hamilton, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, broke party ranks Tuesday to say that hearings may be the quickest way to get the facts out in Whitewater.

Foley, asked about cracks in Democratic unity on the issue, said he hopes Congress will "accede to the request of the special counsel to postpone hearings until he completes his investigation."

The speaker even cautioned lawmakers to be careful about holding hearings on White House interference in the case, even though special counsel Robert B. Fiske Jr. — who was appointed by the attorney general to probe the case — said he wouldn't object to such an inquiry when he finishes that phase in several weeks.

Foley said that Fiske, in a meeting with House leaders, expressed concern that hearings on White House meetings with regulators would be used as a means of backing in to a broader Whitewater probe.

"I'm not enthusiastic about that," Rostenkowski, D-Ill., said on ABC. He noted a special counsel was appointed by the Justice Department to investigate the case.

"I don't want the legislative arm of government to hamper the executive arm."

But the House Ways and Means Committee chairman said in an NBC interview, "I think the congressional hearings are going to be inevitable despite the opposition of the Democratic leadership."

Rostenkowski, fresh from a renomination victory in Tuesday's primary, would not predict whether such an investigation would be productive, saying that depends on whether it becomes a circus or not.

"I really believe that the American people are tired of all this, and that's one of the reasons why I got such a majority," he said. "They want us to govern."

Democratic members of the Senate Budget Committee left a White House meeting with Clinton urging Republicans to hold off hearings.

"We ought to be talking about job creation, we ought to be talking about health care reform and a whole host of other issues rather than running down this rabbit track called Whitewater," Sen. Jim Sasser, D-Tenn., said.

Hamilton said the Whitewater controversy is affecting the president's agenda.

In such a case, he must get all the facts out quickly and completely.

Hamilton said some Americans may believe the White House is holding back information on Whitewater, and added such a view is the worst impression that can be created.

In New Hampshire, Clinton said Tuesday of Hamilton's suggestion,

"That's a discussion he ought to have with the special counsel. We have all cooperated."

K-State Info not much of a resource

Most of the questions the K-State Information Center answers regard information that can be obtained elsewhere.

If you can't do something right, don't do it at all.

The K-State Information Center has good intentions, but the services it provides do not warrant its $8,588 budget.

The center, formerly known as U-Learn, may find itself out of business if Student Senate's proposal to cut its funding isn't overturned at Senate tonight.

Senate voted during its allocations meeting Tuesday night to cut the center's funding to $0. And, unless Senate can find some way to make the money spent worthwhile, it's time to put this money to better use.

Most of the questions the center answers regard phone numbers and University events — information that can be obtained elsewhere.

Many students do not even know the center exists, and those who do probably know it's not much of a resource.

In contrast, the KU Info Center is a goldmine. Coordinator Susan Elkins said KU Info answers about 200,000 calls a year, and double that number get information off the center's recording. K-State receives only 34,000 calls a year.

KU Info has 16 paid staff members and a budget of more than $30,000 a year; K-State has seven paid staff members, six of whom are paid from the Student Governing Association budget.

Students have had a need for the K-State Information Center since at least 1970, the center's first year.

But unless the center starts serving as the resource it's supposed to be, it's time to put its $8,588 budget where it can better serve students.

Spring break has plenty of fun — and lots of danger

I want to say, for the record, that I look nothing like Sara Smith. I think the staff just waited until I left for Colorado to pull a good practical joke. I'll play along, but now it's my turn.

Colorado is probably on the minds of a lot of you about now. Many others are preoccupied with Padre or Daytona or some other warm and friendly destination. I wish I could say as much, but some friends and I will be lucky enough to get our wisdom teeth pulled during the break. Sucks, doesn't it?

For some in the sun and fun, however, life will be even worse.

With thousands of crazed college students playing at the top of their game, spring break can be either the best or worst time in a person's life.

The good is not hard to imagine. Who wouldn't want to spend days on end with no responsibilities in the company of friends?

Coming from Kansas, the beaches look brilliant this time of year.

And the mountains may be even better.

If the weather doesn't change significantly in the next few days, Colorado will have plenty of powder and about 70 degrees. It just doesn't get any better than this.

The downside, however, is far worse than anything we ever anticipate. The lowest common denominator in most spring break experiences is alcohol.

And while a couple of brews or a shot likely won't hurt anyone, it has become tradition to exceed the recommended daily allowance and become monumentally bombed.

For most students, nothing will happen, and the week will go as planned. Some will come off relatively light, simply falling and breaking a nose or something (too much alcohol will do that to you).

Others will wake up with a strange person in a strange place. Some will have gone under their own free will. Some will have not realized where they went or what happened. Some will have been taken against their will.

But it is likely that all will have increased the chances of something bad happening by consuming far more alcohol than necessary.

Still others will get into a car. They won't come back to school. Ever.

Alcohol is not the only murderer that strikes during spring break. Another killer, even more deadly, waits and is not so kind. About the time they are heading home for Thanksgiving next year, some students will discover they have a new enemy. They will find they have AIDS.

Plenty of students head for the resorts simply for the opportunity to mate like rabbits with people they will never see again. Not all of those students will protect themselves. And not all their partners will be clean.

I'd like to see all of our K-Staters return after break. I also recognize it is hopeless to preach abstinence from sex and alcohol during break. Instead, I offer the following tips for enjoying and surviving spring break.

■ Don't drink so much that you lose control of yourself. Have a drink or two with food, but make sure you know your limits and try to stay within them.

■ Don't go anywhere alone. If you do plan to get plastered, have someone in your group stay sober to make sure everyone gets home all right. There are enough days in spring break to allow everyone a chance to get hammered while still maintaining some degree of safety.

■ Don't have unprotected sex. While a condom is not going to prevent the transmission of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases with 100-percent certainty, it will greatly reduce the risk if used correctly. A moment's delay and a cheap piece of rubber are certainly worth it compared to a slow and miserable death.

So, when you leave Friday, take time to think about your week. Try to make your spring break more enjoyable than mine.

Dan Lewerenz is a junior in philosophy and American ethnic studies.

The lowest common denominator in most spring break experiences is alcohol.

Sleep necessary, never a time waster

"Diane, as we now know from experiments conducted on American GIs during the Korean War, sleep deprivation is a one-way ticket to temporary psychosis. And I'm working on a three-day jag."
— FBI Special Agent Dale Cooper, "Twin Peaks"

I've been told a lot that college is the best time of my life. Maybe so, but I'm spending most of it half-asleep.

Has some mad alarm-clock god named Snooze Button decreed that sleep and college are two concepts that do not go together anymore?

I am not alone. I just went to a class full of people who looked as though they had had maybe five minutes of sleep in the past five days, which is more than it feels like I've had.

One student in this class used to be the consummate high-maintenance woman. That was at the beginning of the semester. The other day, she had on sweatpants, a plaid flannel shirt and no makeup. Her hair, which usually resembles Claudia Schiffer's, was stringy and stuffed under a baseball cap. She yawned and told me, "Gee, you look tired."

We chatted about our lack of sleep until our jaws were too tired to continue. The carved top of the desk rushed up to meet my face. But I made it through the hour awake. A miracle.

It'll be fine, I'm sure. I can sleep in the next couple of days and then spring break will save me. But if this lack of sleep is hitting me and the post-high-maintenance woman, it's probably hitting everyone on campus once in a while.

The Smith Theory of Sleep Deprivation proposes that not only is sleeping one of the most fun and necessary components in a person's life, it's also the most scarce. This seems to be especially true on a college campus before a vacation. And finals week ... I don't even want to think about it. It scares me. I'm covering my mirror with a sheet for that week.

The Smith Theory also proposes that the college lifestyle perpetuates sleep deprivation. If you put 20,000 procrastination-prone, ambition-driven 18-to-25-year-olds in a small town with readily accessible alcohol and a few sadistic professors who schedule tests during the same week, the sleep ratio is bound to take a nose dive.

This occurs because in our society, sleep is the first thing sacrificed. Sleep is perceived as something we can catch up on or avoid altogether. We stay up late to study, go out late, sleep in, pour caffeine into our veins and pull all-nighters. It eventually catches up to us, and we end up in class looking like we just clawed our way out of an early grave.

Sleep is important. It rests our brains and replenishes our bodies. Skimping on sleep is worse than skipping breakfast. You have a much slimmer chance for a productive day, and even if it is productive, you'll feel like total hell the whole time. It's not healthy to give up sleep, and it's not worth it.

But for some reason, the time spent in slumber is perceived as wasted time. Wasted time is what happens when you watch MTV, talk to strangers in the Union or argue politics with someone who voted for Jerry Brown. But sleeping eight hours a night keeps you alive. It's not a waste of time.

If we never slept, we'd go insane. Without the biological need for sleep, we'd be reduced to sitting in dark rooms eight hours a day just to get away from the people we can't stand to look at for another 18 hours a day.

But perhaps most important, sleep gives us dreams. Not the type of dreams that make you want to become an astronaut, but the kind where all of your friends are in a car with you driving to the South Pole to capture the head polar bear so you can dye him purple and make him the new K-State mascot. Those are always fun.

Dreams during sleep also are a sign of what you've been thinking about all day without knowing it. They are a release for your hidden anxieties and fears.

Sleep keeps me sane whenever I get it, which explains my behavior lately. The other night, I turned off a fan, harassed a ferret and had a conversation, and I don't remember any of it. I haven't been sleeping enough, I apologized. I then wandered into my friend's kitchen, took a can of Coke out of his refrigerator and forgot about it entirely until the next morning.

I didn't remember it when I woke up, of course.

I had been up all night.

► COLLEGE ALGEBRA

If my teacher can't use the calculator, how do you expect me to understand it?

Dear Editor,

I am enrolled in Math 100 — College Algebra. Starting this semester, the basic structure for the course was changed. The new foundation of the class is the Texas Instruments TI-8 Graphics Calculator. Every student in the class was required to purchase this $80 calculating wonder. It is the only calculator that can be used for quizzes and tests.

You may not think this is a problem. When considering the fact that neither my recitation nor lecture teacher is quite sure how to use it, I do see a problem. About half the students failed the first test. So, we now see a class full of students with a calculator they can't use, being taught by ineffective instructors.

For the money we have paid, we should be taught and not just given a canned 50-minute lecture and released to decipher this mathematical mayhem.

If students are forced to buy calculators, and they have trouble and ask for help, then the instructors should provide that help. Is this indicative of the Partnership for Excellence that we are being asked to pay for?

And, by the way, who in the math department received the kickback check from Texas Instruments?

► UNION EXPANSION

Union coverage a plus, but don't mislead readers into thinking plans are solid

Dear Editor,

The Collegian has done a grade-A job this semester of keeping students informed of the Union Enhancement Project.

The graphic that accompanied Tuesday's story, however, perhaps needs some clarification. The graphic stated that the Union enhancement would include certain stores, such as a florist or a travel agency. That is somewhat misleading.

While it is likely retail stores such as those mentioned above could make it into the endplan for the Union Enhancement Project, those particular ideas are simply that — ideas. Our plan is to move the entire bookstore to the first floor and change what is now the downstairs bookstore level into an area for retail stores. This space, according to our conceptual proposal, will house from two to six retail stores.

If the referendum passes, the Union Governing Board will be responsible for surveying students to see what they would like to see in that retail space.

And, if you could, please pass along to your readers that the proposed plans for the Union Enhancement Project will be on display in the Union Courtyard for the rest of the week.

► GAYS IN MILITARY

Hey, Scott, unless you've been there, don't preach about military affairs

Dear Editor,

This is in response to the column by Scott Allen Miller.

Scott, before you base your opinions on the military, we have some questions for you. Have you ever been in the military? Have you ever been in a war or conflict? Do you even know what military life is actually about?

Before you base all of your opinions on something you know little about, why don't you talk to people in the service and find out what they think.

After all, they are the ones who have to protect our country and live through these experiences.

Serbs, Croats agree to talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia — Serbs and Croats, the main rivals in Yugoslavia's bloody breakup, agreed Wednesday to hold their first talks on formally ending their vicious 1991 war, which later engulfed Bosnia.

Talks between leaders of Croatia's Serbs and the Croatian government will take place next Tuesday at the Russian Embassy in Zagreb, another indication that Moscow as well as Washington is pushing hard for an overall peace.

Balkan blood-letting began when armed Serbs rebelled against Croatian independence during the breakup of the former Yugoslav federation.

The ensuing war killed at least 10,000 people before a U.N.-brokered truce brought an uneasy peace to the one-third of Croatia that Serbs control. More than 200,000 people are dead or missing in the nearly two-year Bosnian conflict.

Vitaly Churkin, Russia's special envoy on Yugoslavia, said the talks should yield a formal agreement ceasing military and all other hostilities between Croats and Serbs in Croatia.

Churkin stressed there could be no peace in neighboring Bosnia if hostilities in the Serb-held area of Croatia known as Krajina were ignored.

"We thought that while we keep working very hard on Bosnia-Herzegovina, we should not forget the very thorny issue, very explosive issue" of Krajina, Churkin said.

"There cannot be genuine peace in Bosnia-Herzegovina if tensions remain in the Krajina," he added.

Churkin said he would travel Wednesday to Washington, where Bosnia's Croats and Muslims are to sign an agreement on a U.S.-backed federation Friday.

He said the Americans were using their contacts to calm Muslim-Croat hostilities and the Russians were working on defusing Serb-Croat and Serb-Muslim tensions.

After his meeting with Croatian Serb leader Milan Martić, Churkin talked with Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadžić. He then met with President Slobodan Milošević of Serbia, the dominant state in the shrunken Yugoslavia.

Churkin is trying to persuade Karadžić to join the Muslim-Croat federation in Bosnia. Karadžić, whose troops now hold 70 percent of Bosnia, has said he wants to retain 56 percent of the war-torn state. Serbs made up only a third of Bosnia's population when the war began.

Churkin acknowledged it is difficult to find a solution that preserves the independence for which Bosnia and Croatia have paid so dearly, while acceding to the desires of Serbs in both states to have strong ties with Serbia.

But he said that he and Karadžić agreed that there are ways to push the very difficult negotiating process forward.

After meeting with Milošević, the region's main power broker, Churkin flew back to Zagreb for the second time in two days.

Earlier, Croatian Foreign Minister Mate Granic told reporters Bosnian Serbs must join the new Muslim-Croat federation. "There will be no peace without the third party," he said.

But his counterpart in Bosnia's Muslim-dominated government told Croatian TV that Bosnian Serbs would never be allowed to merge with Serbia properly.

"Bosnian Serbs are the aggressors, and we shall refer to them as the aggressors," Irfan Ljubijankić, the Bosnian foreign minister, said.

Two men arrested in assault on Delts

KIM GIFT
Collegian

An investigation is continuing into the alleged assault of two residents at the Delta Tau Delta fraternity house, 1001 Sunset Ave., Monday night, according to Riley County Police.

Dusty LeBlanc and Dale Murphy, both of Manhattan, were arrested Monday night after allegedly using a bottle and a butcher knife to assault John Morris, freshman in pre-health professions, and Chris Brown, sophomore in pre-medicine.

Police say the incident has certain characteristics that could be interpreted as gang related.

Riley County detective Alan Sill, who was assigned to investigate the case, said he will meet today with another officer specializing in gangs to determine if Murphy and LeBlanc are associated with a gang.

The Riley County Police Department received a call at 11:41 p.m. Monday night from Delta Tau Delta, saying someone was trying to enter the house. When the suspects found the door was locked, they began to beat and kick the door, causing $1,150 damage, Lt. Rod Jager, Riley County Police, said.

"When we arrived at the scene, there were 40 to 50 people on the front lawn, and LeBlanc was yelling, cursing and swinging his fists," Jager said.

By the time the police arrived, Murphy had run across the street about 150 yards in order to hide. David Springer, K-State Police officer, said.

Springer found Murphy and escorted him to the fraternity, where Brown identified him as the one who chased him inside the house.

Brown escaped uninjured, but Morris received minor head injuries from the broken bottle and refused treatment, Jager said.

LeBlanc was arrested for aggravated battery, criminal damage to property and resisting arrest, he was released on $3,500 bond. Murphy was arrested for aggravated assault and aggravated burglary, he was released on $2,000 bond.

Police don't know the motivation for the assault, Jager said.

Morris and Brown refused to comment.

► HOUSE APPROVES UNIFORM VEHICLE TAXES

TOPEKA — The House approved legislation Wednesday that would cut property taxes on a majority of the motor vehicles registered.

The bill, passed 76-48, would make the taxation of motorcycles, cars, vans, light trucks and pickups uniform across the state. The owners of more than a million vehicles would pay less, but people in some counties could pay significantly more.

The measure went to the Senate.

The House also approved, 115-8, a bill that changes how the state taxes recreational vehicles and trailers. The changes could cut property taxes by hundreds of dollars for recreational vehicle owners.

The Senate approved a version of the second bill last year, but its version is substantially different.

Both bills are designed to address complaints about the state's vehicle taxes, which are the highest in the nation. The House debated them Tuesday and advanced them to final action.

The first bill inspired more discussion because the overall vehicle taxes in almost half of the state's 105 counties would increase. The bill would make the tax system more fair.

Concessions a possibility if Syria will end boycott

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — With PLO self-rule talks at an impasse, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin held out the prospect of concessions Wednesday if Syrian President Hafez Assad would end his three-week boycott.

President Clinton encouraged the overture. He said he had talked to Assad by telephone a few days ago and is convinced he wants to make peace with Israel.

It could be a chance to rescue the 28-month peace process, which was thrown into disarray with a Jewish extremist's attack Feb. 25 on a Muslim mosque that killed at least 29 at prayer. All Arab delegates quit the talks.

Clinton acknowledged peace was becoming more elusive, and Rabin looked to Damascus to rekindle peace hopes. He tried to smooth the way with conciliatory gestures.

"We will stand ready to do what is required of us if the Syrians are ready to do what is required of them," Rabin said at a joint news conference with President Clinton.

"We know that as we engage in serious and authoritative negotiations, the point will come where painful decisions will have to be made," Rabin said.

On the Palestinian front, though, Rabin stood firm, rejecting demands by PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat for new measures to protect Palestinians in the wake of the massacre in a Muslim mosque in Hebron three weeks ago.

"We don't think it is appropriate to raise new demands after every terrorist attack," Rabin said. "Security is a two-way street."

On the other hand, with Arafat still holding out, Rabin directed his attention to Syria.

"We are ready to negotiate peace with Syria," Rabin said. "There must be give and take on both sides."

Syria is trying to recover the Golan Heights, a strategic enclave from which attacks were launched against Israel before the 1967 Six-Day War. The territory was annexed by Israel and the attacks ceased.

NIT or bust Wildcats looking for redemption

■ The Wildcats will play the Bulldogs at 7 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum.

■ Student tickets are $5 with a valid student ID. Each student may purchase just one ticket.

■ Tickets for the general public are $12.

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

The Wildcats have one more shot. One more chance to make the end of the 1994 season not just one of bitter moments.

K-State will play the Mississippi State Bulldogs today at 7 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum in the first round of the National Invitational Tournament.

Yes, the NIT. Not the NCAA.

"We're glad to be in some type of post-season play this year," Coach Dana Altman said. "It's not the NCAA Tournament, but it's an opportunity to play."

For the second time in three years, the Cats will play in the NIT — an admitted consolation tournament. After a 17-11 year, the Cats were unable to win in the Big Eight Tournament, losing to Kansas 73-52 in the first round.

While Altman said his team has had its share of problems recently, he said it has not lost the will to play.

"We didn't quit. We just haven't played well," Altman said. "We've practiced hard. We just haven't played well the last three or four ballgames. When your confidence is shaken a little bit, then you need something good to happen to pop it back."

With some luck, that something good may take place tonight when the Cats play the Dogs.

Mississippi State is 18-10 on the season and was third in the Western Division of the Southeastern Conference.

That was no easy division. The No. 1 and No. 2 teams are Arkansas and Alabama.

Earlier this season, the Bulldogs defeated Arkansas, 72-71. That win, much like K-State's own 68-64 win against KU, in many ways was the high water mark for the Dogs.

"They've had some impressive wins," Altman said. "Obviously, their biggest one was on Jan. 19, when they beat Arkansas. I thought they were in (the NCAA) with 18 wins."

The Bulldogs' coach agrees.

"I think we deserved to be in the NCAA Tournament," coach Richard Williams said. "We're disappointed we're not there. At the beginning of the season, our goal was to get into post-season play, and that's what we've done."

Two players that the Cats will need to watch are 6-foot-11-inch freshman Erick Dampier and his relief, 6'10" sophomore Bubba Wilson. The two have averaged 18.6 points, 12 rebounds and 3 blocks per game.

"Dampier is big," Altman said. "He's 6'11" and blocks shots just like (KU's Greg) Ostertag. He's not as big. He's thinner and probably a little more athletic. He'll cause us some problems inside, both offensively and defensively."

Going against Dampier is Deryl Cunningham. Cunningham will be playing in his second final home game of his career.

Earlier this season, before the start of the Askia Jones attempts a shot against Kansas' Steve Woodberry in K-State's 73-52 loss in the Big Eight tourney. Kansas plays Tenn.-Chattanooga tonight in the NCAA Tournament.

Missouri-K-State game, the four senior Cats, Cunningham, Anthony Beane, Askia Jones and Ron Lucas, were congratulated for their contributions to K-State.

Now in his last home appearance, Cunningham said he hopes to make up for some of the disappointments of this season.

"It's tough because we had some goals at the beginning of the year," Cunningham said. "Anthony and I were talking all year about making the NCAA Tournament and what we would do. None of it has happened, so it's been tough. We still need to play hard and try to win it. You can still prove something."

Cunningham is averaging 10.8 points and 9.3 rebounds per game and is coming off a career-high 23 points against the Jayhawks in the Big Eight Tournament.

K-State went to the first round of the NCAA Tournament last year, so playing in the NIT this season was not a goal.

Altman, however, said he believes any post-season play can help a team.

"I want Ski Jones to walk off the floor knowing he played his last game well, and I hope that's in New York City two weeks from now. I would wish Deryl Cunningham could walk off the floor with his head up saying, 'Hey, I played as well as I could to end my career,'" he said.

The timing of the game does leave something to be desired, Altman said.

"Our spring break starts Friday, but as a general rule, our students like to leave yesterday," Altman said Tuesday. "So, I'm hoping the instructors give a few tests on Friday and make some of those students stay around."

ANYBODY WANT SOME FREE NIT TICKETS?

Area businesspeople are gathering together to buy NIT tickets for the game against Mississippi State on Thursday night.

COLUMN

Deep thoughts for sports readers

It's almost spring break, and I'll admit it.

I don't feel like writing anything too heavy, and I'm sure after a week of tests, you don't feel like reading anything heavy, either.

So, let's just call today's column of gripes and happy thoughts "Sports Lite."

Less filling, tastes great.

I've been sick the past week and a half, and when I'm sick, I'm grumpy.

One night when I was especially grumpy and drugged up on antibiotics, I watched ESPN until the wee hours of the morning.

That made me think about all the events in the sports world, both national and local, that get me all fired up. So, let the griping begin.

1. Tonya and Nancy. Does anyone really care anymore?

2. Hearing daily reports on Michael Jordan's progress at spring training. So far in exhibition play, the man is 0 for about 20 against minor-league pitching. Better stick with those McDonald's commercials, Mike.

3. The hype over a women's baseball team, the Colorado Silver Bullets. Call me old-fashioned, but baseball is about "The Boys of Summer," not the girls.

4. Out-of-control Altman bashing. The man doesn't have the best season, and angry radio call-in mobs want to hang him. So K-State didn't make it to the NCAA Tournament; it's not the end of the world. Lighten up!

5. Vince Coleman ending up with the Royals. I hear manager Hal McRae is rooming with Coleman on the Fourth of July.

6. Greg Ostertag. In the final minute of the KU-K-State game in Manhattan, Ostertag gave KU Coach Roy Williams a big noogie. Roy wasn't too happy, to say the least. Get a clue, Greg.

7. Sure, winning the Copper Bowl was incredible, but how long are we going to keep milking it for all it's worth? What's next — "The Copper Bowl Burrito?" "Tucson Tators?" "The Snyder Shake?"

8. George Brett getting married. Sure, it happened more than two years ago, but I still can't get over it.

Since I believe in journalistic balance, and I'm feeling a lot cheerier these days, I also compiled a list of "happy thoughts" that are sure to just brighten your whole day.

1. The cancer that doctors found in the Phillies' John Kruk apparently hasn't spread, and Kruk should be able to play baseball for years to come.

2. Dennis Hopper's "Bad things, man," Nike commercials.

3. The foul-ball sound effects at K-State baseball games. The dog kennel and whip-cracking ones are the best.

4. Indiana's Bobby Knight at tournament time. If he can kick his son during a game, what other stunt is he capable of?

5. Close-up shots of the Phillies' Lenny Dykstra with tobacco juice dribbling down his chin. It's a true "Kodiak" moment.

6. The movies "Bull Durham" and "Major League." Classics.

7. My baby brother is the Hoop Shoot Champion of northwest Kansas.

8. Iowa State's Johnny Orr is still coaching, and he still says, "Whoeeee, baby!" after a big victory.

9. They're filming "Major League II" in Baltimore. (That one's for you, boss).

10. Andre Coleman's "Da da da, Da da da" plug for ESPN after winning the Copper Bowl.

11. Billy Tubbs' technical fest against the Cats in Bramlage. Sit down, Billy.

12. Northwestern beats Michigan. Go figure.

13. K-State steals Bill Snyder, Max Urick and Mitch Running from the state of Iowa. Makes me proud to be an Iowan!

14. That "You're Dr. Galakawiecz?" "Why, yes I am." Bud beer commercial. It has nothing to do with sports — it's just cool.

Have a super spring break.

In the words of the late K-State broadcaster Dev Nelson, "I'm rounding third and headin' home!"

► LAX TEAM DEFEATS WSU IN SUDDEN DEATH

The K-State men's lacrosse team defeated Wichita State 10-9 in sudden-death overtime last Sunday.

"We did not control the ball in the first quarter, but we started picking it up towards the end of the first half," Kurt Thurman, K-State men's lacrosse coach, said.

WSU started strong, scoring five goals in the first quarter, and led the Wildcats 8-4 at halftime.

But K-State came out strong in the third quarter, scoring one goal and holding WSU scoreless.

The Cats scored three goals in the last three minutes. The tying goal was scored with nine seconds remaining.

The squirrels and birds occupying the trees beyond the outfield fence of Frank Myers Field should be on the lookout for white, round objects directed at them this afternoon.

A home-run fest is expected between the No. 13 Oklahoma State and K-State baseball teams in a doubleheader starting at 1 p.m. The Cowboys enter the game with an 11-5 record, while K-State comes in with a 9-10 record.

With wind gusts of 25 miles per hour expected to be blowing toward the outfield, the batters have the possibility of hitting balls out of the park.

"We already contacted the humane society and put out a squirrel alert out on the trees," K-State coach Mike Clark said.

"It's the fun part of Frank Myers Field. Just like Wrigley Field (where the Chicago Cubs play), you wake up and see the direction of wind blowing before a game."

Even though the Cowboys were batting .172 before their game at Arkansas last Tuesday, Clark said they can score a lot of runs.

"They are a good club, offensively," Clark said. "They'll be a good challenge for us. We can't sit back and wait for them to make something happen."

"If we can get ahead and throw off-speed and breaking pitches, it can cause them some problems historical-

SPECIAL PROMOS FOR GAME DAY

■ Area businesses have purchased NIT tickets for the K-State game against Mississippi State tonight. The tickets will be distributed at the baseball game to the students on a first-come, first-serve basis.

■ The first 150 people in the gates will receive a coupon for a free Shamrock Shake at McDonald's. Every person whose first, middle or last name is Patrick will be admitted free into the doubleheader.

■ Streetside Records will give $3 off any purchase to the winner who can name a portion of song during the "Name That Tune?" inning.

■ Blockbuster Video begins "What's That Movie?" inning. The winner who can correctly name a portion of a movie will receive a free video.

■ Carlos O' Kelly's will hand a $10 gift certificate to the winner of the Bat Race — where contestants run around a bat 10 times and race to a certain base.

ly. It gets them off balance. If we can do that, we'll be fine."

Rob Merriman (2-2) goes to the mound in the first game, and Jon Oiseth (2-2) will start in the second game. Merriman said he isn't bothered by Oklahoma State's bats.

"I haven't been consistent this year," Merriman said, "but I'm not scared of them. I did pretty well against them last year (losing 5-3 and 5-4 to the Cowboys)."

Merriman said he isn't worried about the wind.

"I don't care about the wind, just as long it isn't cold," he said.

The Cowboy offense consists of outfielders Thad Chaddrick and Peter Prodanov.

Chaddrick's batting average is .371 with 16 runs batted in and eight doubles, but he has batted .182 in the past six games.

Prodanov has the hottest Cowboy bat with six hits for his past 13 at-bats — a .462 average. This season, Prodanov has two home runs, 13 walks and 12 RBI.

Despite losing seven of its last eight games to Wichita State, Southern California and Texas A&M in the last 10 days, Clark said his team needs to play calmly on the field.

"Against the caliber of teams we are playing, we've got to execute our pitches better," Clark said.

"We are a young team, and we've got to try to stay patient. We can't overlook the little things offensively and defensively."

Gorelick to assist Reno if confirmed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's nominee for the Justice Department's No. 2 post said Wednesday she would be a right hand to Attorney General Janet Reno in managing a department that has been battered by resignations of top officials.

Jamie S. Gorelick, now the Pentagon's top lawyer, took pains at her confirmation hearing to assure the Senate Judiciary Committee that she would be different from the previous deputy attorney general, Philip Heymann.

Heymann quit in late January because of management differences with Reno. The department's No. 3 official, Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell, resigned Monday, citing a controversy over private issues involving his work at the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, Ark., where Hubbell and Hillary Rodham Clinton were partners.

Partners of the Rose firm have tentatively decided to file an ethics complaint against Hubbell, according to news reports.

Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, the Judiciary Committee's ranking Republican, praised Gorelick but said he was concerned that the Clinton Justice Department still has not settled down after more than a year in office.

Gorelick, whose confirmation is expected, said she has discussed her management role with Reno and that there would be a different reality at the department.

"The attorney general very much wants help in managing the department. She wants a right hand in managing the department," Gorelick said. She described her role, if she is confirmed, as chief operating officer.

Gorelick said she met recently with police officials and prosecutors from the federal, state and local levels, and she promised "they would have my full support in getting them the resources and tools they need."

She also said she personally opposes the death penalty but will have no trouble enforcing it in the appropriate circumstances.

Committee Chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., blasted Heymann's performance as deputy attorney general and asked Gorelick whether she would participate actively in policymaking and the legislative process.

Election opposition will be stopped

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MMABATHO, South Africa — The African National Congress and the government will act against anyone who stands in the way of South Africa's first all-race election, Nelson Mandela told cheering crowds Tuesday.

Mandela was kicking off the ANC's campaign in Bophuthatswana, where the South African government and the ANC worked together last week to oust homeland leader Lucas Mangope, who had opposed the vote.

About 35,000 jubilant supporters cheered Mandela at Independence Stadium, one of the many extravagant government structures on which Mangope had spent money at the expense of his impoverished people.

The crowd was the largest ever to attend a political rally at the stadium, showing the ANC enjoys much broader support in Mmabatho, the homeland capital, than Mangope ever had.

"My mere presence here is proof that in Bophuthatswana there is now free political activity," Mandela said. Throughout the day, ANC banners had been posted around Mmabatho, the first campaign posters to appear in the region.

Mandela said Mangope's ouster should send a signal to others opposing the April 26-28 vote that the ANC and the South African government were determined to ensure free campaigning and voting nationwide.

The Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party has threatened to disrupt the election unless it gets an autonomous or sovereign Zulu kingdom. On Sunday, 3,000 Inkatha members prevented the ANC from holding a rally at a sports stadium in Natal Province, which includes the traditional Zulu homeland.

Mandela announced he would meet Zulu King Goodwill Zwelithini during a campaign swing through Natal on Friday.

"The demand for free and fair elections is very strong, and I think what happened here is going to send a message to other areas," Mandela told reporters.

Without singling out any particular group or region, he said acting to ensure a free vote may require measures that are not necessarily similar to measures that were taken in Bophuthatswana.

"My mere presence here is proof that in Bophuthatswana there is now free political activity."

Farrakhan files libel suit against N.Y. Post

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan filed a $4.4 billion libel lawsuit against the New York Post, which last week quoted Malcolm X's widow as accusing Farrakhan of complicity in her husband's murder.

The lawsuit, filed Tuesday in Manhattan's state Supreme Court, said the Post printed Betty Shabazz's "false and defamatory statement" in a March 12 column by Jack Newfield headlined, "Widow Pins Malcolm X Murder on Farrakhan."

The Post said the lawsuit was without merit.

Newfield's column quoted remarks Shabazz made on a WNBC-TV show broadcast Sunday. She was asked, "Do you think that Louis Farrakhan had anything to do with the death of your husband?" Malcolm X was assassinated in 1965.

Shabazz said, "Yes. Nobody kept it a secret. It was a badge of honor. Everybody talked about it. Yes."

She has not returned repeated phone calls placed by the Associated Press seeking elaboration.

Newfield's column, court papers said, exposed Minister Farrakhan to physical harm and even death by inciting people who believe the statements to kill Farrakhan.

Farrakhan's court papers also name as defendants Post Editor in Chief Rupert Murdoch, publisher Martin Singerman and Newfield.

Ava Muhammad, a lawyer for the Nation of Islam, said the published statements falsely attribute a crime to Farrakhan and injure his reputation and effectiveness as a minister.

Singerman said in a statement, "The suit is totally without merit. The Post is in the business of reporting the news accurately and openly. That is precisely what we did in this case."

Muhammad said Shabazz was not sued because she did not actually characterize Farrakhan as a murderer, and she spoke as a widow who is still grieving her loss.

"Others are manipulating that grief for their own ends," Muhammad said. "We feel she is a victim, as much as we are, of the New York Post."

Three men, including two members of the Nation of Islam, were sentenced to life in prison for shooting Malcolm X on Feb. 21, 1965, in New York City.

While denying involvement in the murder, Farrakhan has said that Malcolm was marked for death when he began to publicly criticize Nation of Islam founder Elijah Muhammad.

"When Malcolm X stepped across that line, death was inevitable," Farrakhan said in a speech last year.

Campus-wide career fair set

LORI DAVIS
Collegian

If you plan to attend several campus career fairs next year, you probably won't be able to.

All colleges are going to combine their efforts for an all-University career fair on September 29.

A steering committee consisting of faculty and student representatives has been working with Career and Employment Services to plan the fair.

About 150 to 200 employers are expected to attend, John Riley, assistant director of agriculture academic programs and committee member, said.

He said has not heard of any other university that has had a fair as large.

Having one university fair would benefit both students and employers, Jim Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, said.

Both students and employers who hire graduates from more than one college could meet at one location instead of having to attend several fairs, he said.

"There are several universities that have tried this and it has been successful," Lory Eggers, committee member and senior in political science, said.

"Hopefully this might get more people interested in looking for jobs earlier," she said.

Riley said he believed the success of the fair will ultimately depend on the student participation.

"If few students attend the fair, then employers may lose interest in attending future fairs."

It will be vital for students of all class levels to attend the fair, Riley said, not just juniors and seniors.

"The companies want to see freshman and sophomore students as well," Riley said.

Information about summer jobs and internships will also be available.

"Students will have more exposure to companies," Riley said. "They certainly could make some excellent contacts."

Job search computerized

TED ELLEY
Collegian

K-State students who take advantage of new computer software at Career and Employment Services have thousands of job opportunities at their fingertips.

1st Place!, a new program installed in August 1993, has improved the efficiency of students' job searches by offering more services in less time.

"1st Place! will save students a lot of time and will help us provide greater support and additional resources to them in their job searches," Jim Akin, director of Career and Employment Services, said.

The process of becoming involved in 1st Place! is simple, he said.

The only cost of the 1st Place! program is the initial purchase of a $5 computer disc at Career and Employment Services in Holtz Hall.

Students must then enter all relevant employment information into the disc and return it to Holtz.

"At the moment you bring the disc back, you're in the system," Akin said. "Before, with the data sheet, our secretaries had to make judgments about length and things like that when they were typing it in, but 1st Place! gives students more control over their situations."

If information needs to be added or altered, it is simply changed on the disc and upgraded on the program at no additional charge, he said.

There are more than 2,300 people utilizing 1st Place! at K-State, all of whom now have access to information about job openings in 9,106 companies nationwide, Akin said.

In addition, information about registered students is sent to these companies when job opportunities arise.

VITA offers tax assistance

JODI WOLTERS
Collegian

Students looking for help in filling out their tax forms do not have to look any further than Holton Hall 001.

VITA, or Volunteer Income Tax Assistance, is a group geared toward helping people fill out their income-tax forms.

VITA has been a statewide program for about 25 years and has been on campus for 10 years.

NEWS

USE

In Manhattan, the group is sponsored by accounting honorary Beta Alpha Psi.

"VITA is primarily a statewide program sponsored by the Internal Revenue Service, and there are at least three sites here in Manhattan. It is being run by K-State students," David Blood, senior in accounting and VITA volunteer, said.

"This is the fourth year I have been involved in it. I got involved in it because I was interested in taxes, and I could help people that needed it desperately," Scott Walker, graduate student in accounting, said.

Anyone can come in and get help from VITA, especially those who cannot afford a tax preparer.

"Our goal is to try to provide tax advice to anyone who cannot afford to go to a tax preparer," Johanna Lyle, instructor in accounting and adviser for Beta Alpha Psi, said.

VITA volunteers are all K-State students ranging from freshmen to graduate students who must go through training before they can work at VITA.

"We spend one day training. In the morning, we had an IRS agent from Salina, and in the afternoon, we had a representative from a local firm. The IRS agent taught us about federal forms, and the other lady taught us about Kansas forms," Kimba Sjogren, junior in accounting and finance, said.

Walker said he suggests a few things to people who want to use VITA.

"The most important thing is that it is a great value to our volunteers if our clients have all their documents together. Also, it is beneficial to have the previous year's returns."

TAX HELP

VITA is located in Holton Hall 001 and at the Manhattan Public Library from 4 to 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday and from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. on Saturdays at the International Student Center until April 14.

April 15 is the last day to pay taxes without penalty.

Campus police provide lost and found service

MELISSA REYNOLDS
Collegian

Students who have lost items like eyeglasses, rings, identification cards and bikes may find their belongings at the K-State police station.

The station's lost and found has been under the supervision of Tim Schrag, campus police officer, for three weeks.

Schrag said he is surprised by the honesty of the people who bring in lost items, such as credit cards or wallets with money left in them.

"It is surprising being in a business with so much theft. It's nice to see the things come in and know there's still honest people out there," Schrag said.

Most of what is turned in to the lost and found are driver's licenses and K-State IDs.

Heidi Kuykendall, junior in psychology, lost her student ID at Justin Hall. The campus police left a message on her answering machine to notify her that it had been found.

"I definitely think the lost and found is a good idea, because I didn't even know my ID was gone until they called me," she said.

After notification of lost identification cards, the owner has one week to claim them.

At the end of the week, driver's licenses are turned into the Department of Revenue, and student IDs are turned into Willard Hall.

Many of the items turned into the lost and found are brought in at the end of the semester by janitors who have cleaned out the buildings.

When something is turned in to the lost and found, a record is made, and the item is stored in a file cabinet.

The time limit for the lost items to be kept is defined by the found-property statute.

According to the statute, after people are notified of the lost property, they have 30 days in which they must pick it up. The property can then be disposed of if it is not claimed within another 60 days.

"A lot of items are never returned because no one checks on them. They are disposed of at an auction at the end of the year," Schrag said.

A professional auctioneer is hired to handle the finances and run the auction, which takes place outside the campus police station.

A few unusual items are occasionally turned into the lost and found, Schrag said.

"One of the most unusual items that was turned in was a box of cassette tapes. I don't know why no one would claim these," Schrag said.

Another odd item found was a fire extinguisher.

Larry Zentz, K-State fire safety officer, was notified of a K-State fire extinguisher that had been stolen from Ackert Hall.

Someone had taken the extinguisher, discharged it and disposed of it at Tuttle Creek State Park, he said.

PROPOSED PLANS FOR UNION EXPANSION

K-STATE UNION EXPANSION — FIRST FLOOR

UNION BOOKSTORE

Under the proposed Union expansion plan, the entire Union bookstore would be located on the first floor. Currently, only textbooks are sold on that level.

GROUND FLOOR

The space which is currently the bookstore on the ground floor could be converted into a retail area containing a clothing store, a music store, fast food outlets, etc.

BRIDGE

A bridge would enable students to cross over the courtyard from the Union stateroom to the T.V. room.

STEPHANIE FUQUA/Collegian

K-STATE UNION EXPANSION — SECOND FLOOR

ENHANCEMENT FEE

During the April 12-13 elections, students will have an opportunity to vote on an enhancement fee of $25 for full-time students and $12.50 for part-time students over the next 26 years.

EXISTING PLAN

The existing floor plan has meeting rooms, the ballroom, restrooms, offices and food service.

PROPOSED PLAN

The proposed new floor plan would expand the food service area by 20,00 square feet. The existing floor plan would not change significantly.

concern, Sheehan said. "It's more of the principle of the thing, not the money," he said. "It's a taxation-type process instead of a free enterprise one. The University should be able to sustain it without taxing students additionally."

Others said they feel the $25 fee for the next 26 years would be feasible considering the improvements that would be made.

"It's reasonable, considering what they're going to do," Matt Gertz, junior in mechanical engineering, said. "It's the center of the campus. I'm really impressed with the artistic renderings. It lends a modern look to the Union."

However, Gertz said he was disappointed that he wouldn't be able to see the changes that his money would provide.

The remodeling is worthwhile, Laura Sager, senior in German, said.

"I think they (the changes) are needed, if just to make it more attractive to students," Sager said. "A lot of people use the Union. It's worth it. This place is for the students."

The issue is not clear-cut for everyone, though. Tami Ford, junior in business management and print journalism, said she had both positive and negative aspects about the expansion.

"I think it's a neat idea with everything they plan to do and the potential for all the students to come in," Ford said.

"But for me, I don't live on campus. I commute back and forth, and I wouldn't get a chance to use it as often as a student who lives here."

The proposed $25 fee also worries her, she said.

"With tuition always increasing, extra fees are a big concern."

Ford said students would probably wind up paying for the expansion anyway.

"We're not the only students that are going to be paying for it," Ford said. "We've got to look at future students, five or 10 years down the road. We have to consider what their needs will be and what their wants will be, too. We have got to keep updating the Union for them."

Judge rules in favor of American woman

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — The first major sex harassment ruling at the United Nations has favored an American woman over her powerful Argentine superior, divided U.N. employees and raised the issue of U.N. gag orders and secrecy.

A judge from Ireland's Supreme Court, appointed by Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, ruled in January after a closed hearing that the woman had been assaulted and harassed. The judge's report is secret and the principals are forbidden by Boutros-Ghali from speaking about it.

But in the report, obtained by the Associated Press, Justice Mella Carroll said, "All in all, I am satisfied that there is clear and convincing evidence that Mr. Luis Maria Gomez assaulted Ms. Catherine Claxton on March 2, 1988, as alleged."

Claxton accused Gomez of grabbing her in his office and says he obstructed her promotion.

Neither party would discuss the case. Gomez was unavailable and Claxton said she feared disciplinary action if she went public.

The case, a kind of David-and-Goliath contest going back to 1988, has prompted allegations of weak moral character, abuse of power and sexual misconduct in an institution where most U.S. law does not apply.

There's even a controversial Hindu sect, a meditation group with U.N. employee members, including Claxton. More intriguing, as the case unfolded, U.N. bodyguards were assigned to her after a gunshot was fired into a diner where she was sitting near the United Nations.

On one side is a formidable Latin bureaucrat, Gomez, a 28-year U.N. veteran, an undersecretary-general known for his competence and dedication, his connections and, many say, his womanizing.

At one time he was the powerful U.N. controller. Last month, because of the ruling against him, he resigned from the No. 2 post at the U.N. Development Program.

His high-profile lawyer, Alan Dershowitz, ridicules the ruling, speaks of a "kangaroo court" and says U.N. proceedings "give new meaning to Kafka."

The United Nations, he said in a telephone interview, is a world unto itself, making up its rules as it goes along. "In a million years, no jury would convict Gomez. We all become victims if he is treated unfairly and the U.N. is deprived of his talent."

"Everything that is normally available in an adversarial process is missing here," Dershowitz said, referring to the closed hearing.

He cites lack of oath, subpoena power, penalties for perjury and rules on hearsay evidence.

St. Pat's Day celebration Saturday

PHIL SPIKER

Collegian

This weekend, prizes will be handed out, and races will be run in celebration of St. Patrick's Day.

Saturday is the annual St. Patrick's Day parade and road race in Aggieville.

A contest called "Find a Pot of Gold" will start the events at 10 a.m.

Nineteen merchants are sponsoring a contest, with each merchant donating a prize that will be drawn for later in the afternoon, Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said.

To enter the contest, participants must go to the K-Rock booth behind the old Kite's building.

After receiving the form, the participants must go to the 19 businesses and find the pot-of-gold poster in participating stores.

When participants find the poster, they can get their forms stamped. After receiving 19 stamps, participants can return cards to the K-Rock booth before the 2 p.m. deadline.

The drawing will begin at 2 p.m. and continue until all 19 prizes are given out, Sieben said.

A parade, organized by the Aggieville merchants, will begin at 11 a.m.

Former Gov. John Carlin, who is running for the U.S. House of Representatives, will be appearing in the parade.

"Having former governor Carlin in the parade is a big plus," Sieben said. "This will be the second stop of the 27-town tour."

Three races and a walking seminar also will take place Saturday.

"The races will have an $8 fee, but you receive a free St. Patty's day T-shirt for participating in the run," Janet Daniels, marketing director for the K-State Bank, said.

Since the walk was added five years ago, attendance for the races has been increasing, Daniels said.

SNAKES, SHAMROCKS AND SILLINESS: THE REAL ST. PATRICK'S DAY LEGEND

Fact:

- St. Patrick is the patron saint of Ireland. He was born in Britain in A.D. 389.
- St. Patrick was a slave in Ireland, and returned there after escaping to convert the island.
- St. Patrick's Day is a religious holiday in Ireland, much like Christmas or Easter.

Myth:

- The Irish drink green beer.
- The Irish wear shamrocks. (St. Patrick actually used the three leaves of the shamrock to explain the Trinity.)
- St. Patrick drove all the snakes from Ireland. (Biologists tell us that there were no snakes in Ireland at the time anyway.)

C'EST LA VIE - DRINK FOR YOUR HEALTH

Scientists have always puzzled at how the French can eat such rich foods and yet only have as much heart disease as Americans. They have now found a conclusive answer: it's the red wine.
 Red wine, but not white, has been shown to reduce the tendency of blood to clot. A biological component in red wine overrides the fatty meals the French eat every day.

"The Brian Setzer Orchestra"
 Hollywood Records

Brian Setzer, the former Stray Cats guitarist/vocalist, has assembled a mix of big-band standards to back his compositions of rockabilly-driven guitar.

This album has mounds of potential, but all Setzer delivers is a poor Harry Connick Jr. imitation. The guitar arrangements just seem awkward when juxtaposed with the big-band sounds.

Strong songs include, "Your True Love" and "Drink That Bottle Down," but the album hits bottom on a soulless cover of the theme from "Route 66."

"Magnified"
 Failure
 Slash Records

"Magnified" is the second album from this Los Angeles hard-rock duo. The album is simply generic guitar-driven rock, nothing very original.

Most songs sound the same — experimental guitar parts built on the same, tired drum pattern. The guitar elements seem as if they have been dredged up from the bottom of a muddy lake.

This album should come packaged with aspirin.

Failure's lyrics focus on the absurd, ranging from lighting firecrackers inside of dead birds to hallucinations of giant animals.

"The Latin Playboys" Slash/Warner Brothers.

David Hidalgo and Louie Pérez of Los Lobos often get together with a couple of old friends and play music.

Some of the music produced at these sessions was deemed to be too experimental for a Los Lobos record, thus the Latin Playboys were created.

Eclectic percussion with thick, fuzzy guitar define the Playboys' sound, making for a fun, sometimes jazzy mix. The album is pleasantly unpolished, concentrating on long, melodic jams and improvisational lyrics. The Playboys come across like a flamenco band on peyote, showing what these artists can do when unrestrained by any particular genre of music.

"Offering"
 Animal Bag
 Stardog/Mercury

Given the recent trendiness of the "acoustic EP," everybody is getting in on the bandwagon of the so-called "unplugged sound." North Carolina's Animal Bag recorded this seven-song EP on a recent break from touring behind their self-titled release of last year. The music here is adequate, but it is not going to change the world.

DEAR CASSIE,

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Readers fear for Garth Brooks' safety

Dear Cassandra,
 We're concerned about our friend. On the surface, she is a sweet, innocent, straight-A student. But we've noticed she has some strange habits.

She is completely obsessed with Garth Brooks, raccoons and popcorn. Is there a deeper psychological connection here? She calls or writes Garth Brooks daily and is often seen wandering around her home calling out the name of her long-lost pet raccoon. She also has an uncontrollable appetite for popcorn. However, what worries us most is her hobby of throwing sharp-pointed objects. We're concerned about the safety of her, us and especially Garth Brooks. What can we do to help her?

Signed,
 Fearing for our safety

Dear Fearing,
 I don't think your friend's obsession with popcorn, raccoons and throwing sharp-pointed objects is something you should be concerned about.

Many people have similar fascinations.

You do have reason to believe there is a deeper psychological connection with her obsession with Garth Brooks. You must see to it that this fascination ends — and quickly. One cure, which has worked well for many Garth junkies across the country, is to play polka music while she is sleeping for about a week. This music will stick to her subconscious and shift her obsession from the "Shameless" country singer to this hip style of music.

SPEND AN EVENING WITH

OSCAR

BY TRENT FRAGER

Monday is the exciting, star-studded, flashy Oscar gala, when Hollywood honors the best in big-screen entertainment by way of seemingly endless categories.

Although predicting the winners this year seems easy, there are always a few surprises at the actual ceremony. As long as this is true, Oscar speculation won't die.

Here is a look at this year's nominees in the six major categories:

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Leonardo DiCaprio, "What's Eating Gilbert Grape"
Ralph Fiennes, "Schindler's List"
Tommy Lee Jones, "The Fugitive"
John Malkovich, "In the Line of Fire"
Pete Postlethwaite, "In the Name of the Father"

Certainly it was Pete Postlethwaite's nomination in this category that threw film-spectating Oscar speculators for a curve. He is relatively unknown to mainstream film-goers, which is why he is least likely to win. Avid Oscar-followers and movie critics across the board will agree that the nomination of Postlethwaite took voting support away from other likely candidates, including Jeff Daniels ("Gettysburg").

Traditionally, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has failed to recognize young talent, which makes 19-year-old Leonardo DiCaprio an outcast for this award as well.

Ralph Fiennes was very good in "Schindler's List," the most critically acclaimed movie of the year. But if there is to be any balance at all in the night's awards, voters may rather the film win in one or two more significant, high-profile categories.

This leaves John Malkovich and Tommy Lee Jones. First of all, Malkovich's performance as a psychotic killer was terrifying and well received by the many critics and viewers who endorsed the quality of "In the Line of Fire.

But it is also noteworthy that Tommy Lee Jones already took home the Golden Globe for his role in "The Fugitive."

Even though Oscar tends to forget its children of summer, and "Fire" and "Fugitive" were both blockbuster summer releases, the Golden Globes generally have always foreshadowed the outcomes on Oscar night. Monday will be Jones' night.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Holly Hunter, "The Firm"
Anna Paquin, "The Piano"
Rosie Perez, "Fearless"
Winona Ryder, "The Age of Innocence"
Emma Thompson, "In the Name of the Father"

Both Holly Hunter and Emma Thompson are up for this award and a Best Actress Oscar later in the evening. But neither is realistically going to win both. In fact, one of them won't win either.

Last year, Thompson deservedly won virtually every award possible for her performance in "Howards End." She won the Oscar, too, and this year, Thompson is heavily honored for "The Remains of the Day" and "In the Name of the Father."

What is baffling is why director Jim Sheridan limited her role in "Father" to such a trivial and superficial almost-cameo. What we saw of Thompson in the film was terrific, but she was allotted so very little time to develop her character.

By contrast, Hunter was a little too developed in "The Firm," to the point she was little more than an exaggerated caricature of a bimbo secretary. Oscar may love quirkiness, and this role was quirky, but it also loves balance. There will be something better for her later.

As for Anna Paquin, she is too young. Recall the tradition of the academy to overlook young talent when handing out awards, even if the nomination for the 11-year-old was good P.R.

This puts Winona up against Rosie. It is very tough to call. There are positive things to say about both.

Ryder was awarded the Golden Globe for Best

Supporting Actress. This could make Ryder an instant favorite, in addition to the fact she is more popular and more famous than Perez and especially known for being unconventional — er, quirky.

But did anyone see Perez's performance in "Fearless"? Of course not — the film never reached a mass audience. Yet Perez, as a guilt-ridden mother who has lost her baby in a tragic plane crash, gives a very emotionally moving performance. If any one nominated actor is Oscar-worthy this year, it's Perez.

BEST ACTOR

Daniel Day-Lewis, "In the Name of the Father"
Liam Neeson, "Schindler's List"
Tom Hanks, "Philadelphia"
Anthony Hopkins, "The Remains of the Day"
Liam Neeson, "Schindler's List"

This is a very competitive list of nominees because all of these five men deserve Oscar nominations. Unfortunately, unless there is a tie, only one will take it home.

Fishburne was the only surprise nominee for Best Actor. Many critics believed Harrison Ford ("The Fugitive") would be nominated instead. But this alone doesn't eliminate Fishburne from the award.

What instead excludes a whopping four of the five nominees for this award is the raging stardom of one extremely popular actor, Tom Hanks, who did something in a role the rest of them didn't — he made the transition from comedy to drama. And he passed with flying colors, a Golden Globe and (drum roll) the strongest potential to be this year's Best Actor.

BEST ACTRESS

Angela Bassett, "What's Love Got to Do With It"
Stockard Channing, "Sol Degree of Separation"
Holly Hunter, "The Firm"
Emma Thompson, "The Remains of the Day"
Debra Winger, "Shadowlands"

As mentioned, it is probably too soon for the academy to present Emma Thompson with another Best Actress Oscar. But this doesn't matter, even if it were not so, because there is only one performance from an actress that has been so prestigiously honored by an overwhelming majority of critics and awards groups.

It is Holly Hunter, who, as a mute, has everybody talking. She is the safest bet by far.

BEST DIRECTOR

Robert Altman, "Short Cuts"
Jane Campion, "The Piano"
James Ivory, "The Remains of the Day"
Jim Sheridan, "In the Name of the Father"
Steven Spielberg, "Schindler's List"

Robert Altman, despite his diligence, cannot ever seem to win. Last year, the academy gave him a well-earned nomination for directing "The Player" but failed to nominate the scathing, satirical film for best picture. Altman didn't win, and he won't win this year for "Short Cuts" because of the same mentality. It is next to impossible to win a directing Oscar for a film not nominated for Best Picture, and vice versa. This hasn't happened since the 1920s.

Jim Sheridan directed "In the Name of the Father," a controversial Irish film about the absurd abuse of law in 1970s England. Sheridan is perhaps too low-profile to win such a high-profile award.

James Ivory also won't win because it is too soon for him to be up again. For the sake of balance (again), shouldn't the academy give the award to someone who has received little or no Oscar attention?

This creates a possible stalemate for the academy voters. Jane Campion ("The Piano") is only the second woman ever nominated for a Best-Director Oscar. Wouldn't it be great for the academy to create a little history of its own on Monday?

Or ... should the Oscar go to a man who has created "Schindler's List," one of the most significant historical dramas ever, who is consistently ignored for this prestigious award and who hasn't been nominated for Best Director since "E.T."?

The academy will finally do the kinder, gentler thing and give Spielberg the award he deserves. And the audience will rise in clearly supportive ovation. Just you wait.

Supporting roles can mean stardom

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The Academy Awards were 9 years old before the Board of Governors decided in 1936 to add another category to honor the character actors whose talents often went unsung despite their efforts to make stars look good.

In the early years, the supporting actor Oscar was presented to film veterans such as Walter Brennan (dime times), Thomas Mitchell, Donald Crisp, Charles Coburn, Barry Fitzgerald and Edmund Gwenn.

In later years, the voters recognized younger supporting players as well, and Oscars often promoted winners to star status or revived faded careers. Among the recipients: Frank Sinatra, Jack Lemmon, Anthony Quinn, Walter Matthau, Robert De Niro, Timothy Hutton and Denzel Washington.

This year's race for supporting actor includes two young, relatively unknown performers who exhibit a potential for stardom: Leonardo DiCaprio and Ralph Fiennes. Producers already have signed them for important roles.

Here's a look at the nominees.

Leonardo DiCaprio, 19, is one of the youngest actors to receive academy recognition.

He was nominated for his role as Gilbert Grape's afflicted younger brother in "What's Eating Gilbert Grape."

A Los Angeles native, DiCaprio started acting at 14 in commercials and educational films.

He first drew notice as the homeless boy Luke in the last season of the TV series "Growing Pains."

The actor's handsome, brooding face became better known in 1993 with "This Boy's Life," which starred De Niro and Ellen Barkin, and with the limited release of "Gilbert Grape."

The actor told the Los Angeles Times he has no concern about seeking older parts: "I'm young, young-looking and young at heart. It's best for me to capitalize on that."

Portraying sheer evil has proved the stepping stone for many a stellar career, and it may turn the trick for British stage actor Ralph Fiennes (he pronounces it Rafe Fines) of "Schindler's List."

He was nominated for his chilling portrayal of the concentration camp commander with the pastime of shooting down prisoners at random.

After graduating from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts, Fiennes acted in repertory and at the Royal Shakespeare Company.

He appeared on television in "Prime Suspect" and "A Dangerous Man: Lawrence After Arabia." He starred as Heathcliff in a latter-day film of "Wuthering Heights."

About his role as the casual murderer Amon Goeth, the actor commented:

"We have to sidestep being horrified. That was stage-one as you read the script."

You say, "My God, this man is horrendous." But you actually have to get that out of the way and find out why this man does what he does; what does he think he's doing?"

A Harvard University graduate who roomed with Vice President Albert Gore, Tommy Lee Jones of "The Fugitive" never lost the twang and the attitude of his native Texas.

His craggy face and individualism made him ideal casting in television for "The Amazing Howard Hughes," "The Executioner's Song" (as the executed Gary Gilmore) and "Lonesome Dove."

Jones started in films as Ryan O'Neal's roommate in "Love Story" and moved on to grittier roles in "Coal Miner's Daughter," "Jackson County Jail," "Under Siege," "Rolling Thunder," "Heaven and Earth" and "JFK," which brought his first academy nomination.

"The Fugitive" cast Jones as the demonic pursuer of Harrison Ford, accused of murdering his wife.

"This is Tommy's year," said producer Arnold Kopelson, who worked with Jones on "The Fugitive" and earlier on "Fire Birds." "I think he's being recognized for the first time as a leading actor."

Oliver Stone, who directed Jones in "Heaven and Earth," calls Jones "a bit of a Gable character — big and strong." Others have dubbed him a Southwestern Bogart.

Trained in Chicago theater, John Malkovich of "In the Line of Fire" has impressed audiences with his varied performances in "Places in the Heart" (academy nomination as supporting actor), "Dangerous Liaisons," "Empire of the Sun," "The Killing Fields" and "The Sheltering Sky."

"In the Line of Fire" pitted a burned-out Secret Service agent, Clint Eastwood, against a professional killer out to assassinate the president.

Malkovich has a head start on his role, having prepared a script about Lee Harvey Oswald which he planned to direct; he abandoned the project because of "JFK."

Otherwise he did no research.

"My theory is that none of those (terrorist) minds are too difficult to look into," he said. "I think they are just normal minds that are slightly askew as to what the result of their actions is going to be. They're very narcissistic in that they're very aware of what pain or betrayal they have suffered, but they're totally unaware of what pain they cause."

Little known in America, the homely, expressive face of Pete Postlethwaite of "In the Name of the Father" is familiar to the British through his work in theater and television.

He also appeared in films as Captain Beams in "The Last of the Mohicans," as the Player King in the Mel Gibson "Hamlet" and in "Aliens III."

Postlethwaite acted with Daniel Day-Lewis at the Bristol Old Vic, and they both appeared in "The Last of the Mohicans."

They were well acquainted for their roles in "In the Name of the Father" as the rebellious son and the disapproving father who land in the same prison cell on the trumped-up charges of bombing a London pub.

Keith Schwinn and Nicole Melton, reporters for KNPT-TV and K-State graduates, are part of an expansion occurring within the former K6KT-TV in an effort to localize news in Manhattan. The signal reaches as far east as St. Marys and as far west as Chapman.

Manhattan has new TV station

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Manhattan has a new independent TV channel. Channel 6 offers a variety of programming for children and adults including, Royals baseball.

K6KZ-TV changed its name to KNKT-TV and expanded. The new station went on the air March 1 in Manhattan, Gary Brauer, news project director, said.

"The main point of the expansion is to do news in Manhattan," Brauer said.

Robert Raff, general manager, said the expansion includes all of Geary and Riley counties and parts of Pottawatomie, Dickinson and Wabaunsee counties.

He said the signals reach towns as far east as St. Marys and as far west as Chapman and rural areas between Chapman and Abilene.

"It's a 25- to 30-mile radius around Stagg Hill," Raff said. "A lot of rural areas around Abilene are included, but the FCC said we fall short."

"This is the first step of a two-phase expansion," Raff said.

The station runs syndicated programming such as "Babylon Five" and "The Untouchables," he said, but most of the programming is geared towards the 18-35 age group.

"In the afternoon, there is more women and children programs," Raff said. "Then, it is skewed more towards an older age group in the evenings."

Raff said the station will be carrying 32 exclusive Royals baseball games. He said WIBW-TV Channel 13 out of Topeka will carry the other 32 games.

"The games they're carrying are exclusive to their channel, and the games we're carrying are exclusive to our channel," he said.

Raff said there have been some staff and responsibility changes, and K-State students and former students are a part of the changes.

"We've added four new positions in Manhattan," he said. "We have two K-State graduates and two K-State students."

He said the station is establishing a rapport with the community, and the students and graduates are helping with the process.

"We teach them, and we are learning more about the community," Raff said. "Having them on staff helps get story ideas from a different angle."

Keith Schwinn, a K-State graduate, said the people of Manhattan have been receptive to the reporters. He graduated from K-State two years ago this May, and this is his second job, he said.

"I was assistant producer for a cable company, but I wanted to get into journalism," Schwinn said. "It's something I can grow with, and it's been a good experience so far."

Another K-State graduate, Nicole Melton, said she loves what she is doing.

"Manhattan High School sports and everyone is ready for the media," Melton said.

She said it is time for Manhattan's stories to be heard.

Raff said the station has received calls in support of the expansion. Many of the people said they like the news coverage better than the bigger stations, because they just cover the disasters and not all of the news.

"We are looking forward to adding new programming and getting people involved," Raff said.

Much of the support has come from people in the rural areas because many of them only get three channels, and now they get four and possibly five channels, he said.

Plea ends Harding's career

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORTLAND, Ore. — Tonya Harding's competitive figure skating career ended Wednesday night when she pleaded guilty to a conspiracy charge in the attack on Nancy Kerrigan and resigned from the U.S. Figure Skating Association.

As part of the plea bargain, Harding was fined $100,000 and agreed to three years' supervised probation. Withdrawing from the USFSA excluded her from all amateur competitions, including the world championships next week in Japan. She was to leave Thursday for Japan.

Harding also will donate $50,000 to the Special Olympics and pay $10,000 in court costs to Multnomah County.

The national figure skating champion also agreed to undergo a psychiatric examination and accept whatever treatment is recommended.

Harding pleaded guilty to one count of conspiring to hinder prosecution in the Jan. 6 attack. Kerrigan was struck in the knee, forcing her to withdraw from the U.S. Figure Skating Championships in Detroit.

Harding then won the championship and qualified for the Olympics, where she finished eighth. Kerrigan won the silver medal.

Under a plea agreement with prosecutors, Harding will face no jail time. She will perform 500 hours of community service. In return, there will be no further prosecution of Harding by any jurisdiction.

Harding entered the plea at a hearing before Donald Londer, presiding judge in Multnomah County Circuit Court, who was called in from his vacation.

"I'm really sorry if I interfered," Harding told Londer after he accepted her plea.

William Hybl, chairman of the figure skating panel that investigated Harding, said there was still a possibility that Harding could be stripped of the national figure skating title she won after Kerrigan was injured.

And a U.S. Olympic source, speaking on the condition on anonymity, told The Associated Press it was possible Harding would have to return training money, and commemorative things given team members, such as rings.

Harding's ex-husband, Jeff Gillooly, pleaded guilty Feb. 1 to racketeering in a deal with prosecutors.

Campaign rules have changed

"If they are running on a party, they need to get that registered," Nolfi said.

The maximum amount allowed for campaign costs has also changed.

This year, candidates for student body president and vice president may spend up to half of the tuition paid by a full-time, in-state, undergraduate student for a semester: $393.

"It's changed. In the past, they could spend up to the amount of their tuition," Nolfi said.

Candidates for all other positions are limited to spending up to one-tenth of the same tuition, which amounts to $78.60.

Candidates for Student Senate, Union Governing Board, Fine Arts Council and the Board of Student Publications are required to turn in a campaign expenditure report April 8 to the Office of Student Activities and Services, said Shanta Bailey, chairperson of the SGA elections committee and senior in psychology.

"Candidates for student body president and vice president are expected to turn in two expenditure reports," Bailey said.

Their first report is due April 1, and the second expenditure report is due April 8, along with those of the candidates for the other positions.

The election process has started somewhat earlier this year, Nolfi said.

"I think what's really new is that we've had some general information sessions prior to when they've been done in the past," she said.

HOW TO FILE AS A CANDIDATE

Student elections are on April 12-13. Election packets for candidates are now available in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the Union. The filing deadline for candidates is 5 p.m. March 28. The filing deadline for parties is 5 p.m. April 4. The following positions are up for election:

Student Body President/Vice President
Student Senate:
College of Agriculture: 6 seats
College of Architecture and Design: 2 seats
College of Arts and Sciences: 18 seats
College of Business Administration: 7 seats
College of Education: 6 seats
College of Human Ecology: 3 seats
Graduate School: 7 seats
College of Veterinary Medicine: 1 seat
Fine Arts Council: 3 seats
Board of Student Publications: 4 seats
Union Governing Board: 4 one-year seats and 2 two-year seats

For more information, contact the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Union.

Difficulty in fundraising may shut down service phone lines

"We're trying to find a compromise," he said. "Someone could amend the allocations bill at any time since we're still in the same meeting."

Without funding from the SGA, the student information center would be unlikely to keep its phone lines open, Michael Henry, arts and sciences senator, said.

"The University is not going to provide funding. It would be defunct," Henry said. "They're completely wiping out the service. Someone out there is calling this number, and they didn't ask their constituents about this. I'm angry they cut a service that had this much use."

The center received 34,000 calls last year, Miller said.

"It's very frustrating. The stats we gave them show that students really are interested in and utilize the service," Miller said.

The number of students that actually use the center has been a point of contention for Derek Kreifels, one of the student senators who proposed the amendment to cut the funding.

He said during the meeting Tuesday night, he had several students tell him they probably called the center 20 to 30 times a year.

"We don't know how many students are actually utilizing it," Kreifels said. "It could be 1,000 students making 35 calls a year. I would be willing to bet the number of students using it is a very large minority compared to the number of students paying for it."

"We're not against U-Learn, just us paying for it," Kreifels said. "A majority of students don't use it, and a majority of students don't even know it exists."

The center provides information that is already easily accessible and free to students elsewhere, Blair said.

"The three main tools of U-Learn are the campus directory, a list of office phone numbers derived from the directory and the other offices themselves," Blair said.

Miller said she feels the service is important and not because she stands to lose from the cut.

"My salary isn't funded through the SGA. It's not something I'm looking for for myself," Miller said. "I'm leaving in June. I'm just trying to save a service students use."

Miller said employees at the K-State Information Center have tried to do their own fundraising, but they haven't been very successful.

"We sold buttons during the K-State/KU game. I think we raised about $30," Miller said. "But we need about $8,000. It's very difficult to raise that kind of money."

Without the money, students would not only lose a service but six job possibilities, Miller said. There are six student positions, including two co-directors, besides her own position as director, Miller said.

Kreifels said the cut wouldn't yank the jobs right out from under them. They would have the summer to locate other jobs before the money runs out, he said.

The center is basically stuck between a rock and hard place, Henry said.

"They can't plan for next year without a budget, but they can't shut down either because the service is needed now," he said.

"At Commerce Bank, we know it's tough to do your best in school if you're hassled by money problems. So we offer Money 101 — a package of banking services especially for college students. Use any or all of them.

Money 101 is a Student Loan Program with a difference. All student loans are the same — same rates, same terms. Only the banks are different. And Commerce Bank can save you interest. While other banks capitalize interest as many as 16 times while you're in school, Commerce doesn't until you graduate — meaning real interest savings.

Money 101 includes a Student VISA or MasterCard to help you get the things you need — and cash advances, too.

The low-cost Money 101 Checking Account helps you keep track of expenses with a complete monthly statement.

And for maximum convenience, sign up for Money 101's Connection 24 Card. It gives you access to your checking and savings accounts 24 hours a day at any Connection 24 ATM (Automated Teller Machine) in Kansas — and other CIRRUS and BankMate ATMs nationwide.

So call me or stop by today and sign up for Money 101 — find out how top performance banking can help your performance at school."

"If you want to save time and money at college, the smartest course is Money 101."

They're back. The K-State Wildcats found themselves in Thursday night's first-round National Invitation Tournament victory against the Mississippi State Bulldogs, 78-67. Askia Jones found his 20-point game. Deryl Cunningham found the boards. The Wildcat bench found some playing time. Dana Altman found a reason to smile. The Cats now find themselves playing Gonzaga in the second round of the tournament. Gonzaga defeated Stanford, 80-76, Thursday night. "The guys played awfully hard. We had a little success offensively, and that turned into a little fun," Coach Altman said. "I know everyone's been down on the guys, so it was nice for something good to happen tonight." K-State's performance was solid enough to earn high praise from Bulldog coach Richard Williams. "Kansas State is a good basketball team," Williams said. "That Deryl Cunningham is a great

Control given to fine arts students

Students get increased input with council seats

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Students interested in fine arts programming are encouraged to run for a seat on the renovated Fine Arts Council. The Fine Arts Council is responsible for allocating money from the fine-arts fee to several University departments including speech, architecture, art, music, McCain Auditorium, Ebony Theatre Co. and the Office of Multicultural Affairs. Previously, the Fine Arts Council was made up of the department heads and a few students, Ed Skoog, student body president, said. Through legislation passed by Student Senate, the structure of the committee has changed to give the students more control. Three at-large student members will be elected, and three student members will be appointed by the student body president, Dan Lewerenz, junior in philosophy and chairman of the council, said. Also included in the membership of the committee are faculty members from each department. Four of the faculty members will have voting rights, while the other faculty members will act as advisers. The issue of student empowerment is one of the driving factors in the movement to change the structure of the committee, Lewerenz said. The council needs the voice of the students, he said. "Everyone recognized some changes had to happen," he said. Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said there are three results of the change in structure. The first goal was to increase students' voice in the decision-making process. The second goal was to draw inclusive lines for departments that did not previously receive fine-arts funding, such as the English department. "Some groups are hanging in the fringes — they need a home so they know where to get money," she said. The third reason for the restructuring was to encourage more interest on the K-State campus in the fine arts.

NATIONAL NEWS

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OLIVER NORTH'S SENATE BID OPPOSED BY REAGAN

RICHMOND, Va. — Former President Ronald Reagan jumped into the Virginia Senate race Thursday, saying he was getting pretty steamed over what he said were false statements by Republican candidate Oliver North.

In feisty response, North said political opponents had made blatant and intentional misrepresentations of things he had said in order to secure the letter from Reagan, a president whom he admired.

Reagan's comments came in an exchange of letters with former Nevada Sen. Paul Laxalt who supports North's GOP opponent, former Reagan budget chief James Miller III.

Reagan accused North of lying about the Iran-Contra scandal, but he stopped short of endorsing Miller in the race for the seat held by Democratic U.S. Sen. Charles Robb.

"Throughout my political career, I have refrained from endorsing any candidate involved in a contested Republican primary," Reagan wrote in the letter dated Wednesday.

"But I do have to admit that I am getting pretty steamed about the statements coming from Oliver North. I never instructed him or anyone in my administration to mislead Congress on Iran-Contra matters or anything else," Reagan wrote.

"I certainly did not know anything about the Iran-Contra diversion," he wrote. "And, the private meetings he said he had with me just didn't happen."

CUBAN REFUGEES SEEK SHELTER IN THE BAHAMAS

MIAMI — About 100 Cubans are stranded on desolate rocky outcroppings in the Bahamas, free from communism, but caught by geography and diplomacy far from their destination in the United States.

The recent arrivals on Cay Sal Bank are part of a floating stream of people fleeing Cuba at twice last year's pace.

"It's a developing crisis," Jose Basulto of Brothers to the Rescue said. Brothers to the Rescue is a Miami-based group of volunteer pilots who have become the refugees' primary source of necessities.

Cay Sal, Anguilla and other tiny islands in the chain about 45 miles from Cuba offer hope to Cubans fleeing economic collapse and deprivation. Getting there, often on makeshift rafts, is slightly less dangerous than crossing the treacherous Gulf Stream in a 90-mile trip to Florida.

It's illegal for civilians to fly the Cubans to the United States; so, the volunteers fly their small planes 10 feet above Cay Sal's bumpy airstrip, shoving out tents, blankets, food rations and water to the refugees.

"We drop them anything that we think would be absolutely necessary to sustain life on the island," Basulto said.

PHILADELPHIA MAFIA BOSS, FAMILY ARRESTED

PHILADELPHIA — Law enforcers struck a major blow against one of the nation's most violent Mafia families Thursday by arresting its reputed boss and 11 underlings after months of bloody warfare.

Teams fanned across Philadelphia and southern New Jersey to make the arrests before dawn, a day after the indictments of 24 people. Three men, all allegedly low level, remained fugitives. The others were either already in prison or surrendered.

The indictment alleges that reputed mob boss John Stanfa ordered the others to commit murders, attempted murders, kidnapping, extortions, loansharking, gambling and arson.

AGENTS WOUNDED DURING SHOOTOUT

PHILADELPHIA — Two federal agents were wounded, and a drug suspect was killed during a shootout in a crime-infested neighborhood Wednesday.

Four FBI agents and a police officer were following four drug suspects in a car when the confrontation occurred at an intersection in north Philadelphia, Bob Reutter, agent in charge of the Philadelphia FBI, said.

"It was a car stop," FBI representative Linda Vizi said. "The agents ordered the individuals out of the car. They did not comply. They began to fire on the agents, and the agents returned fire."

FBI Director Louis Freeh said the officers were participating in the Violent Traffickers Project, a federal-local drug investigation.

CITY CELEBRATES; FAMILY MOURNS

NEW YORK — On the day Officer Sean McDonald was to march proudly in his city's St. Patrick's Day Parade, two men were charged with murdering him.

"You just wish he was here," Officer Billy Gordon, one of the many police officers who did take part in Thursday's parade along Fifth Avenue, said.

Across town, Mayor Rudolph Giuliani and Police Commissioner William Bratton announced the arrests of the two men suspected of killing McDonald when the 26-year-old officer tried to halt a robbery on Tuesday.

SPRING BREAK

Americans can face prison for drug use while abroad

JEFFREY BARRETT
Collegian

Involving yourself with drugs while traveling abroad might extend your stay permanently, and the accommodations won't be luxurious.

Many American college students are serving time in foreign jails or awaiting trial because they were unaware of the risks of using or possessing drugs while overseas.

In 1993, more than 2,500 American citizens were arrested abroad, the U.S. Bureau of Consular Affairs said. Almost 1,000 were detained on charges of using or possessing drugs.

Spring break is here and students will be vacationing in places like the Bahamas, Jamaica and Mexico. The U.S. Bureau of Consular Affairs wants to warn Americans of the dangers of committing crimes abroad.

"Too many people think that because you get arrested in a foreign country as a foreigner, they are just going to kick you out," Gary Sheaffer, public affairs officer for the State Department's Bureau of Consular Affairs, said. "That's not necessarily true," he said.

The American philosophy of innocent until proven guilty may not hold true in foreign countries.

"Many countries do not have habeas corpus. You cannot get bail," Sheaffer said. "You can be held for months or years awaiting trial."

The Bureau said that once an American is arrested, there is not much the American government can do.

They cannot get you out of jail. What they can do is try to ensure you are treated humanely and in the same manner as other prisoners.

"Being treated like everybody else can be pretty bad," Sheaffer said.

"In Jamaica, we have to bring American prisoners fresh drinking water," Sheaffer said.

"People should not think that because they are American, they can get off," Sheaffer said.

The Bureau is focusing its warning on drugs in foreign countries.

Bringing drugs in or trying to get them out is a serious crime in some countries.

"Thailand considers possession of drugs as trafficking and can hold you for life," Sheaffer said.

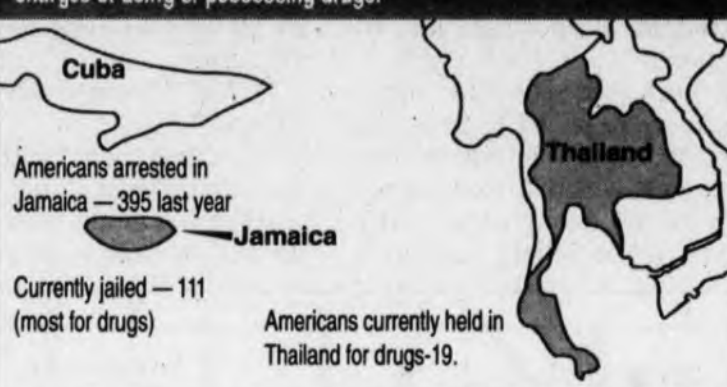

In Jamaica, the average age of those arrested is between 27 and 29 years old. There were 395 Americans arrested last year in Jamaica, and there are 111 in prison. Most are being detained because of drug charges.

In Thailand, there are 19 Americans in prison for drug charges.

Americans can also get caught up in drug charges unknowingly. Smugglers sometimes offer up to

DOING TIME FOR DOING DRUGS

According to the Bureau of Consular Affairs, in 1993 over 2,500 American citizens were arrested abroad. Of those 2,500, almost 1,000 were held on charges of using or possessing drugs.

N. STEWART ANDERSON/Collegian

$1,000 to young people to make a quick and easy buck, Sheaffer said. All you have to do is carry a piece of luggage across the border.

"If it was all that nice and simple, then they would be doing it themselves," Sheaffer said.

Once the baggage is in your possession, it is considered yours.

"Ignorance is no excuse in these countries," Sheaffer said.

If you are detained or arrested while abroad for any reason, you should immediately request that the nearest U.S. Consulate be contacted.

"We will give you information on how to get an attorney and see that you are treated fairly," Sheaffer said.

Dianne Urban, K-State's students' attorney, has never heard from any K-State student who has gotten into trouble abroad.

"I haven't had anybody call me up from a jail in a foreign country or anything," Urban said.

MOVIES

Best picture up in air

Because of a production error, the Best Picture predictions in Trent Frager's Oscar awards story in Thursday's Collegian were omitted. Here is the part of the story that was missing.

BEST PICTURE

"The Fugitive"
"In the Name of the Father"
"The Piano"
"The Remains of the Day"
"Schindler's List"

Who's going to win Best Picture? This is easy to call.

"Schindler's List" will win Best Picture, but not only because of the fact that director Steven Spielberg has been snubbed for so long.

It is also because "Schindler's List" is the best film of the year.

"The Fugitive" cannot win because director Andrew Davis is not nominated for Best Director.

Recall it is very unlikely that a film nominated for Best Picture can win without the director of the film being at least nominated.

"The Remains of the Day" is at a disadvantage because of last year's similar "Howards End." Voters may prefer something more innovative and original to another James Ivory period-piece production starring Anthony Hopkins and Emma Thompson, the same stars of "Howards End."

"In the Name of the Father" is a strong contender, but it is too politically charged, and perhaps too controversial for conservative voters of the academy.

"The Piano" is a very successful film, critically and commercially. But until very recently, it has been labeled a low-profile art film.

That leaves the riveting "Schindler's List" with its black-and-white format and dark subject content to take the final and most anticipated award.

So, there you have it — this year's predictions.

The ceremony will be broadcast March 21.

Remember, it's a black-tie affair.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

Sleep, eat and drink light over break

By the Collegian Editorial Board

If you are going to drink over spring break, drink light beer.

Granted, only 10 people or so are reading this, but we really wanted to reach you 10 people.

With spring break now here, most people are not too worried about health issues, but the government reported Thursday that the average young American adult gained a "shocking" 10 pounds in the past seven years.

These 10 pounds sneaked up on the average young adult even when they followed a low-cholesterol, low-fat diet.

On the whole, students do not take care of themselves as they should.

We don't sleep as much as we should — mostly from studying too much in poorly lit areas. We eat a Snickers™ or Nutty Bar™ to tide us over until the next square meal, which doesn't happen until our next trip home. Some of us drink throughout the week, while others just put it away on the weekends.

Spring break is no exception to this, except we have a valid reason not to go to class.

Students go skiing — to try to fulfill their fantasies of being that "agony of defeat" guy at the beginning of the "ABC's Wide World of Sports" — and they drink.

Students go to the beach to try to soak up all the sun and ultraviolet rays they can.

Students go to large cities as tourists looking for all the cool live-band bars or night clubs, and they drink.

Is there a point to this neverending drivel of an editorial?

Of course there is. If you are going to drink over spring break, drink light beer.

(Had you going there for awhile, huh. Here's the real message — be careful over break.)

Enough already — let women wear the collars

Thirty-two women knelt on the floor of Bristol Cathedral as deacons of the Anglican church last week, and when they rose to their feet, they were the first women priests ordained in the 460-year history of the religion.

Gloria Steinem, eat your heart out.

Was there ever a bit of a stink that came from that, I'll tell you!

The controversy was not only within the Church of England, where these ordinations were the culmination of 20 years of hard debate within their ranks.

It seemed for awhile the fight might actually even split the church in its fury and has since caused the threat of conversion by some 700 of their clergy members. Thirty-five priests have actually resigned because of the women.

The largest and loudest voice of protest came not from within, but from without. The Catholic Church squalled like a 2-year-old. According to the Topeka-Capitol Journal, the Vatican announced that the Church of England's decision to ordain women was a "setback" to the eventual reunion between the two churches — a reunion that has been rumored would happen since their split from one another during the reign of Henry VIII.

Boy, that was just a kick-in-the-head kind of surprise to me, I'll tell you. (Note the light air of sarcasm that just seems to flavor the air with that understatement, if you please.)

One of the largest steps in religion made in the past 25 years was bound to gust a bit of wind up the skirts of the Vatican.

Such a bold move must have seemed like a bitter betrayal to them, considering they have had to deal with the sting of the Episcopal "defection" toward the acceptance of women-priests some years back.

To me, the acceptance of these women as priests is a statement of equality that has long been overdue to hit closer to the heart of one of the world's oldest and largest patriarchal organizations in the world.

The whole argument of allowing the ordination of women both amuses and disgusts me. Not being a Christian myself, it all seems academic.

I never understood the fuss against it. Why shouldn't women be given the privilege of priesthood? Because Jesus Christ was not a woman? Because the disciples he let sit at his table weren't women?

Sourjourner Truth said in her famous speech, "Ain't I A Woman," that the only two responsible for the birth of Jesus Christ were God and a woman. "Weren't," as she put it,

"no man involved."

Why is it a woman was allowed to bear the child of God but women are not allowed to lead, as priests, God's children?

According to the Bible, when Christ was resurrected, he didn't appear to Matthew or Peter first. Nor did he appear to any of the other 12 men who listened in ignorance to his words while he lived.

First, he appeared to Mary Magdalene as she walked to his tomb to tend to his body. He appeared first to a woman who had served him, attentively, while he lived. Yet, women are not allowed to consecrate the body and blood of Christ.

Personally, I think the woman who washed Christ's feet with her tears and dried them with her hair deserves the title of "disciple" more than the man who sold him over to his executioners for thirty pieces of silver.

I have not forgotten that women as nuns, lay persons, abbesses, deacons and mothers have made very valuable contributions to the religious world. But the belief women should be content in their traditional roles within the church is archaic.

It is as absurd a notion as the one that says women should have been content with their traditional roles within the home, accepting that as being the only place they may be of use when they could also have been bankers, doctors and prime ministers if they had wanted to.

Women have proven they can live a life of love and service to God. They have proven they can be spiritual leaders to a congregation in many different capacities. Now, at last, the Anglican Church recognizes they can do it also as priests.

They take to heart the belief that God made Woman not out of Man's head, to be considered his superior and not from his foot to be considered beneath him.

Woman was created from his side, to be there at his side and equal to him, in all things in heaven and on earth.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

'Schindler's List' an accurate portrayal of capitalism's strength

Hollywood has been known throughout the years for attacking big business and capitalism in general.

Oliver Stone's "Wall Street" portrayed Gordon Gecko as a greedy, destructive man who was only looking out for himself.

Other films have followed before and after in this tradition.

It is a rare occurrence to see capitalism portrayed in a humanitarian light on the silver screen.

The traditional stereotype of the capitalist is defined with terms such as ungenerous, compassionless and self-serving.

After all, isn't this what it takes to make it to the top to make money?

NO!

Wednesday night, I saw the brilliant film "Schindler's List." It was based on the true-life story of Oskar Schindler, a German businessman who turned into a modern-day Moses and rescued hundreds of Jewish people from Nazi concentration camps.

The movie had a multitude of themes, and one of them was capitalism.

Schindler made his fortune during wartime Germany by making cookware that was sold to the Nazi army.

During the time when he was making money from the sale of the cookware — nothing wrong with that — he was helping the Jews, who also made up his entire work force, get foodstuffs and other supplies that were difficult to obtain in the ghettos.

Schindler would go on to rescue more than 800 Jews from being sent to concentration camps by spending a great deal of his personal fortune.

I believe this is simply amazing. A capitalist would go out and help someone else.

I am amazed this movie is based on a true story.

I am amazed the liberal socialists, such as President Clinton and even one of my fellow columnists, has not said the movie is just a big lie.

I shall digress with the sarcasm.

WILLIAM MCKEEN

but it is difficult to use any other form of attack when dealing with the absurd thought of people automatically equating capitalism with evil.

I am not saying every capitalist is doing something good for mankind.

They are not all philanthropists. They are not all Schindlers, Carnegies or Gates.

Oddly enough, many movie stars, musicians and other media giants contribute their savings to worthy causes.

People give. People donate. People are basically good.

Capitalism gives them the opportunity to be good to others. It lets them do this through their own volition, and there is no government mandating us to give a portion of our earnings to other people.

This is what gives America the opportunity to be such a strong nation. We are guided by morals. We are allowed to be humans and not slaves of the state.

The problem is we are faltering in a moral dilemma.

During his campaign for re-election, George Bush made the comment that one of the most important things that needs to be dealt with is the lack of morals creeping into American home life.

Clinton ridiculed Bush for making such comments, stating there are more important things to deal with in the campaign.

This is the same person, who since now has been elected, who completely reversed his opinion and has been making morals one of the most important issues to deal with as president.

I question whether he believes this or just realizes if he wants to get re-elected, he is going to have to please the people of the nation. Still, when we look to see how white Clinton's personal record has been, it doesn't hold water.

The scary thing is, many of Clinton's plans which reek of socialism are the types of plans that won't allow good morals to grow in our society.

America needs to cultivate capitalism so it can grow into something that will help everyone. It has the opportunity to do that.

The problem is too many people are blinded or deafened by what is fed into their eyes and ears.

After all, most of what the media puts out is fiction.

Proudly, I can tell you some of it is not.

► NATIVE AMERICANS

Mascots always dishonorable — especially those from U of I

Dear Editor,

The issue surrounding the use of names and mascots that represent Native American people and exploit Native American symbols will not go away until all vestiges of this dishonorable practice are removed by the institutions who use them.

Some, like assistant professor Doug Goodin, argue there is a line of demarcation that separates the tasteless from the tasteful, and as long as an institution takes care to keep those images on the tasteful side, then no one, Native people included, ought to complain.

Goodin insists there are mascots and teams whose names and images honor the memory of Native Americans.

He claims the University of Illinois goes to great lengths to ensure that its mascot, Chief Illiniwek, is treated appropriately, as he is named after the Illiniwek confederacy of Indian tribes from which the state and university derive their names.

Actually, there was no such confederacy named "Illiniwek."

The tribe of people known to the French as the Illinois and to themselves as the Illini were known to ally themselves with other tribes living in the Great Lakes states at the prodding of European factions eager to use Native American tribes to assist in their warring efforts.

The use of Indians, particularly the historical image of the Native American, as sports mascots is symptomatic of this nation's repeated effort to relegate the concept of Native Americans to the past, completely avoiding the reality of our present-day existence.

Those of us who protest are simply dismissed as being too sensitive and without the right to speak about the use of a mascot who supposedly represents a specific, dead tribe.

In case the reader requires more evidence that the intention of the depictions, one needs only to go into a Champaign bookstore to see the display of toilet paper for sale.

On the roll, we see the mascot's noble face surrounded by the halo of a feathered headdress with the name of the tribe Illini stamped in bright orange, waiting to be hung by the toilets of U of I alumni everywhere, awaiting its doubly insulting fate.

Partnership proposal in danger of Gov. Finney's veto pen

Dear Editor,

I believe the State Senate did the right thing in killing the bill that would have allowed Washburn University entry into the Kansas Board of Regents system.

This plan would hurt K-State in the future. Remember the budget cuts we've had? It would only be worse if we had another university in the regents' system.

If we had another recession and a shortfall in revenue, budget cuts would occur, as they have in the past. With Washburn in the system, more would have to be cut from all the regents' schools, including K-State.

Does it make sense to add another university to the system when the state has trouble funding the ones it already has?

With Washburn, we would have three universities funded by the state within an hour's drive of each other.

Two state law schools within a half hour of each other — does this make sense?

I support the Partnership for Excellence program, and I hope it passes. The governor tied the Washburn bill to the Partnership program because she knew she couldn't get Washburn in alone.

Therefore, she has attempted to bribe and blackmail faculty and the regents into supporting Washburn inclusion.

Now that Washburn has failed, she will veto the Partnership bill. The two bills have nothing to do with one another.

I urge all of you to call or write your state legislators to support the Partnership bill and to override Gov. Joan Finney's veto of it.

Walt would be proud

Some of the animators at Walt Disney Co. must have put up with a little too much warmth and cuteness at their jobs.

Thousands of laserdisc versions of "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" have been found to contain sexually explicit scenes. The scenes fly by too fast to see at normal speed, but they can be spotted by watching one frame at a time.

The tampered movies featured full frontal nude views of cartoon character Jessica Rabbit, along with an X-rated sexual encounter and graffiti offering Disney boss Michael Eisner's home phone number as that of a brothel run by Allyson Wonderland.

The most revealing scene comes when Jessica is riding through Toon Town with actor Bob Hoskins. Their taxi crashes, and the two tumble out. As Jessica tumbles, her skin-tight red dress rides up. At normal speed, she appears to be wearing underwear. But slowed down, three frames show her wearing nothing.

"You can see right down Broadway," said Daily Variety columnist Michael Fleming, who uncovered the prank.

Leave it to the Brits to start a 'save the toads' campaign

Every year in Britain, 300,000 toads get squashed trying to cross the road to mate.

Fortunately, now that mating season is on, hundreds of volunteers at 500 sites around England are dedicating their nights to helping the vulnerable amphibians.

"You just need a bucket, a strong torch and to be very fast and dodge the traffic. You can get some very irate drivers," said Mick Durant, co-founder of the Surrey Wildlife Protection Group.

Inside Durant's bucket, squeaking toads tried to climb on top of one another.

"These noises... males are trying to mate with males, and they tend to dislike it," he explained.

They're just so friendly

A note to the anonymous painter in Baltimore, Md., who keeps adding a cutesy greeting to the city-limit sign on Interstate 295: the Maryland Senate thinks you have a good idea, hon.

Such a good idea that they sent city officials a little message Wednesday. "Welcome to Baltimore" isn't friendly enough, the Senate said. The sign should say "Welcome to Baltimore — Hon!"

And just to make sure the city doesn't ignore the Senate's wishes, lawmakers tacked an amendment to the state budget to cut $1 million from Baltimore's transportation funds if the friendlier sign fails to go up and stay up.

An unknown painter periodically amends the city-limit sign to add the word "Hon." City workers then rush out and take it down.

"We thought it might be appropriate to encumber some of the city's funds until they develop a sense of humor," state Sen. Barbara Hoffman said.

Sex is a no-no, but cigars are a must?

No sex please — we're Swiss.

The coach of Switzerland's World Cup soccer team wants his players to be celibate during this summer's tournament in the United States.

Roy Hodgson, a Briton who has led Switzerland to its first World Cup appearance in 28 years, says his team's hotel will be off-limits to wives and girlfriends. Computer games and billiards are envisaged for leisure time.

Hodgson's edict prompted headlines such as "No Sex Please, The Manager's British."

"I don't even want to talk about such idiotic polemics," Hodgson said Monday. "I'm only thinking about soccer — and in the United States we can achieve a once-in-a-lifetime performance, if we concentrate on sport."

While Hodgson commands respect from his players, some of their female companions are less than thrilled by his no-sex policy.

"A sex ban? It's a joke, a kindergarten game," said 24-year-old Nicole Arm, the girlfriend of midfielder Ciriaco Sforza.

While his players contemplate giving up sex, Hodgson worries he won't be able to light up his cigars.

"Where will I be able to relax with a cigar in fanatical anti-smoking America?" he said.

PUTTING YOUR BEST ON TAPE

Local bands go to the studios

So, you want to be a rock 'n' roll star.

After you've broken the news to Mom and Dad, gotten a few songs together and played a few gigs, the next logical step is to get into the studio and record.

Unless you're Pearl Jam, you can write off going directly to a major label such as Warner Brothers or Atlantic. Most of them won't even talk to you without big-time representation, Kristen Worden, an assistant in the artist-and-repertoire department at Atlantic Records in Los Angeles, said.

"We don't take unsolicited tapes," she said. "Everything we use comes on the recommendation of an agent or attorney."

With that door apparently closed, most bands just starting out will opt to record a demo tape, either recording at home or renting studio time from one of several small studios in the area.

Doing a demo

A demo tape rarely has more than six or seven songs on it, and the idea is to demonstrate your band's best material in order to catch the ear of people who can lead you toward that elusive record deal.

Demo tapes are also an easy way to get your music in the hands and car stereos of your best promoters — the fans. Bands can also sell their demo tapes at shows, as well as in local record stores, such as Streetside or Vital Vinyl, and get them played on area radio stations.

When you're in the studio, time is money. Most studios charge for their facilities by the hour, so it is crucial to be as productive as possible.

"We wasted a lot of time," Paul Horton, auxiliary percussionist for the local band Bosom, said. "But it's something I'd encourage anyone to do, though."

"It's something we'll be able to show our kids," Bosom vocalist Jason McLendon said.

Mass production

Once the grind of the studio work is complete, and you have a finished product in the form of a single digital audio tape or reel tape of your hard work, it's time to find facilities to duplicate that master tape on to cassettes or compact discs and do the artwork and layout for the insert material, the little piece of paper with photographs and the list of songs.

Some recording studios offer all these services in-house for an extra charge, and there are also places that specialize in tape duplication or graphic design. Prices for duplication can vary but are generally around $1 each for cassettes or $2-$3 for CDs when you order several hundred. Custom artwork and other cosmetic additions can drive this price up even higher.

in Lawrence to record the demo that first caught the attention of Scotti Brothers Records of Santa Monica, Calif.

After getting signed to Scotti Brothers, Truck Stop Love recorded its self-titled EP in the company's own studio.

Mozier said recording for a record company is a lot different than recording your own demo.

"We spent three weeks in California, working 12 hours a day in the studio," Mozier said.

Once a band is signed to a record label, the company takes care of recording expenses. Mozier estimated Scotti Brothers spent about $25,000 to $30,000 to record the EP.

Truck Stop Love plans to return to the studio this summer to record its first full-length album for Scotti Brothers.

Using Connections

When working without the luxury of record-company support, some bands will use every possible resource to get their music on the market.

Tony Ladesich, guitarist and vocalist for Hammock of Springfield, Mo., used relatives, old friends and acquaintances to record and distribute the band's latest demo tape, "Tripod."

The tape was recorded in Ellis recital hall on the campus of Southwest Missouri State University in Springfield.

The tape was recorded by Greg Duffin, recording engineer for SMSU.

"Since he's the recording engineer for the university, we got to use their $3,000 microphones," Ladesich said. "And the recital hall gave us this incredible live sound."

Once the recording was done, Ladesich took his master to a business in Kansas City that specializes in tape duplication.

"When I went to pick up the tapes, they were misprinted, with side one on side two," Ladesich said. "When I went back the next day, they sold me the defective tapes — 100 of them for $20."

"We're selling the defective tapes for a dollar less," Ladesich said.

Creative advice

Joe Hart, an employee of Lawrence's Mercy Record Studios, and producer and engineer of Bosom's demo, said bands are often at their most creative while in the studio.

"When a band gets in the studio and records for the first time, it's a lot like looking into a mirror," Hart said. "You hear your first attempts at a song played back, and instantly see things that need work and things that need to be done better."

WOMEN'S GOLF GOES TO TEXAS

The K-State women's golf team will open its Spring 1994 season on Tuesday, March 22, as they journey to the North Texas State Invitational in Denton, Texas. The tournament will be their first since they completed the fall portion of the season. During the fall, the Wildcats recorded five top-10 finishes.

Anthony Beane scrambles for the ball against T.J. Honore during K-State's 78-67 win against Mississippi State. Beane had 13 points and three rebounds in the game.

K-State found the shooting touch they've been looking for all year.

The Wildcats notched a 78-67 first-round National Invitation Tournament victory over Mississippi State at Bramlage Coliseum Thursday.

The Cats shot a sizzling 52.5 percent from the field, marking only the fourth time this season when they have hit 50 percent of their attempts or better.

"We made some baskets early and that got us rolling," Coach Dana Altman said.

"You could see it in the players' faces after we knocked a few down. They were more relaxed."

The Wildcats were holding on to a 30-26 lead with 3:16 remaining in the first half, before closing out the half with eight straight points to take a 38-26 lead into halftime.

With 16:55 remaining in the game, K-State was maintaining a 46-33 lead when they took off on a 13-0 run, expanding their lead to 59-33 with 13:19 remaining in the game.

"We wanted to beat them down the floor because we knew they would be starting a big lineup," Altman said.

Askia Jones broke out of his shooting slump during the run by hitting back-to-back shots, including a three-pointer. Jones connected from three-point range on three different occasions and led K-State with 20 points.

Brian Gavin pitched in six points to the run. He finished with eight points and five rebounds, two of them offensive.

"I didn't want to go out feeling the way I did after the KU game," Jones said.

The run was finally broken by a three-pointer from the Bulldogs' Darryl Wilson, who scored all of Mississippi State's next sixteen points, including four three-pointers. Wilson led Mississippi State with 22 points.

When Wilson's streak was broken, K-State's lead had only been cut to 21, 72-51, with 4:19 remaining in the contest.

"We've been shooting well in practice," Deryl Cunningham said. "Tonight, it finally paid off for us."

Cunningham scored 16 points and again led K-State in rebounding with six.

Altman dipped into his bench more than in previous games this season. Nine

TENNIS

Bietau looking for team development during break

CRAIG PINKERTON
Collegian

The K-State women's tennis team has made its spring break travel plans.

On Saturday, the netters will travel to Topeka to take on the Brigham Young Cougars. Then they will pack their bags for South Carolina, where they will play a pair of matches in Columbia.

Not a bad spring break, travel-wise.

Two people who won't make the trip for the Cats are their top player, Karina Kuregian, who is ranked 23rd nationally, and their No. 3 player, Alexandra Thome, who will not be able to compete because of an illness.

Having to go without two of the team's top three players is causing Coach Steve Bietau to shift some priorities.

"We are not going to worry about the team results, as we would normally," Bietau said. "We will concentrate more on developing and getting better. The difference is that this work may not pay off until next year."

K-State will have to rely on Masha

Meidell, who has moved into the No. 1-singles position and has had some success at that spot. However, Meidell is coming off a pair of losses that Bietau said he hopes will motivate her to continue to improve.

"She's been doing well. I really hope that when she lost those two matches, that would encourage her to be more determined and improve her game," Bietau said.

Competition will get underway at 11 a.m. Saturday at Wood Valley in Topeka.

BASEBALL

Cats look to spring break after losing opening Big Eight games to Cowboys

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Maybe K-State baseball coach Mike Clark wished for the gust of wind to blow the numbers off of the wooden scoreboard in right field during the second game of the double-header between Oklahoma State and his team.

The Cowboys were leading 12-2 into the ninth inning when the numbers fell off the scoreboard, and it might have been the only way to forget the games as Oklahoma State swept the Cats, 12-7 and 12-4 last night at Frank Myers Field.

K-State dropped to 9-13, 0-2 in the Big Eight, while the No. 9-ranked Cowboys went to 13-6, 2-0 in the conference.

Both games could have been much closer if K-State could have come up with key hits. The Cats left 14 base runners in the first game and 13 on base in the second game.

Clark said the hitters need to concentrate better at the plate.

"Offensively, we were able to get some hits, but we weren't disciplined at the plate," Clark said as his team compiled 26 hits in the two games.

Clark said the pitchers and defense also had break downs.

"Our pitchers weren't ready to pitch," he said. "I don't know why we weren't really up for Oklahoma State. If we can't get up for Oklahoma State, then we shouldn't be on the field."

Outfielder Tim Decker, who went 5-of-8 at the plate with two runs batted in, said K-State was not prepared to play.

"We didn't come to the yard to compete," Decker said.

Rob Merriman (2-3) and Jon Oiseth (2-3) both suffered the losses for K-State.

With the cancellations of the Friends and Rockhurst ballgames this weekend, Clark said he was happy there won't be any classes next week.

"I'm glad spring break is here," Clark said. "It gives us time to have some long practices and improve on our fundamentals. We've got to concentrate on what we're doing."

K-State will get back on Frank Myers when they take on Kansas on Tuesday and Wednesday. Both games start at 1 p.m.

Jay Kopriva tries for the ball during one of K-State's games against Oklahoma State Thursday. The Cats lost both matches, 12-7 and 12-4.

The Cats will play the Jayhawks at home Tuesday and Wednesday. Both games will start at 1 p.m.

DEAR CASSIE,

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

'Religiously Confused' torn between faith, belief that God doesn't exist

Dear Cassandra,
During the past few years, I have gotten a mixed view of religion. All religions believe in their god and preach the same values, ethics and principles of a good life. Yet people are committing the most grotesque and horrible evils in the name of religion so as to maintain their superiority.
Because of such instances that we hear every day, sometimes I conclude that religion is fake and God doesn't exist. At the same time, when I think of who we are and what we are, what life is all about, I get a powerful sense of understanding that there is an Almighty whom we call God.
Right now, I'm being torn apart by both these opposing opinions, and I want to be at peace with myself.
What is your opinion regarding this matter? What should I do to come to terms with the feelings I have?
Do you think there are many people just like me?
Signed,
Religiously Confused

Dear Confused,
It is hard to believe that people all over the world are killing each other in the name of God. It makes religion difficult to accept sometimes.
I wish I could tell you that God and I hang out in Aggieville. (My guess is he would be a coffee drinker.) But the Almighty never returns my phone calls.
Seriously, I find faith in God easy. Science tries to explain God away, but there is always a starting point that scientists can't explain. If the Big Bang was how the universe was created, who lit the fuse?

"Blood"
The Holy Toledo's
TriStar Music

They're not from Toledo; they're from New Zealand, and from the sound of this record, these guys must've grown up listening to nothing but the Smiths.

The album is mostly generic pop, with a few distinct folk influences coming through at times. The band is in dire need of an original vocalist. Most songs sound promising, until they start singing in that drippy Morrissey-like tone, reducing what may be passionate lyrics into dreadful whining.

"Superunknown"
Soundgarden
A&M Records

Soundgarden has come back strong with this excellent follow-up to "Badmotorfinger." The album just sticks its leather boots through your speaker and kicks you in the head. Vocalist/guitarist Chris Cornell brings the low rhythm parts, and lead guitarist Kim Thayil expands on Cornell's riffs with screeching solos.

Soundgarden builds on the grunge sound with elements of old Black Sabbath and old blues stuff, working hard to establish themselves as much more than a mere flash in the pan, a band that should continue to grow.

"Superunknown" has brought the Seattle sound to the next level.

"Test"
Sphinx
Heart and Soul Productions

I really thought Winger had left the Earth until hearing this record, but cheese-metal is now reborn in this five-man band from Chicago.

I suppose it should make some people happy, but the hedonistic lyrics about good times and good women only make Sphinx sound like a reincarnation of Bon Jovi.

Simple chords, sometimes progressing into Guns-N'-Roses-type bridges, only make this album into a sacrifice to the dethroned god of pop metal.

"Last Stop 'Til Ninth Street"
The Dragonhounds
Crackpot Records

Dizzy guitars, poetic lyrics and a stripped-down mix make this Minneapolis band's release worth a listen. The band has a simple formula: just play and have a good time doing it. The Dragonhounds have a good combination of serious and comedic material, split between folksy songs like "Gotta Go Down" and "Lickin' You."

The mix is raw, making "Last Stop 'Til Ninth Street" comparable to the early work of the Replacements or the Dead Milkmen. The music often slows down to a near halt as vocalist Mike Nicolai speaks a short verse or two, only to finish out in a rough crescendo of fun, twangy blues.

LOW-IMPACT CAMPING PROVIDES ECO-FRIENDLY ENJOYMENT

TED ELLET
Collegian

Take only pictures. Leave only footprints.

This philosophy is shared by many people who practice low-impact camping, a form of exploration designed to teach campers about other societies without disturbing the cultural or physical environment in any way.

"It's a new perspective," Tom Dunn, junior in psychology, said. "It wakes you up and shakes you out of the pattern of being a robotic American."

Dunn and his friends have traveled everywhere from England to Egypt to experience life from a different viewpoint.

"Low-impact has given me the realization that there's much more to the world than what we see everyday. Other places and people are just as fascinating," he said.

With low-impact camping, everything is left the way the campers find it so the next group of people can enjoy it, Belinda Sherow, assistant manager of the Pathfinder in Manhattan, said.

"People are a lot more aware of not-littering campaigns, and I think low-impact camping has evolved from everyone's awareness," she said.

Dunn said his adventures in low-impact camping have allowed him to encounter cultures completely distinct from his own.

"I feel a lot more open-minded. I don't look at the Western way as the only way or the best way anymore," he said.

A three-month trip to East Africa last summer taught him a great deal about life a world away, he said.

"I moved around with different cultures. I spent time with Maasi, Swahili and Muslim people. I lived with all the different cultures trying not to disturb them," Dunn said.

The most memorable of all his low-impact camping experiences, Dunn said, came during his trip to East Africa when he stayed with the Maasi culture.

"We stayed in their houses. They're called bomas, and they're basically a bunch of sticks with crap holding them together," he said.

"They would drink (goat and cow) blood and pass the blood around to all of us. We had to decline it in the right way or they would get offended. We just wanted to blend in, and we couldn't act disgusted or they would get offended," Dunn said.

He said his encounters with Muslim people while in East Africa were also eye-opening.

"The Muslims don't wear shorts," Dunn said. "They only wear pants. You basically cover yourself up. They really respected us for doing that. They didn't treat us like they treated tourists. They respected us a lot more."

Low-impact camping not only involves honoring a society's culture, but the physical environment as well.

"It's like a science. It has very technical aspects to it. Anything we pack in, we pack out," Dunn said.

He said if grass was pushed down from a tent, then the group fluffs the grass back up before they leave. Also, the campers never walk single file so they don't wear a path down.

"If someone came to a campsite an hour after I left, they would never know I was there," he said.

"We don't affect the environment at all. We don't give food to animals because it could affect their diets."

Human waste isn't left behind, either. At lower altitudes, feces is buried six inches underground so bacteria can break it down. At higher altitudes, the feces must be smeared on rocks so the sun can decompose it, Dunn said.

"It sounds kind of gross, but it's all for the animals and for cultural and environmental reasons," he said.

Dunn said he hopes his next expedition takes him to South America so he can climb the Anacondia, a mountain in the Patagonia region of Chile.

Students who haven't had a chance to travel to other countries can still practice low-impact hiking in the United States.

"I do it because I take the philosophy that I'm a visitor to another person's home," Brett Beasley, senior in parks and resource management, said.

"I'm not going to leave my mess and trash around. It's nature's environment and I'm not going to mess that up," he said.

Beasley said that the most spectacular place he has visited is Yosemite Valley in California, which is a group of glaciers carved into the mountain sides.

He said it is one of the most frequently visited national parks in the United States and fears that ignorance could damage its beauty.

"My career objective is to graduate this semester and work with the U.S. Forest Service. The only way to help is to make people aware of the problem," Beasley said.

"Everyone is a tourist. Since part of my major is environmental interpretation, I want to work in a park and make tourists think about what they're doing to the environment," Beasley said.

Kim Jones, third-year law student at KU and K-State alumna, speaks about how the battered-woman's defense is often turned against a woman when in court.

Speaker says court testimony key in battered women cases

MEREDITH REILLY
Collegian

The U.S. legal system needs to be cautious in how it approaches the battered woman's syndrome, a third-year law student from the University of Kansas said Thursday.

Kim Jones, who spoke as part of Women's History Month, is working on a paper about the syndrome, which results after repeated episodes of physical assault on a woman by the man with whom she lives.

These repeated assaults often result in serious physical and psychological damage to the woman. Jones said in some instances, the syndrome provokes a woman to kill her husband.

One area Jones spoke about was the use of expert testimony in cases in which women use the battered woman's defense.

Jones said the use of expert testimony makes the jury depend on testimony other than the defendant's, which makes the woman look as if she's too weak to defend herself.

Jones also talked about contextual evidence, which is testimony from friends, relatives and witnesses in women's cases.

This type of evidence is adequate but doesn't give the jury an idea of how long or intense the abuse to the woman was, she said.

"It fails to recognize the intimacy between the batterer and the woman," Jones said.

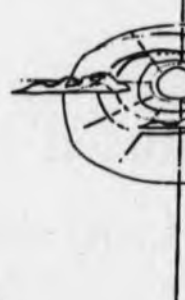

Many times, people don't understand the woman's abuse, so the evidence they present does not give an adequate account of how intense the abuse actually was.

She said because the battered woman knows her abuser intimately, only she can determine how bad the abuse is.

Voua Kiatoukaysi, senior in special education, said she agreed with Jones because many women have no way out of abusive situations.

"We should take the woman's testimony more seriously," she said.

Cats look to 2nd NIT win player, and their entire team played hard. They're a very well-coached team."

That team gave a sparse but vocal crowd something to cheer about, with its first victory in Bramlage since Feb. 22 against UMKC.

Although the evening's attendance hovered around 2,700, Altman said the turnout didn't surprise him.

"That was pretty much what we expected. You look around campus, and everyone's gone. Anyone can find a parking spot anywhere."

The attendance obviously didn't bother K-State, as the Cats hit almost 60 percent from the field in the second half and forced 18 Bulldog turnovers.

K-State's Askia Jones was back in his regular-season form, going 8-17 from the field and 3-9 in three-point territory, finishing with 20 points on the night.

Deryl Cunningham finished just behind Jones, tallying 16 points and pulling down six rebounds.

The Cats also got some solid play from their bench, with Brian Gavin finishing with eight points and five rebounds, while Stanley Hamilton chipped in four points and two boards.

Altman was pleased with his squad's play off the bench.

"In the past, I've been a little too conservative with my bench, but when things are going well for the team, it's easier to slide them in and give them some time," he said.

"Our bench has worked hard throughout the last three or four weeks. I've really admired Stanley Hamilton and Hamilton Strickland in practice. They never complained, and they kept working hard."

With the loss, Mississippi State ends its season with a record of 18-11, 9-7 in SEC play. One of those conference victories came against the top-ranked Arkansas

Razorbacks on Jan. 19.

After the game, Coach Williams denied any notion that he wasn't happy playing in the NIT.

"There's no lingering disappointment," Williams said. "None at all. We had a good season. I thought we exceeded our expectations this year, considering we had one senior and six players who had never played Division I basketball before."

With the win, K-State is slated to play Gonzaga sometime next week. Altman said at this point, he doesn't know where the game would take place.

"Stanford called the office today, and wanted to know about hotels in the area. They're on spring break next week, too, so I just don't know what's going to happen."

K-State's Jones said he knows what the Cats want to happen as the tournament progresses.

"We're not here just to play a few extra games. We're here to win the championship."

Leprechaun day, spring break serve as excuse for drinking green beer

"I'm drinking traditional tonight," Matt Brady, senior in history, said. "I've been drinking Irish whiskey and Irish cream; now I'm starting on Guinness Stout."

With all the hoopla of St. Pat's Day, many Aggieville bars had games, offered live music and gave away items to their customers.

Patrons at Lucky BrewGrille could try their skills on the ice slalom. Ice slalom?

"It's a 300 pound block of ice with grooves cut into it," Bob Leetch, owner of Lucky BrewGrille, said.

"A shot gets poured in at the top, and by the time it winds its way down to your mouth, it is ice cold."

Many people waited in line to give this form of alcohol consumption a try.

"I did this same type of thing in New York City a couple of months ago," Mike Surd, Manhattan resident, said.

"I had like 15 shots then and I'm getting close to that many here."

Besides the ice slalom, Lucky's had giveaways and, yes, plenty of green beer.

Christopher O'Bryan's had live music and they, too, were serving that infamous green beer.

"There were people that came in here and partied for awhile, left and have already come back," Tracie Rome, owner of O'Bryan's, said.

"Most people are drinking green beer, a lot of green beer."

With everyone drinking green beer, did the bartenders have it any easier? Not a chance.

"Because spring break is here and the weather is nice, people seem to be drinking more," Jeff Harbell, bartender at Lucky's, said.

"We kept busy behind the bar all night and looked forward to counting the tips."

Speaking of tipping, there were many people that began to "tip and sway" early in the night.

"We had a few people that we stopped serving to because they had already had a little too much," Dave Davidson, bartender at Lucky's, said.

"People start drinking so early on St. Patrick's Day that they have a tough time just making it to midnight," he said.

St. Patrick's Day 1994 is gone, and the Aggieville crowd enjoyed itself once again. The memories of good friends, good times and lots of green beer will not soon be forgotten. The only thing that many students are ready to forget is that terrible hangover.

"I hope I feel all right in the morning," Brady said. "I've been drinking for almost eight hours."

U.S. celebrates St. Pat's Day

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Americans, Irish or otherwise, toasted St. Patrick or got toasted Thursday. Some marched in parades, and some protested parades. Many celebrated the wearing of the green, and in Chicago, the water even turned green.

In Georgia, they didn't waste any time getting started. Savannah's 170th-annual St. Patrick's Day parade began so promptly at 10:15 a.m. that grand marshal Jerry Hogan's car took off without him.

"I've got the luck of the Irish yesterday, today, next April, every day," Hogan said after catching up with the car.

In New York City, there were protesters as well as revelers, and 102 gay-rights activists were arrested before the parade started. The activists were protesting a court order allowing the parade's sponsors to keep them out.

CATS TAKE IT TO NIT

K-State advances to the other final four to play the Vanderbilt Commodores at 6 p.m. CST today in New York

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Even if every other Big Eight Conference basketball team is home for the season, the K-State Wildcats are still alive and well, thank you.

The Cats have earned a trip to the Final Four of the National Invitational Tournament, which begins tonight at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

Here are some quick answers to the most pressing questions of Wildcat fans everywhere:

Q: I thought the Cats were stinking it up this year. What happened over break?

A: Nobody's quite sure. All this season, the Wildcats have been the Gang Who Couldn't Shoot Straight, hitting only 37 percent of their attempts in Big Eight play.

But in the past three games, they've played relaxed, and their shooting percentage has shot up into the stratosphere. K-State has hit 49.6 from the field during the NIT.

Q: What is the NIT?

A: The NIT was formed in 1938 by a group of basketball writers who wanted a tournament to decide who were the national collegiate basketball champions.

In the current format, 32 teams play three rounds at college sites, with the four survivors advancing to New York.

There is also a preseason NIT, which the Cats will take part in this coming November. It includes some of the top teams in the country.

Last November, Kansas was the Big Eight representative and knocked off the University of Massachusetts for the title.

Over the years, the postseason NIT lost some of its prestige as the NCAA has expanded the size of its own tournament, but it still draws large crowds to Madison Square Garden.

Q: Who is K-State playing tonight?

A: The Cats will take on the Vanderbilt Commodores from Nashville, Tenn., at 6 p.m. CST.

Vanderbilt is a private university of 9,300 students that plays in the Southeastern Conference.

Former Wichita State coach Eddie Fogler took over the Commodore basketball program in 1990 but left for South Carolina before this season.

Q: Is the game being televised?

A: Yes, it will be shown nationally on ESPN, which is on Manhattan cable channel 25. The Cats also will be carried on local radio stations WIBW 580-AM, KMAN 1350-AM and KJCK 1340-AM.

Q: Are the Commodores any good?

A: Vanderbilt went 19-11 this season, including a 9-7 record in the eastern division of the SEC, and was miffed when they didn't receive a bid for the NCAA tournament.

Vandy reached the Sweet Sixteen of the NCAA tournament last year and won the NIT championship in 1990.

In this season's NIT, the Commodores beat Oklahoma in Norman in the first round, 77-67, and dispatched New Orleans (78-59) and Clemson (89-74) to reach the Final Four.

Q: Who should I watch for tonight?

A: For the Cats to win, they'll have to contain Vanderbilt's star forward Billy McCaffrey, who brings a 20.9-point scoring average to Madison Square Garden.

McCaffrey played for Duke when the team won the national NCAA championship over KU in 1991. He transferred to Vanderbilt after the '91 season to get more playing time.

Q: Who else is in the Final Four?

A: The Siena Saints (24-7) from Loudonville, N.Y., and the 18-12 Villanova (Penn.) Wildcats are still contenders. They will play 30 minutes after the conclusion of the K-State/Vanderbilt game.

Q: So, what happens if the Cats win tonight?

A: K-State will play the Siena/Villanova winner for the NIT championship at 8 p.m. CST on Wednesday. It will also be televised on ESPN.

Q: And if they don't?

A: The Cats will play the loser of today's other semifinal for third place Wednesday, at 5:45 p.m. The game will be on the Wildcat radio network.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Deryl Cunningham dunks home the ball during K-State's 115-77 win against Fresno State last Thursday night. Cunningham's 10 points in the contest were overshadowed by Askia Jones' record setting 62 points. In 28 minutes of playing time, Jones hit 14 three-pointers and set the record for most points scored by an individual in NCAA play this season. Cunningham, Jones and the rest of the team will play Vanderbilt tonight at Madison Square Garden. The game will be televised on ESPN at 6 p.m.

K-State Salina gets face lift

Residence hall, campus center in works

KIMBERLY HEPLING
Collegian

A new campus center and residence hall are just a few changes being made at the K-State-Salina campus.

Construction will begin within a few days for a new college center at the Salina campus, Bonnie Scranton, director of college advancement, said.

The college center will house administrative offices upstairs with a bookstore, a lecture hall seating 200-300 people, and a dining center on the lower level, Scranton said.

Funding for the college center will primarily be paid for by tax revenues from Salina residents, Scranton said.

For two years, Salina residents taxed themselves with a half-cent sales tax to fund the college center.

"It's an extraordinary commitment," Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, said.

"It's very progressive of the people to look at the Salina campus as an economic issue for the community."

Scranton said the college center probably will open in April 1995.

In August 1994, K-State-Salina students will be able to move into a new co-ed residence hall.

The residence halls will have four-person suites with two two-person rooms sharing a bathroom.

Each room will have carpeting, a telephone, wiring for cable and will be equipped with an IBM-compatible computer connected to the campus network.

Because K-State-Salina, as a technical college, has a curriculum so dependent on computers, administrators thought it was important to make them available to the students, Scranton said.

The residence hall will not have a dining center.

Students can get an optional meal plan at the college center.

"We want students to live in the residence hall," Scranton said.

"We encourage them to get a meal plan, but we decided to give them a choice."

The price of living in the residence hall in Salina will be comparable to the price of living on campus in Manhattan, but laundry services will be free for residents.

For the past three years, students at the K-State-Salina campus have lived in Kansas Wesleyan University housing and have had to drive about two miles to get to class.

"Kansas Wesleyan has done a superb job in providing for them," Scranton said.

As a result of funds from K-State students, Stranton said, Kansas Wesleyan will be able to fund renovations for the residence hall the K-State students lived in.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

A residence hall under construction on the K-State-Salina campus will have four-person suites.

Since the merger of the Kansas College of Technology with K-State in May 1991, the campus has doubled the size of its library and built a new robotics lab and an aviation-maintenance hanger.

Scranton said in the future, if funding is available, a new recreational facility will be built on campus.

PARTNERSHIP FOR EXCELLENCE

Finney vows to veto funds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — The Senate on March 18 passed a bill 27-13 that would appropriate $449 million for the state's six universities, a measure most believe will be vetoed by the governor.

The bill contains $12 million to increase the salaries of faculty members under a three-year program the Board of Regents calls Partnership for Excellence. It went to the House.

Gov. Joan Finney has vowed to veto money for that program if the Legislature does not bring Washburn University of Topeka into the state system. Washburn is the nation's last municipal college, and the Senate killed a measure to give it state affiliation last week, 13-23.

Finney and the regents proposed the Partnership as part of a package that included bringing Washburn into the state system. She said she would veto the additional money for faculty salaries unless Washburn becomes a Board of Regents university.

She reiterated that pledge before the Senate debate on Friday.

"I support the entire package. It's the complete package, all or nothing," she told reporters in an impromptu news conference outside her Statehouse office before the Senate session.

The Senate passed the measure with just enough votes, 27, for the two-thirds majority needed to override a veto. It takes 84 of 125 votes in the House to override a veto.

"The Legislature never agreed they were a package," Senate Majority Leader Sheila Frahm, R-Colby, said.

During the debate, Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, failed in an attempt to amend the measure so the money for the Partnership would be placed in a separate line item.

He wanted to allow Finney to veto that money without vetoing the entire regents appropriations bill.

As it stands now, Finney will have to veto all appropriations for the Board of Regents schools just to get at Graduate teaching assistants may qualify for Partnership for Excellence raises under K-State's definition of the PFE.

The PFE is part of an appropriation that would increase tuition at state schools in order to increase faculty salaries. The bill, which was passed by the Kansas Senate March 18, would increase tuition at K-State by 9 percent the next three years.

The bill now goes to the House for approval. However, Gov. Joan Finney has threatened to veto the bill because a bill to admit Washburn in to the regents system was killed by the Senate earlier this session.

All ranked faculty on a permanent appointment in an academic unit and graduate teaching assistants will be eligible for the raises, Peter Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said.

He said the deans of the colleges and the provost are making guidelines as to where the money will go if the PFE passes.

"Who will get the money is not totally decided," Nicholls said. "Once you decide what the eligible pool is then you decide who gets the money."

Heads of departments will decide how the money is distributed, he said.

"Different departments will handle the money in different ways," Nicholls said. "Department heads will work with the faculty."

TANKER CRASHES, SPEWS 12,000 GALLONS OF GAS

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — A gasoline tanker blew a tire and overturned Sunday, bursting into flames and setting the driver on fire. A man ran past a dozen onlookers to save the driver as he rolled on the ground in flames.

The Getty Petroleum Corp. tanker was carrying 12,000 gallons of gas when it crashed about 7 a.m. at the merger of Interstates 95 and 195, state police said.

The driver, Jack Ordner, 50, received third-degree burns over 50 to 60 percent of his body and was in critical but stable condition at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center, Rick Piester, a representative for Rhode Island Hospital, said.

JAPANESE STUDENTS CRITICALLY WOUNDED

LOS ANGELES — A Japanese teen-ager and another teen were critically wounded in a carjacking outside a supermarket, prompting a Japanese official to suggest Japanese citizens in the United States be especially careful.

Takuma Ito and Go Matsura, both 19-year-old students at Marymount College in Palos Verdes, were shot in the head at 11 p.m. Friday as they got out of their car in the parking lot of a store in San Pedro, police said.

The gunman then drove off in the teens' car, Los Angeles police repre-

John Santos said he felt the impact of the rollover inside a nearby YMCA, where he works as a security guard. He ran out and saw a dozen people watching Ordner, who was on fire near the tanker.

"I was screaming for people to drag him away, but no one did anything," Santos said.

Santos said he ran across both highways to reach Ordner, then used his hands to put out the flames on the driver. Ordner was trying to roll around to extinguish his burning clothes, he said.

"Disgust is what I feel," Santos said of the onlookers. "I can't believe people would stand there and watch a man burn without helping him."

SOME RESEARCH DATA FALSIFIED

NEW YORK — Federal health officials will audit the research behind a study that found a partial mastectomy with radiation was as effective as a full mastectomy in treating breast cancer, the New York Times reported Sunday.

Auditors will study all related documents at the University of Pittsburgh, which coordinated the study, following the news that some research data was falsified, the Times said.

The National Cancer Institute will also examine original records at many of the 89 U.S. and Canadian hospitals where 1,843 women took part in the surgical study that helped change the way breast cancer is treated.

The audit, set to begin Thursday, is expected to take several months and may be extended to 13 other cancer studies.

COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE

Dean brings teaching, research experience

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Interviewing for a job can be a queasy, sick-to-your stomach experience.

Imagine how Marc Johnson, the new dean of the College of Agriculture, feels.

"I just went through an 18-month interview," Johnson said.

Johnson served as interim dean from September 1992 until he was appointed permanently to the position Feb. 28.

Even though he now has a permanent job, Johnson said he will not have much time to relax.

That's because Johnson is not only the dean, but also the director of the Agricultural Experiment Station and director of the Cooperative Extension Service.

"I really enjoy this job," Johnson said. "It has tremendous variety."

"You have the opportunity to work with constituents in the industry, do development work raising funds for high-priority projects and to work with faculty and students across several colleges trying to develop new program thrusts."

Johnson brings to the job a variety of experience and a knowledge and appreciation of the land-grant university system, Barry Flinchbaugh, extension state leader in agricultural economics, said.

"Marc is one of the few academicians who has had experience in extension, research and teaching," Flinchbaugh said.

"He understands all three very well. He is a rare combination."

The broad variety of Johnson's experience reflects the variety of issues facing agriculture today.

Agriculture is a much broader term than most people perceive, Johnson said.

The College of Agriculture is involved in a broad range of issues that affect everyone, not just the 2 percent of the population that are farmers, he said.

Among the concerns affecting everyone are the influences agricultural production has on the general economy, the environment and food safety, Johnson said.

"We are adding more emphasis on the relationship between agriculture and the environment, food safety and value-added utilization of farm products," Johnson said.

"In addition, we are participating in a campus-wide rural and community development forum to bring the resources to bear on community-development issues, particularly in the rural areas," he said.

Another concern is that the federal government is restructuring how it supports agriculture.

The federal government, through the U.S. Department of Agriculture, plays an important part in funding K-State's agricultural program, but the state provides a much larger share of the money, Johnson said.

"Reductions at the USDA won't have catastrophic effects on us," he said.

There also will probably be a shift away from traditional public sources of funding under Johnson's administration, Flinchbaugh said.

"Johnson will excel in dealing with large agribusiness firms," Flinchbaugh said.

"He'll attract them to invest in this University, and we will grow because of that."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Kansas House dupes Finney again

Maybe the Legislature just has too much time on its hands if it can continue to play silly power games with Finney.

Score one for the Kansas House in its legislative hijinks with Gov. Joan Finney.

The House last week ensured that Finney's top legislative priority, public initiative, would be nothing more than symbolism.

An amendment to the Kansas Constitution was adopted that would create a public initiative system — one that would conceivably allow voters to put questions on ballots that would not go through the Kansas Legislature.

What the House did before passing this, however, was to strip it of its power. It denied voters the opportunity to propose laws, ensuring that the only thing they could propose would be constitutional amendments.

And even the constitutional amendments cannot be on budget matters, the court system or how laws and proposed amendments are enacted. They also can't propose to expand the initiative system.

And if voters can get past that roadblock, they have more, almost impossible, obstacles to avoid on the way to getting the issues on the ballots.

What does all this mean?

Kansas now has a new empty amendment.

Maybe the Legislature just has too much time on its hands if it can continue to play silly power games with Finney.

If the House believed it was such a bad amendment, they should have simply voted it down rather than adopt a meaningless proposal.

With serious issues such as death-penalty and sex-crime legislation, there are a few more substantive proposals that deserve the time and energy spent on adopting a worthless amendment that may be no more than a slap in the face to the governor who pushed so hard for it.

Competent presidents have little entertainment value

If Jesus had been a Democrat, Bob Dole would have been Pontius Pilate.

I came to this conclusion while watching a rebroadcast of a C-SPAN call-in program, pondering the incredible disdain for President Bill Clinton and Democrats in general coming from the callers' comments.

I found myself "here, here"-ing their complaints until I realized what this American political phenomenon really is.

Before continuing, I want to qualify this whole column by stating I believe Clinton is paving America's way to Hell with good intentions; that is, the fellow means well but is just a poor politician.

But, so soon I forget. So was George Bush. Without swarthy foreign military enemies he was impotent, too.

Former President Ronald Reagan's acting skills made him an effective leader but didn't help him much in policy making.

At least he could charm Americans to do and believe what he wanted. But, his charm changed our definition of leadership. I believe we are the worse for it.

SCOTT ALLEN MILLER

You see, Dole pillories Clinton on any stock-ade he can find.

After so much of this unrelenting political warfare, we get tunnel vision and begin to believe that Clinton is the worst politician ever to come to the White House (remember Ford, anyone? Taft?).

It's easy to forget a few years ago Americans were saying George Bush was an out-of-touch blueblood elitist. Remember when Bush was the biggest loser on television? Well, Clinton is now.

Of course, that's ancient history to us Americans. Yesterday doesn't matter to us anymore, so then tomorrow does. Yet, we have an aftertaste in our mouths, a distant memory about what leadership was "in the good old days." That memory is Reagan.

Reagan surpassed John F. Kennedy in his ability to manipulate the media; he was camera friendly, gave speeches often, defined the use of one-liners and sound bites for politicians yet to be born, and said little of detail or depth.

Bush's critics said he lacked charisma. Face it — whether Bush was a Bozo or not, he had a hard act to follow.

Clinton still faces a public expecting another Reagan, at least in entertainment value. Add to this the fact that the national press is stinging from astute criticisms that reporters have been far too easy on the Clintons; so, they now go out of their way to be unduly tough on them.

Am I the only one who's noticed that the journalists who kiss Clinton's figurative bum on the Sunday afternoon "talking head" shows have been trying really hard recently to act unbiased by being overly critical and rude in their White House reporting?

It will be a long time before anyone manipulates the comatose American couch potato who never reads columns in quite the way and to the degree Reagan did.

Who else has videos on sale touting their presidency?

My point is that we as Americans have expected too much from Bush and Clinton where it doesn't count and too little where it does.

Additionally, we expect too little from the Washington press corps. We expect too little in details, accuracy and fairness.

It's no surprise that some of the biggest stories in recent presidential political contests have come from tabloids (namely, the Donna Rice and the Gennifer Flowers scandals); the Washington press corps was too busy watching CNN and C-SPAN, listening to National Public Radio and reading the New York Times trying to find out which stories had legs instead of finding news on their own. It's as if they want stories to fall in their laps.

We need to quit expecting our presidents to be performers. We need to quit viewing sober, thorough and prudent leaders like Jack Kemp and Paul Tsongas as "uncharismatic." We need to value excellence where it really counts.

Otherwise, the Bob Doles of the world will be able to criticize out of power any president who doesn't entertain as Reagan did.

We need to quit expecting our presidents to be performers. We need to quit viewing sober, thorough and prudent leaders like Jack Kemp and Paul Tsongas as "uncharismatic."

The Cold War that's not so cold

My friend Rick thinks that if the citizens of North Korea really, really want nuclear weapons, that we should drop a few on their heads.

"It worked with the Japs," he said.

Not being a big fan of atomic explosions myself, I informed him that this was perhaps not the most civilized way to resolve our differences with North Korea.

"It'd teach them what they're getting into when they want to play with the big boys," Rick said.

Often there are days in which talking to Rick is actively unpleasant, but I can never seem to stop. Talking to him is like watching a eight-car high-speed wreck that I just can't tear my eyes away from.

Masochistically, I forged ahead. I asked him why we should care if North Korea built one or two bomber-delivered nukes.

"We can't just let anyone have nuclear weapons, stupid," he replied. "They'll just use them to bully everyone around."

I guess only the United States has the moral authority to do that. I asked him whether he was afraid North Korea would pose much of a threat to anyone backed by us and our nukes.

"Of course. Why else would they want nukes?"

I could think of one really good reason why North Korea would want nukes that they never intend to use.

I explained to Rick about the nuclear-proliferation treaties and what they said about countries that don't have atomic weapons.

Basically, if you are a Second or Third World nation that has nuclear power but doesn't have nuclear weapons, you have to allow foreign inspectors to check out your military and energy plants whenever we get a little concerned about it.

So, if you are one of these countries, it is extremely attractive to build a bomb or two, just to get everyone else off your back. North Korea may simply be tired of United Nations inspectors poking their noses wherever they like.

I mentioned this all to Rick, and all he had to say was, "Look, you peace-loving wimp. If North Korea gets the bomb, it will destabilize the whole region."

Just like what would have happened in the Middle East if Iraq had whipped up a bomb.

"Yeah, just like that," Rick said.

My roommate Dave has a theory about nuclear proliferation that seems pretty reasonable to me.

It rests on the assumption that nuclear proliferation is inevitable. I'm under the impression that the knowledge required to build a bomb can be obtained from classes here at K-State and through some research at the library (well, maybe not at Farrell).

After that, all that is really needed is some fissionable material, and there has been quite a bit of that floating around since the breakup of the Soviet Union.

Despite all this, people like Rick wish to go on believing we can stop further proliferation by flexing our own military muscle. Or maybe he just likes any excuse for us to flex our military muscle — I don't know.

I, however, agree with Dave. There isn't any technology that can remain the property of a select few nations for very long. Our spy-people just aren't up to controlling that much of the world. They can't even keep their own people from spying on them.

So, Dave's theory goes like this: Nuclear proliferation is inevitable, and the faster it happens, the better. Proliferation won't destabilize the world because everyone will have nukes.

What will destabilize the world is continued attempts by superpowers to stop proliferation.

Let's look at our recent track record: Hundreds of thousands dead in Iraq because "Saddam could have a nuke in two years!"

And it's possible such attempts will lead to a war with North Korea next.

On the other hand, NATO countries, ex-Soviet countries run by a variety of weirdos, India, China and God knows who else have nuclear weapons. Has this led to serious destabilization?

I find it ironic that we are screwing with North Korea about nukes. After all, North Korea is really China's only ally, and China is the only other superpower with a fearsome nuclear arsenal left.

But it is obvious the United States, NATO and the United Nations don't think like me. They still think like Rick. They're still thinking in terms of Cold War-type containment.

So, there's nothing to do, I guess, but strap yourself in: We, the Global Cowboys, are off to make the world safe again.

Calculators were never meant to think for you

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to the letter by Matthew Mercer in the March 17 Collegian.

It is true that K-State now makes use of the TI-81 and TI-82 graphing calculators in the College Algebra course.

The University of Kansas and Johnson County Community College have been doing this for several years. However, the basic structure of the course has not changed.

Like all new technology, the calculators are just tools to help the user. It is not there to do your homework or to replace the human brain. One of the reasons for introducing the calculators into College Algebra was to get away from the "50-minute canned lectures."

Mercer mentioned that about half the students failed the first exam and implied it was because of the calculators.

Of the 19 questions given on the first exam, only two involved the use of the calculator, and of those two, only one required you to actually turn it on.

Mercer also made the statement that if "... they have trouble and ask for help, then the instructors should provide that help." The mathematics department offers free help sessions four days a week (for a total of 26 hours) and run during both the day and several evenings to allow for most students' schedules.

This information is clearly stated in the syllabus for College Algebra. During each of these sessions, there are four or more qualified individuals available who can help you with your questions.

Finally, in answer to your last statement, NO ONE in the math department receives kickbacks from Texas Instruments. This accusation is both ridiculous, libelous and unfounded.

As is the standard practice University-wide, companies whose books are selected for use provide desk copies to the instructors for use in the classroom.

As with textbooks, Texas Instruments provided the math department with calculators for use by the College Algebra instructors. The instructors must return these at the end of the semester.

In addition, the math department negotiated with Texas Instruments to get a price break for the students of more than $40 per calculator.

► HEALTH PLAN

K-State insurance policy has much to be desired

Dear Editor,

Both my husband and I are K-State graduates. There are many good things that made our years at K-State enjoyable and fruitful, but there is one that bothered us for the past two years and unfortunately still does, even if we carried on with our lives and moved to a different state.

This one thing is the health insurance plan that was selected in 1992, the plan with GM Underwriters.

I became pregnant in July of 1993. Even if now we have another insurance that will provide for the delivery, etc., we still have to pay for the prenatal care received while in Manhattan, from July '93 to Jan. '94. The doctor's bill ($740) is what still links us to GM Underwriters.

Their service is despicable — only on March 10 did I receive two identical letters from them stating that a claim of mine for $30 was being denied because it was previously processed and applied to my deductible.

What does this mean? And what claim does it refer to, anyway?

Hard to tell, because the letters do not have any treatment date on them, nor the name for the provider.

I called the insurance company, and a rude operator tried to convince me the letters did have the name of the doctor and the date of service.

When the rude operator found out that I was talking about prenatal care, she stated that none of the charges was eligible because I am going to have the baby with another insurance plan. I asked to talk to a manager, and she said all the charges are eligible. Who should I believe?

Besides, this manager told me their request for information about my last menstrual cycle, which I received and promptly processed last week, shouldn't have been sent at all because I was covered since 1992.

I sense a lot of confusion on their part, lack of professionalism and especially organization.

But these are only the latest events. Our misfortunes with GM date way back.

We had a family plan, which includes an annual deductible of $100 per student and $200 per family.

This sounded pretty good, until we found out it's actually a $200 per person per family. Why did they omit "per person" in their pamphlets?

Last, but not least, we received a list of claims pertaining to a certain Gary Cleveland, including his Social Security number and other private information such as doctors visited and the amount of the charges. Would you like such personal information sent to all people that happen to have your last name?

I think that an insurance company that cannot tell between Gary and George Cleveland, that does not make the deductible clear, that asks for irrelevant information, and has incompetent, rude operators on the line should not be allowed to provide any service for our University.

K-State students deserve a better plan, one that will match the high standards of the other services of this University.

'Bad hair day' wonders if baldness is secret behind baseball caps

Dear Cassandra,

Recently, my boyfriend and I broke up, and I have been trying to date other guys. I love dating men who appear to be "just one of the guys." I am especially attracted to guys who wear baseball caps and have a great smile.

Recently, I had a date with a guy I have liked for quite a while, but I never saw him without his hat.

When he showed up for our first date, to my dismay, he had a serious receding hairline. I find this totally unattractive, but it has been the case with my past three dates. This was also the case with my ex-boyfriend, and it always bothered me.

Am I doomed to marry a man who will be bald before the age of 30? Do all guys wear baseball caps because they are losing their hair? Will I ever find a guy who wears a baseball cap for fashion reasons? Help me!

Signed,
Bad hair day

Dear Day,

In my experience, I have found that most men wear baseball caps because they have something to hide. Bad hair or no hair are the top two reasons. Some wear them as a fashion statement, but they are in the minority.

As for your distaste for hair loss, I think you will find as you grow older that external qualities have less importance. You begin to search for the inner beauty in people. You will hunt for a man with similar beliefs, interests in life and admirable qualities. Physical attraction will play a role in building a relationship, but it will not be the primary one.

Interactive tour of Graceland offered on CD

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Say you're tired of solitaire and the other games on your home computer, and maybe you're feeling a tad lonesome for Elvis.

How about a romp through the Jungle Room or an interactive review of the King's gold records? Did you ever wonder how the felt on his pool table got torn?

Sometime this summer, you can experience Elvis on your desktop computer with a CD-ROM that features a digitized tour of Graceland, Presley's former residence.

"It allows the user to go in and kind of wander around Graceland at his own pace," Dave Antil, a project manager at Crunch Media of Los Angeles, the company producing the disc, said.

A CD-ROM, or "compact disc, read only memory," has hundreds of times the storage capacity of a regular floppy disc and can carry sounds and moving pictures as well as still shots and text.

With the Graceland CD, a pilgrim will be able to put his computer's cursor on selected parts of a still photo and call up an Elvis video, an interview with his cook or even a peek inside a dining-room china cabinet.

Click on the pool table, and some of Elvis' old buddies will talk about the night the felt was torn. It happened during a pool game, and Presley never got it repaired.

The CD will contain 100 minutes of interviews with former Elvis friends, backup singers and fellow musicians. There'll be old interviews with Elvis, too, and clips from the 1968 "comeback special" when the king of rock 'n' roll gave up his less-than-brilliant search for movie greatness.

Longing for another look at his TV performance with a hounddog sporting a top hat? It'll be there, too.

The computer tour will feature the rooms open to the 650,000 visitors a year who visit Graceland in person, but the CD trip will show them from various angles unavailable now to the general public.

It also will show close-ups of Elvis possessions like the big chair in the ceiling-carpeted Jungle Room where Presley's daughter, Lisa Marie, often napped as a child.

Presley's bedroom will continue to be off limits, as will be the upstairs toilet where he was found unconscious in August 1977, to be pronounced dead a short time later at a Memphis hospital.

A medical examiner listed the cause of death as heart disease, but physicians and former Presley associates have said over the years that his health was undermined by drug abuse.

The Graceland disc, which Antil expects to sell for about $80, will have versions for Macintosh or IBM-compatible computers. CD-ROM computer attachments (or drives) start at $250 and go up.

Since 1988, 5.5 million CD-ROM drives have been shipped to buyers in the United States, with 3.4 million of those sold last year, according to Dataquest Inc. of San Jose, Calif.

While Elvis wasn't known as a technical whiz himself (he didn't even own an electric guitar when he started off) and his fans aren't generally thought of as computer buffs, Graceland managers say it's time to put the King on the information superhighway.

"Needless to say, we're in business. That's the simple reason we're doing it," said Jack Soden, president of Elvis Presley Enterprises Inc.

Soden said he hasn't decided yet on a selling price for the CDs and is still talking with potential distributors. The discs will be sold at Graceland's souvenir shops, of course, but may also be available at discount stores and other outlets.

So who is going to buy them? Who knows, Soden said. The phenomenon of Presley's continuing popularity can show itself in unusual ways.

"The CD-ROM will turn some computer fans into Elvis fans and some Elvis fans into computer hackers," Soden said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cats to play in city that never sleeps

Askia Jones looks to drive the ball against Fresno State's Ted Bull. Jones scored 62 points in the contest, hitting 14 three pointers. His point total was the highest single-game scoring effort by any individual this season in Division I-A basketball.

Ski shoots K-State to New York, NIT

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

So, you went on spring break.

You missed an incredible performance by Askia Jones Thursday night.

62 points.
14 three pointers.
The crowd chanted "Ski, Ski, Ski" during most of the game as whatever he tossed up fell through the hoop.

Oh yeah — the rest of the team played pretty well as the Cats defeated the Fresno State Bulldogs, 115-77.

The win on the part of the Cats was big — it sent them to the semifinals of the National Invitational Tournament in New York.

But, that was not the biggest part of the evening.

Ski was.
Jones scored 62 points against the Dogs and broke records galore in his fourth final home game.

As the crowd chanted his name and did the "we're not worthy" wave, Jones sat on the bench and smiled. When he wasn't on the bench resting, he was shooting the three pointers.

Coach Dana Altman said he was impressed with Jones' performance during the win.

"It was one heck of a shooting performance tonight," Altman said. "Guarded, unguarded, it didn't matter. He knocked them down. He really was feeling it tonight and got 62 points in 28 minutes.

"That is a pretty good night."
Altman put Jones back into play toward the end of the game to help him attain the shooting title.

"The reason I put him back — that young man has been here for five years and has been through four surgeries," Altman said. "Everybody was quick to jump on him when he had a six-point performance against Iowa State and a two-point performance against Kansas.

"I wanted him to end his career here at Bramlage with his head up," he said. "He deserves it. He has worked hard, and he is going down as the third all-time leading scorer in Kansas State history.

"I am glad he has had the opportunity in this NIT tournament to show people again he can play," Altman said.

Jones was not short on thanking his teammates for the assistance they gave him.

"I have to thank the team for giving me good screens and helping to get me open," Jones said. "The team sacrificed some shots and looked for me."

"Some of them, I thought, might have been short. I shot a few, and my legs were getting tired.

"Sometimes when I fall down after a shot, I think I miss it, so hopefully the ref calls a foul," he said.

After ending the regular season with three losses (Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa State) and a 73-52 loss to KU in the Big Eight Tournament, the NIT games have allowed the Cats to regroup and perform at the level many people expected from them all season.

Winning against Fresno State served as a high mark for the Cats this season and was the way many of the seniors wanted to end their careers at home.

"For the seniors, we didn't want to go out on a bad note against KU," Jones said.

"We came back strong against Mississippi State, struggled some against Gonzaga, but we picked the defensive intensity up. We've picked our offense up. There is more movement and more freedom, so things are just happening."

Deryl Cunningham agreed with Jones that the game against Fresno State was the way the seniors wanted to finish at home.

"It was a great way to end the season," Cunningham said. "Well, not end the season, but here in Bramlage."

It was the second time this season that K-State broke the century mark in scoring, and it also tied the 1991 record of most points in a single game. The Cats scored 115 against Delaware State.

JONES SETS 62-POINT RECORD

Askia Jones scored 62 points Thursday, March 24, to set a Big Eight single-game scoring record. The previous record was held by Wayman Tisdale of Oklahoma with 61 against Texas-San Antonio in 1983.

JONES' BIG EIGHT RECORDS

- Most single-game treys: 14 (old record 11)
- Most 3-pt field goals in a half: 11 (old, 7)
- Most 3-pt field goals in a game: 14 (old, 11)
- Most 3-pt field goal attempts in a half: 14 (old, 12)

While the Cats had hopes earlier this season of taking part in the NCAA Tournament, their record and performance in the Big Eight Tournament did not lead to a bid.

However, the NIT has proven to be a positive experience for the Cats. What was once a gloomy season has turned bright in the past three games.

"The NIT has been very good for us," Altman said. "I'm grateful people have shown up (at the games) because the NIT is good for basketball. The NIT has given us the opportunity to play."

Watching Jones hit all those three pointers must have goaded the rest of the team into getting into the act.

Even Cunningham had the green light to take a shot from beyond the arc.

"It was a shame I didn't get to shoot more," Cunningham said. "If I have it again, I'll take the shot."

Cunningham was surprised at the Jones' success during the game.

"The only time I've seen anything like that was on Michael Jordan's 'Come Fly with Me' tape," he said. "He (Jones) hit about 10 or 12 straight yesterday in practice."

While the Cats hit just about everything they wanted to, Fresno State had foul trouble early.

As the Cats won the game and headed for the locker room, the crowd wanted to see Ski one more time. He obliged them by walking back on to the floor for one final wave to the fans he has always said were key to the Cats' success.

"Coach (Ken) Turner came up and said the crowd wants you to go out there. So, I just gave them my salute and thanks," Jones said.

K-State will face Vanderbilt tonight in New York City. It will be the first time the Cats have made it to the NIT semifinals.

ROYALS 11, TIGERS 7

David Cone gave up seven runs in six innings but still got the win Sunday as the Kansas City Royals outslug the Detroit Tigers 11-7. Wally Joyner homered, and the Royals got triples from Gary Gaetti, Vince Coleman and Chris Gwynn. Travis Fryman, Junior Felix, Lou Whitaker and Juan Samuel all homered for the Tigers, who have lost five of seven during the past week.

Cats to play Vandy on road to finals

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

For the first time in K-State history, the Wildcats will play in the semifinals of the National Invitational Tournament.

K-State faces Vanderbilt tonight in New York City at Madison Square Garden, where the Cats hope to continue the winning streak they have built during the past few weeks.

"I am excited for our seniors first of all, and I'm excited for our team," Coach Dana Altman said. "We took a little poll, and none of our guys have been to New York."

"So, it is going to be a new experience for all of us. We are all excited about going. This has been a good experience for all our players."

Before the start of K-State's spring break, the Cats defeated the Mississippi State Bulldogs 78-67.

During the break, the Cats defeated both Gonzaga and Fresno State.

The Gonzaga game went to the final moments as the Cats finally triumphed 66-64. Against the Fresno State Bulldogs, K-State's shooting woes were forgotten.

Askia Jones hit for 62 points to lead the Cats to a 115-77 win against the Dogs. The Cats ended the game shooting a 56.3 field-goal percentage and 63.9 percent from beyond the three-point arc.

With these three wins, the Cats earned the right to travel to the Big Apple to play against Vanderbilt.

From the beginning of the tourney, Altman has said the Cats have been in it to win.

"I hope our guys want to go to win it all," Altman said. "It is an opportunity for us to get over 20 wins. I hope our team is not satisfied. Because we can finish off well here."

Deryl Cunningham, who has come on strong and ruled the boards this season for the Cats, averaging 10.2 rebounds per game, said he has just one worry heading to New York.

"My folks will watch the game on TV, but I'll be lucky if my mom doesn't fly to New York," Cunningham said. "I have a hard time keeping her from flying all over the place."

In order to advance to the finals, Altman and the Cats must get by Vanderbilt. Vanderbilt had a 9-7 Southeastern Conference record during this season and is 19-11 overall in both regular- and postseason play.

The Commodores' run to the NIT semifinals left Oklahoma, New Orleans and Clemson in the dust. Vanderbilt defeated the Sooners 77-67 in Norman in the first round of the tourney.

"We know Vandy is really good," Altman said after the win against Fresno State. "I watched them on TV last night. Man, they are a good basketball team. They are a senior-dominated team. We know that they'll be excited."

"We know that our hands are going to be full, but we are going there to win," he said.

Against Clemson in the third round, the Commodores beat up on the Tigers 89-74.

Vanderbilt's coaches and players have seen K-State in action and are preparing for the game.

"Obviously, Kansas State is a very good team which has been playing well in the NIT," Commodore coach Jan van Breda Kolff said.

"Kansas State is well coached, a very good defensive team and is a fundamentally sound team."

"They are capable of playing a slow-down game in the 60s and then explode for a 115-point game in which they run and score in transition. It's going to be a real challenge to play against them," he said.

van Breda Kolff is in his first year as coach at Vanderbilt. He coached two years at Cornell.

The game will be televised on ESPN at 6 p.m. Both the winners and the losers of the semifinals will play in New York.

The championship game will be televised on ESPN at 8 p.m. Wednesday. The consolation game, also on Wednesday, is scheduled for 5:45 p.m., but will not be televised.

Gophers push Cats into a hole during weekend series

BRIAN ANDERSON

The K-State baseball team was swept by Minnesota in three games this weekend at the Metrodome in Minneapolis.

K-State lost 10-4 both Friday and Saturday and 4-1 during Sunday's game.

The Cats have lost four of their last five games, the only victory was an 8-5 win against Kansas last Wednesday, and have lost 13 of their last 15 contests.

The Wildcats are now 10-17 overall and 1-3 in Big Eight play this season.

With the wins, Minnesota moved to 10-9 overall, and has won nine of its last 10 games.

K-State jumped to a 1-0 lead in the first inning on Sunday with a single and stolen base by center fielder Adam Green. Green then scored on a single from designated hitter Matt Miller.

The Golden Gophers got a run in the second inning, and gained the lead when center fielder Wes Denning led off the fifth with a double.

They then scored on a single by catcher Darren Grass off of K-State's starting pitcher Jon Oiseth (3-4).

Denning cushioned the Minnesota lead with a two-run double in the eighth inning.

Minnesota's Joe Westfall (1-2) got the win, and Justin Pederson came in to pitch the ninth inning for his first save.

Minnesota sent 11 batters to the plate with two outs in the bottom of the fifth inning for five runs as the Gophers beat the Cats 10-4 in the first game on Friday.

The Wildcats took a 2-0 lead in the first inning before Minnesota came back with four runs in the second inning.

K-State got two runs in the fourth to tie the game, but Minnesota earned a run in the bottom half of the inning off of losing pitcher Rob Merriman (2-4).

Minnesota's starter Kerry Ligtenberg (3-3) had the win for the Gophers.

K-State's defense committed four errors and left 11 runners stranded on the bases during Friday's 10-4 defeat.

The Cats started the second game of the series with a solo home run by right fielder Dave Hendrix into the right field upper deck of the Metrodome during the second inning.

Minnesota came back with three runs in the third inning off starting pitcher Eric Yanz.

The Cats regained the lead in the fourth with three runs to take a 4-3 advantage.

The Gophers fired back with a run in the fifth and three runs in the sixth.

Jon Albrecht (3-2) suffered the loss after taking the mound in the sixth inning.

Jim Brower (2-0) replaced starter Andy Hammerschmidt in the fourth, shutting out the Cats in 5 and 2/3 innings and striking out six batters for the win.

K-State returns to Big Eight action when it plays two games against the Oklahoma Sooners.

The first contest is 7 p.m. Tuesday in Norman, Okla.

NATIONAL INVITATIONAL TOURNAMENT

Creighton shopping for Altman

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

NEW YORK — K-State coach Dana Altman said any speculation that has him considering the open coaching position at Creighton University is unfounded.

"I haven't talked to anyone officially," Altman said, "and I probably won't, either."

A story in the Manhattan Mercury reported Sunday that Altman had been contacted indirectly from Creighton alumnus about the open Bluejay coaching job.

Cats relax, tour city before game

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

NEW YORK — The K-State basketball team arrived in New York this weekend in time for big-city exploration.

The Wildcats are headquartered during the National Invitation Tournament in the Marriott Marquis hotel, which is located on Broadway in New York's Times Square.

And for sophomore center George Hill, originally from Fairhope, Alabama,

"I'm from Nebraska, and I've got a number of friends that went to Creighton," Altman said.

"Some called about it — that's all it was."

Creighton coach Rick Johnson had compiled a 24-59 record in three seasons. He was fired after the Bluejays went 7-22 this year.

"I haven't thought about it," Altman said, "and I won't talk to anyone until the season's over, period."

it's quite a change.

"Mobile has been about the biggest place I've been before," Hill said.

"It's definitely different than Kansas. Here you have to go to the end of the block to cross the street. If you don't, you get run down."

The team will get its first look at Madison Square Garden today in a late-morning practice. The Cats had one practice session Sunday in the nearby New York Athletic Club.

TENNIS

Netters drop 3 matches during break; Big Eight season starts Thursday

CRAIG PINKERTON
Collegian

K-State's women's tennis team did not play against their opponents as focused as they normally are. Perhaps, as James Taylor sings, they had a little too much Carolina on their minds.

Whatever the cause, the netters dropped matches to Charleston, 7-2, and to South Carolina, 9-0 in Columbia, S.C., last week.

Before heading to South Carolina, the netters also dropped a match to Brigham Young, 9-0.

The losses were the seventh in a row for the Wildcats and dropped their record to 3-11 on the season.

"There was never a time when everyone had their minds on playing great tennis," Coach Steve Bietau said.

It's no wonder their minds were not focused on tennis. The netters are faced with the loss of their top players: Karina Kuregian, for possibly the rest of the year with a back injury, and both their No. 3 player Alex Thome and No. 4 player Karen Nicholson because of illnesses.

"We've got a tough situation with three players out, that's almost half of our team," Bietau said. "We've given everybody a few days off and I hope they are going to come back well rested and a little more focused."

In each of the three matches, the Cats had to forfeit their No. 6 singles and No. 3 doubles matches because they didn't have enough players to compete due to the injuries and illnesses.

Not everything was negative on the trip to South Carolina though. There were some individual performances that pleased Bietau.

"Nikki (Lagerstrom) finished the trip playing quite well against South Carolina. Martine (Shrubsole) showed some signs that she might be starting to play better," Bietau said.

Masha Meidell picked up the squads only singles victory over spring break by beating Siri Mittet 6-2, 6-3, in No. 1 singles. Meidell teamed up with Shrubsole to pick up a 8-1 victory in No. 1 doubles.

The netters will face the Missouri Tigers on Thursday to open the conference portion of their season. The match will be played in Manhattan.

GOLF

Men's, women's teams to compete in Missouri State Invitational

CRAIG PINKERTON
Collegian

After each team has had a chance to tune up before having to face regional competition, the K-State men's and women's golf teams will head to Springfield, Mo., for the Southwest Missouri State Invitational today.

Although the two teams will be playing in the same city, they won't be playing on the same golf course at the same time.

The men's team will play two rounds on Monday and a final round on Tuesday. They will play the first and the third rounds at the par-72 Hickory Hills Country Club and the second round at the par-72 Highland Springs Country Club.

The women will play one round on Monday and one on Tuesday, both at Highland Springs Country Club.

Making the trip for the Wildcats will be a young but solid group for the men. The quintet will be made up of four sophomores (Jason Losch, Troy Halterman, Max Pinney and Scott Hovis) and one freshman (Chad Buckridge).

"We're playing a young lineup, but I'm confident with the lineup we have even though the players are young. I think we have a chance to do well this week," Halterman said.

The five women competing, who will be the defending champions from last year's tournament, will be highlighted by Jacque Wright.

Wright is coming off a second-place finish at the UNT/SMU Invitational on March 23. Donita Gleason, Dallas Cox, Debbie Chrystal and Denise Pottle will also make the trip for the women.

Last year, the women fired a 326-346-673 to take top honors in the Invitational.

This will be an important match for both the men and the women's teams as they will face several teams from within their respective regions. The men will face 18 teams, seven of which are from their region. The women will compete against 11 teams, many of which are from their region.

"This will be an important tournament for us to do well in," Coach Mark Elliott said.

"This will be our first opportunity to face regional competition this spring. We really need to make a strong showing if we are to have any hopes of qualifying for regionals later this year."

SPORTS DIGEST

► JAYHAWKS STUMBLE AGAINST BOILERMAKERS

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Purdue didn't win as a one-man team. It was two players.

Glenn Robinson had 44 points, and Cuonzo Martin added 29 Thursday night as the top-seeded Boilermakers moved within one game of the Final Four with an 83-78 victory against Kansas.

Purdue lost to Duke on Saturday, 69-60, during the Elite Eight round.

The Boilermakers (29-4) advanced against KU because Robinson dominated the first half with 30 points and Martin picked up the slack in the second half when the fourth-seeded Jayhawks (27-8) stayed within striking range.

Kansas, trying to get back to the Final Four for the second year in a row and third time in four years, went on a 13-0 run to get within 68-67 with 6:40 left. Later, the team came back from a 76-69 deficit to get within 78-76 with 33 seconds left on a three-pointer by Sean Pearson.

Martin made both ends of a 1-and-1 with 23 seconds left for a four-point lead, and after Pearson missed a three-pointer, Porter Roberts scored his first points of the game on two free throws for an 82-76 lead.

► CATS END TIGERS' RUN TO NCAA FINAL FOUR

LOS ANGELES — One game short of their first Final Four, the Missouri Tigers started playing as if it was early December again.

The top-seeded Tigers shot only 35 percent from the field Saturday and lost to second-seeded Arizona 92-72 in the NCAA West Regional final.

"Bad timing," senior guard Melvin Booker, the Big Eight Conference player of the year, said. "It should have been earlier in the season, because you always have another game."

"Right now, we don't," Booker said. "The season's over. It was a great season, but it's a bad time for our shots not to fall for us."

Saturday's performance may have brought back memories of Missouri's 52-point loss to Arkansas in the Tigers' second game of the season. Missouri rebounded from that defeat and went undefeated in Big Eight regular-season play.

But against Arizona, the Tigers made only 29 of 83 shots, including seven of 33 from three-point range.

They weren't much better at the free-throw line, making seven of 15. Arizona had a huge advantage at the line, hitting 33 of 41, half of them in the final 7:25.

"Probably over a period of 30-some years, we haven't been outscored from the line probably not 10 or 12 times," Missouri coach Norm Stewart, who finished his 27th season with the Tigers, said.

Freshman Kelly Thames hit consecutive three-pointers in the closing minutes, but they merely cut the margin from 27 points to 21.

"You have one of those days, but hopefully you don't want to have a day like that when you're trying to get to the Final Four," Thames said. "We didn't shoot the ball real well. And Arizona was hot."

► KRUGER LEADS GATORS TO THEIR 1ST FINAL FOUR

MIAMI — Craig Brown's flurry of three-pointers provided an appropriate path to the Final Four for the Florida Gators. The longshots won with long shots.

Brown hit three-pointers on three consecutive possessions to break open a close game Sunday, and unheralded Florida won the East Regional by beating Boston College 74-66.

The Gators (29-7) earned their first trip to the Final Four. Coach Lon Kruger's team will play Southeast Regional champion Duke (27-5) in Saturday's national semifinals at Charlotte, N.C.

"We feel great about our opportunity," Brown, who was named the regional's outstanding player, said. "After we cut down one net, we got in the locker room, and coach told us we forgot to cut down the other net. I told him, 'Hey, we're new at this.'"

Boston College, which at No. 9 was the lowest seed remaining in the tournament, finished 23-11.

"It's been a lot of fun getting here, but coming so far and being so close, it's going to hurt," Bill Curley, who scored 20 points for the Eagles, said.

Southeastern Conference co-champion Florida entered the regional as the No. 3 seed but was still lightly regarded, in part because of the program's lackluster past. The Gators had made only three previous NCAA tournament appearances and were 7-21 just four years ago.

Building Anew ON OLD FOUNDATIONS

Local chapter of Habitat for Humanity working to renovate old hotel in Leonardville.

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

A group of students have helped give new life to a dilapidated hotel in Leonardville.

The hotel was built by the Shingle family in 1908 and then it was rebuilt a year later after it was destroyed by a fire.

It is once again being rebuilt with the help of the K-State chapter of Habitat for Humanity.

Habitat provided help during its March 12 visit by stripping the ceilings, walls and the floors. The organization will hire a contractor to remodel the hotel once it has been cleaned out. The hotel will be converted into separate apartments for 12 people.

Michelle Eble, senior in architectural engineering, said she is not a member of Habitat, but volunteered her services in exchange to learn about older architecture.

"For me, it's a good opportunity because I've never seen the basic structure of a building," Eble said. "Plus I'm doing something for someone else."

Morgan Hankins, senior in construction science, is another student who volunteered because he had friends in Habitat and also for the learning experience.

Even though he is not a member of Habitat, Hankins said he believes in the goodness of the organization.

"I've done community service, but I haven't done it in a couple of years," Hankins said. "It makes you feel good and I think they do some good things."

Habitat for Humanity is an international organization comprised of affil-ate and campus organizations. Affiliate organizations are community-based and campus organizations are college-based.

Habitat is relatively new to the K-State campus.

Noel Priefert, senior in biology, started the group in the fall of 1992.

He said he had prior experience with Habitat because he worked for his hometown chapter.

Before Priefert started the group, a Manhattan resident also wanted to start a Habitat organization.

"Pastor Craig Sommer had been wanting to start a campus chapter," Priefert said.

Sommer is the former pastor for Lutheran Campus Ministries.

"He couldn't get a student group started because he wasn't faculty," Priefert said.

However, Sommer had all of the information to start the group, and Lutheran Campus Ministries helped Habitat get on its feet, Priefert said.

Since the start, the chapter has made great progress, Priefert said.

"It started out from nothing. Now, we have 300 on the mailing list and 50 truly active members," Priefert said. "I think more people would be interested if they knew about it."

The local affiliate chapters handle the finances and the legal work of projects, Pam Jackson, junior in social work, said.

The campus organizations provide labor and fund-raising, she said.

"Our part is to support our local affiliate," Jackson said. "We provide fund-raising, publicity and volunteer

Keith Banes, senior in construction management takes up base boards. MARK LEFFINGWELL/Collegian labor which the students are best at."

One fund-raiser is a moonlight bike ride during the spring semester on the night before finals.

The ride begins at midnight and ends at 1 a.m. After the ride, there are drawings for prizes donated by area businesses.

In addition to fund-raising, one of the objectives of the group is to raise social conscience about the housing problem, he said.

"Even if people realize that there is a problem, that is half of the battle," Priefert said.

The group doesn't require a membership fee to join, Priefert said. The only cost is the transportation to the work site. He said the people who work car pool and lunch is sometimes provided.

To qualify for assistance, the families who Habitat helps must show their housing is inadequate. For example, the dwelling must be too small, and the family cannot have enough collateral to buy a house, but families must have an income, Jackson said.

Habitat doesn't only help families in Kansas.

The campus chapters can participate in a collegiate challenge where chapters go to other states and work, Priefert said.

Zac Bailey, junior in agriculture engineering, said about 20 people went to New Orleans for a work project over spring break.

"It's a cheap spring break and building a house is something that needs to be done," Bailey said.

Clinton critic doesn't want to jump gun

THE PRESIDENT

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The leading Whitewater critic in Congress said Sunday he didn't want to draw premature conclusions about two top White House aides' complaints to a Treasury official over the hiring of a former GOP prosecutor in the case.

"I hope we don't make too much of this part of the story," Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, said on NBC's "Meet the Press."

"It's natural that they would be upset" with a decision by the Resolution Trust Corp. to retain former U.S. Attorney Jay Stephens to investigate the failed Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, Leach said of senior White House aides Harold Ickes and George Stephanopoulos.

However, "it was probably a mistake to convey this in a way that may or may not have implied trying to release him (Stephens) from this job," Leach said of the Feb. 25 call from Stephanopoulos and Ickes to Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman.

Stephens, a former White House legal aide in the Reagan administration, was fired as U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia last March, two months after Clinton took office.

At the time, Stephens publicly implied that his dismissal was aimed at thwarting his office's still-continuing investigation of House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., in the House Post Office scandal.

The White House has acknowledged that Stephanopoulos and Ickes placed a conference call after learning the RTC had retained Stephens a day earlier to pursue possible civil claims against the failed Arkansas thrift.

White House representative Jeff Eller, in Dallas with Clinton on Sunday, said the president stands behind Stephanopoulos 100 percent.

Last week, Leach said there was evidence to suggest that federally insured deposits in Madison were used to cover interest payments on loans to the president and Hillary Rodham Clinton covering their investment in the Whitewater land development enterprise.

He also said other Madison deposits may have been diverted to cover campaign debts incurred by Clinton in his bid for re-election as Arkansas' governor. Federal regulators have estimated that covering the federally insured deposits lost by Madison will cost taxpayers at least $47 million.

Stephanopoulos told CNN he had expressed anger at the hiring of Stephens but was just trying to get information.

the Partnership money. Bogina thinks that is just what Finney will do.

"I believe the bill, in its current form, is an invitation for a governor's veto," he said.

If the House does not remove the Partnership money and if Finney vetoes the measure, the Legislature will have to take up the matter again during its wrap-up session, when it convenes to consider final appropriations measures on April 27-29.

Bogina said the timing will spell trouble for the Board of Regents schools.

"I do not believe that scenario is desirable for the universities, because they will compete for our precious tax dollars along with our social welfare and other needed programs," Bogina said.

The Partnership for Excellence proposal would impose a 9 percent tuition increase on students at the three major state universities, the University of Kansas, Kansas State and Wichita State.

It would impose a 5 percent increase on students at the regional schools, Pittsburg State, Emporia State and Fort Hays State.

The tuition increases would raise $2.5 million for the program, with another $9.5 million in state tax dollars.

There was some question at the outset of the debate whether the bill would pass at all.

"There are some concerns, concerns about the budget, concerns about Washburn," Senate Minority Leader Jerry Karr, D-Emporia, said.

Sen. Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, brought most of the Sedgwick County delegation aboard when she successfully amended the bill to keep all of the money raised by tuition increases at Wichita State at that campus.

Wichita lawmakers complained that under the proposal, more than $900,000 would be raised in tuition increases at WSU that would be used to pay faculty members of the other schools. Wichita State figures its tuition based on a per-credit hour, rather than on a block of courses per semester.

The bill drew the Shawnee County delegation's support when Sen. Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, amended it to increase state aid to Washburn by $250,000. The bill contains $6.6 million in state aid to the municipal school.

Sen. Sandy Praeger, R-Lawrence, who represents the University of Kansas, acknowledged that there is a possibility of Finney vetoing the entire budget. She said the governor politicized the regents budget when she tied Washburn in with the Partnership for Excellence.

By not placing the faculty raises in a line item, the chances for overriding Finney's veto are greater, she said.

"She has no justification for vetoing this budget on its merits," Praeger said.

GTAs may benefit from PFE money

Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for government relations, said the PFE is for all faculty, including GTAs.

"It includes faculty for the teaching experience," Peterson said. "That's what the Board of Regents and the Legislature address it as."

Compression is a problem the bill is trying to correct, she said.

Compression is the process of making present teacher's salaries match the starting salaries of prospective professors.

"Compression is a serious problem the bill is trying to address," Peterson said.

It costs more to attract a new teacher, so the gap between new faculty and professors who have been at K-State for awhile keeps getting smaller, Peterson said.

Ray Hauke, financial advisor to the Board of Regents, said PFE money could be used to help relieve the compression problem and for GTA raises.

"It was designed for ranked faculty with a focus on those who were involved in the instruction process," Hauke said. "This includes GTAs and lecturers."

The bill does not specify who will be included in PFE, Hauke said. He said appropriation bills usually do not specify where the money goes.

Colosio assassin confesses; faces 50 years

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TIJUANA, Mexico — The accused killer of Mexico's leading presidential candidate was a quiet factory worker who hoped his crime would win publicity for his pacifist views, those who knew him said.

Mario Aburto Martinez, a 23-year-old who worked in a factory near the U.S. border, was formally charged with first-degree murder. He faces a maximum of 50 years in prison if convicted.

Investigators say he confessed to shooting Luis Donaldo Colosio during a campaign stop here Wednesday. It is not clear if Martinez acted alone.

Officials are still trying to determine a motive and find out who is the serious young man who made few friends and is now being held in a maximum security prison near Mexico City.

Martinez seemed sane and told investigators he wanted media attention for his pacifist views, according to the state human rights ombudsman who sat in on the police interrogation the night after the killing. He and his family were devout Jehovah's Witnesses, a religion that teaches pacifism.

"He seemed relaxed and in full control," ombudsman Jose Luis Perez Canchola said. "He said he only wanted to injure candidate Colosio. The only time he seemed nervous during two hours of questioning was when he was told that Mr. Colosio had died."

Since his arrest, details are emerging about Martinez's life on both sides of the border. For the past five weeks, he had worked at a factory that makes audiocassette tapes, earning $100 a week.

Martinez "worked hard, with a lot of will," and sometimes talked politics with fellow workers, plant manager Eduardo Oviedo Medina said. "I couldn't believe it when my wife told me, 'It was one of your employees.'"

But after working a normal shift Wednesday, he asked directions to Lomas Taurinus, a poor canyon neighborhood outside Tijuana where Colosio, 44, was holding a campaign rally. When Colosio waded into the crowd after his speech, Martinez shot him twice with a .38-caliber handgun, authorities said.

Martinez was born on Oct. 3, 1970, in La Rinconada, a small town outside Zamora in Michoacan state. As Jehovah's Witnesses, the family was set apart from the rest of the mostly Roman Catholic community.

He was an average student who was expelled from school twice for not showing proper respect for the Mexican flag, records show.

Cab drivers have seen it all

TED ELLEY

Collegian

He has seen it all through the rear-view mirror of his yellow-and-black taxi cab.

From drunken brawls to passionate rendezvous, Anthony "A.C." Miller's backseat has many secrets to tell.

"College students aren't that bad in the daytime. They just act like they own the road," Miller said.

"After they get drunk is another story."

Miller said that in the year and a half he has worked at Bell Taxi Transportation Inc. of Manhattan, he has experienced "some pretty weird things."

"I've had eggs thrown at me, beer bottles thrown at me. I've been threatened to get beaten up and even worse. It's never boring, that's for sure," Miller said.

On average, Miller works about 12 hours each day, six to seven days a week, adding 400-600 miles to his odometer daily. The long hours have given him plenty of opportunities to encounter the unexpected.

"One night, I saw a girl doing cartwheels down the street wearing a skirt and nothing else. That was quite a sight."

But the scenes outside of his cab pale in comparison to those on the inside.

"I've picked up people on acid, drugs and people just acting really strange," Miller said.

"One guy tried to jump out of the cab without paying, but he was so drunk he forgot he had locked the door and he ran right into the window. Then he paid me."

People skipping out on the fare isn't the only problem a cab driver faces.

"When people are making out in the backseat, it gets a little awkward — especially when they're not just kissing. But as long as they pay me, I'm happy," he said.

Miller has yet to be forced to confront serious danger, but some of his co-workers have.

"I had a gun pulled on me once," Perry Reuss, Bell Taxi driver, said. "But the guy looked down the barrel of mine and decided he didn't want to argue about it."

"And I know a driver who got shot in the head. Now he's a preacher in Kansas City," Reuss said.

Miller said, "They say taxi drivers have the lowest of all life expectancies — five minutes."

Despite the perilous and often absurd events cab drivers must deal with, Miller said he believes taxi benefit society in many ways.

"Students might be concerned about having to pay five or six bucks for a ride home, but it's cheaper to get a cab than to get a DUI," he said.

Miller said one of the biggest misconceptions students have is the belief that a cab ride is too expensive.

"Students compare Manhattan cab companies to the ones in big cities and they think they're going to get charged outrageous prices. But our fares are very reasonable," Miller said.

Bell Taxi Transportation Inc. starts the meter at $1.70 and charges one dollar a mile on top of that.

"The standard rate for cab fare is $2.35 a mile, so students shouldn't worry about price if they've been drinking and need a ride home," Reuss said.

Of all the adjectives Miller uses to describe his job, dull is certainly not one of them.

"The only time it gets boring is when you're sitting waiting for a call. Other than that, my job is always an adventure."

U.S. pushes for democracy in Haiti

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The United States is trying to synchronize a power change in Haiti, urging exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to name a new prime minister at the same time as military ruler Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras steps down.

"In a sense, it would address concerns of both sides," a White House official said on condition of anonymity.

"You'd have some kind of arrangements in terms of timing, signals, things of that nature," the official said. "So far we haven't seen any firm statement of interest from either side."

White House representative Jeff Eller, traveling in Dallas with the president Sunday, refused to discuss "the details of what may or may not happen" in Haiti. Eller stressed that "our objectives in Haiti remain the same as they always have been. That is, the restoration of democracy and President Aristide's return to his country."

The administration official said the United States will also tighten the trade embargo on Haiti to "stop leakage across the Dominican border."

The New York Times reported Sunday that the administration is reversing its Haitian policy to focus on getting concessions from the Haitian military rather than from Aristide.

But the administration representative said, "we couldn't be shifting from a policy that's pressing Aristide to a policy that's pressing the military because we've been pressing the military. We haven't been pressing Aristide, we've been urging him to cooperate."

Congress and human-rights groups have recently stepped up criticism of the administration for having reached a dead end on top of that.

The "synchronous" plan would require three things to happen on the same day: military leaders would step down; the Haitian parliament would confirm a new prime minister named by Aristide; and a law would be enacted granting amnesty to the military leaders who overthrew Aristide in September 1991.

Vice President Al Gore described these ideas to Aristide at a White House meeting Friday.

Administration officials believe that tightening the embargo could put pressure on Cedras to accept it.

A cut in salary is one of the first things that two candidates for student body president and vice president want to do.

Jeff Peterson, senior in animal sciences and industry, announced his campaign for president along with his running mate, Brad Finkeldei, junior in chemical engineering.

Finkeldei said decreasing their own salaries is a step toward better government.

"It is the little things that make the difference," he said. "Jeff and I are willing to take a 10-percent payout in both our salaries and use the money saved to set up a scholarship. If everyone follows our lead, things would run smoother, and money could be used more efficiently."

Peterson said he and Finkeldei are running to offer students a choice.

"We are not involved in the current student government, like most of the other candidates are," he said.

Peterson and Finkeldei want to hear student concerns, Peterson said.

"Anyone that knows us knows we will listen," he said.

Listening to students will hopefully bring about more student involvement in government, he said.

"We want to put the student back in student government," Peterson said.

Other candidates have tried to do this in the past, but Peterson said he has some ideas that he would like to see implemented.

"I would like to have weekly open forums for students — not just for the major issues, but every week, so students could have a chance to discuss all their concerns," Peterson said.

Youth and optimism are the dominant attributes of the latest pair to seek the offices of student body president and vice president.

Jared Adams, sophomore in speech and pre-law, and Janelle Moore, freshman in microbiology, announced their intention to seek Student Governing Association's highest offices Monday night in Moore Hall.

The two said they hope their ages will increase participation in the upcoming elections, scheduled for April 12 and 13.

"Last year, less than 20 percent of the campus participated in the election," Adams said.

"Our youth sends a message to the younger students," Moore said. "It says that freshman and sophomores count."

Adams said the campus parking problem, an issue for the last several elections, would not be going away soon.

"The University has spent thousands of dollars studying the problem," he said. "But nothing substantive is being done."

Adams and Moore said they were concerned about the tendency toward students being expected to pay for all the problems on campus.

"We're a state-funded university, but the students always seem to bear the burden of the problems on campus," Adams said.

The pair spoke negatively about the Partnership for Excellence.

The PFE would increase tuition in order to increase faculty salaries. The appropriations bill that contains the PFE will be considered by the House in the next few weeks. The Senate passed the bill earlier this session. Gov. Joan Finney has threatened to veto the bill.

"Why should students be expected to pay for faculty salary increases?" Moore asked.

The two also urged students to vote against the upcoming Union expansion referendum.

A Topeka businessman said he wants to bring a more responsive way of thinking to Washington.

Joe Hume, Republican candidate for the second Kansas seat for U.S. congress, spoke to the College Republicans Monday in the K-State Union.

Hume said he wants to be a representative of the people.

"I'd like to take a new way of thinking to Washington," Hume said. "The power should be in the hands of the people."

Hume, who owns a chain of music stores in Kansas, said small businesses are the backbone of the economy. He said taxes are costing jobs.

"As we travel around the district, we've found acceptance because I'm a businessman," Hume said. "I've been a businessman for 30 years."

"Clinton's tax plan will cost 14,000 jobs in the state," he said.

He said crime is the No. 1 issue.

According to the polls, crime is caused by people who only serve 32 percent of their jail sentences, Hume said.

Hume said he saw crime firsthand when he rode with a sheriff one night as an observer.

"I've never seen that element of our society, and I needed to see it," Hume said. "Tomorrow night, I'm riding with a Topeka police officer."

Hume said he is against welfare. He said he thinks it has an adverse effect on society.

"First of all, I have to tell you, I would not continue to do it in its present form. I would discontinue it," Hume said. "We're building a welfare state."

Hume said people should work for what they get. He said he thinks a work philosophy will help people improve their lives.

"First, it will create more pride," Hume said. "Second, when people go to work, they'll make progress and eventually get off of welfare."

Congressmen campaign to keep Fort Riley open

BRIEFLY
Kansas members of Congress pay visit in effort to save Fort Riley from being axed by new set of defense cuts.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT RILEY — It might take a concerted effort by the Kansas congressional delegation to save Fort Riley from the next round of Defense Department cuts.

Army rankings in 1993 placed Fort Riley eighth among the 11 division bases because of difficulty in deploying troops from there and because of its small size.

The rankings were to help the Army select which two division-sized bases it would close.

Next year, the Army must rank the bases again and cut two more bases. Defenders of Fort Riley already are concerned about the future of the base, which is home to 14,400 soldiers and employs 3,600 civilians with a $560 million payroll.

Fort Riley, the largest military base in Kansas, is located along Interstate 70 near Junction City and Manhattan. The base is home to the First Infantry Division (mechanized), widely known as "The Big Red One."

The base, covering 157 square miles, has existed for 140 years.

It was founded to escort pioneers along the Oregon and Santa Fe trails.

It now has the maneuvering room and facilities for soldiers to train with any weapon in the Army arsenal.

Although a decision is a year away, Kansas political leaders are not waiting to take action.

Republican Sens. Bob Dole and Nancy Kassebaum met with Gen. Gordon Sullivan, the Army chief of staff, who assured them no decisions have been made.

Dole and Rep. Jim Slattery, a Democrat, have said they would challenge the budget decisions that are forcing the Army to shrink.

And Kassebaum is questioning the need for three Army overseas bases, now that Germany is reunified and the Cold War has ended.

But, Fort Riley could possibly survive based on its strengths, which include relatively modest costs and reasonably good facilities.

The base is also heavily used by reserve troops, and the Army has improved its deployment capability.

In the coming months, the Army promises a new review as dwindling budgets force it to shrink from 12 to 10 division bases, including the bases overseas.

Fort Riley will be evaluated for closing in May FORT RILEY — The United States must be careful not to reduce its military structure too rapidly, U.S. Rep. Dan Glickman said during a tour of this endangered Army base.

"While the Russian bear may be put out to pasture for a while, a whole slew of snakes are out there right now," Glickman said Monday, citing tensions in North Korea, the Middle East and Haiti.

"We better be careful before we downsize our military force structure too rapidly, because we're going to have to deal with these crises."

Glickman, the chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, and Rep. Jim Slattery, a fellow Kansas Democrat, toured the base in a show of support for Fort Riley.

They announced that Secretary of the Army Togo West will visit the base May 16.

West will be made aware of the investment taxpayers have made in the base, which Glickman called one of the three or four most important economic interests in the state.

Single-division bases like Fort Riley will get a hard look as the Pentagon considers base closings.

Slattery said he's confident that if the analysis is done objectively, Fort Riley will score well.

▶ YOUNG ADULTS RISK DANGER OF NO INSURANCE

WASHINGTON—Older Americans may worry about their health insurance, but younger people are more likely to be without coverage, according to the Census Bureau.

One American in four had no health insurance at some time between February 1990 and September 1992. But nearly half of people ages 18 to 24 had a lapse in coverage during that period, the bureau said Monday.

Young adults are often not covered because they are beyond the age to be included in their parents' plan and are not in jobs that offer protection, Robert Bennefield of the Census Bureau explained.

"When you are young, you think nothing can happen to you, so they tend to not purchase insurance ... that's part of the problem," he said.

Among people 65 and over, most of whom are covered by Medicare, just 1 percent reported a gap in insurance coverage, according to the study based on the monthly Survey of Income and Program Participation.

The majority of gaps in insurance coverage are job-related, Ron Pollack, executive director of Families USA, a group that studies poverty and health problems, said.

And while the 65-and-older group has coverage, Pollack said, those just under 65 often have insurance gaps because of early retirements or being laid off.

▶ KING DESCRIBES BEATING BY POLICE

LOS ANGELES —

Rodney King got down on a courtroom floor Monday, reenacted portions of his 1991 beating by police and told jurors: "I felt like I had been raped."

As batons smashed into his head, "I felt like I had lost half of my face. I could hear my bones crunching every time the baton hit me," he testified.

When officers hogtied and dragged him to the side of the road, "I felt like a cow that was waiting to be slaughtered, like a piece of meat," he said. "I felt like I was going to die."

King was testifying in his $9.5-million lawsuit against the city of Los Angeles for damages stemming from his March 3, 1991, beating by four Los Angeles police officers.

▶ BOSNIANS DISCUSS PEACE, FEDERATION

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina —

With the guns around Sarajevo silenced, Muslim and Croat leaders met Monday to begin building a federation viewed as a key step toward ending Bosnia's 2-year-old war.

Both sides appeared confident a joint assembly would approve a draft constitution and agree on an interim government to rule until elections within six months.

"Now is not the time for euphoria, nor for pessimism, but for serious, determined and intensive work on the implementation of the agreement," Haris Silajdzic, prime minister of Bosnia's Muslim-led government, said in opening remarks. The accord was signed March 18 in Washington.

No formal action was expected before Tuesday because some delegates were delayed by transportation problems.

▶ KEVORKIAN MAY BREAK PROMISE MADE TO JUDGE

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. — Dr. Jack Kevorkian will break his promise not to assist in more suicides unless a doctor agrees to treat a woman's debilitating arthritis pain, Kevorkian's lawyer said Monday.

Before a judge would release him from jail last December, Kevorkian had to promise not to help anyone kill themselves until the Michigan Court of Appeals rules on the constitutionality of the state law banning assisted suicide. Kevorkian was jailed on an assisted suicide charge.

Now his lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger, says a woman Kevorkian has been counseling for two years is in so much pain that Kevorkian would consider himself unbridled from that promise.

"She wants somebody who will give her stronger medication to make the rest of her life more comfortable," Fieger said. "In the absence of that, Dr. Kevorkian will no longer feel constrained under the promise that he previously made."

At a news conference in his suburban Detroit office, Fieger played a videotape that showed the woman from the neck down, sitting in a wheelchair and being interviewed from off-camera by Kevorkian and his associate Neal Nicol. The recording was made Saturday, Fieger said.

The woman said she has suffered from rheumatoid arthritis for 26 years.

▶ TORNADO KILLS 20 DURING PALM SUNDAY SERVICE

SPRING GARDEN, Ala. — To some, the heat and humidity were an ominous sign of what was ahead.

But it wasn't enough of a warning to spare at least 44 people who were killed when dozens of tornadoes roared east from Alabama through Georgia, Tennessee and the Carolinas on Sunday. Hundreds of others were injured.

Twenty of the dead were at a church in Goshen, 80 miles northeast of Birmingham. Families that arrived for Palm Sunday services left planning Holy Week funerals.

Portions of the Carolinas remained under a tornado watch

Monday evening, and rain continued to fall across the region.

"The conditions were totally juicy for any kind of a storm," forecaster Tony Fulkerson of The Weather Channel said. "A lot of people got up in the morning and said it felt so warm and muggy that something had to be brewing."

Late Sunday morning, warm air from the Gulf of Mexico clashed with cold air from Tennessee, producing about 30 tornadoes, Fulkerson said.

Palm Sunday services were underway at Union Grove Methodist Church in northeast Alabama when a tornado ripped into it.

Money 101 is a Student Loan Program with a difference. All student loans are the same — same rates, same terms. Only the banks are different. And Commerce Bank can save you interest. While other banks capitalize interest as many as 16 times while you're in school, Commerce doesn't until you graduate — meaning real interest savings.

Money 101 includes a Student VISA or MasterCard to help you get the things you need — and cash advances, too.

The low-cost Money 101 Checking Account helps you keep track of expenses with a complete monthly statement.

Puppeteer confronts conflicts with stories

RENEE MARTIN
Collegian

With a brown mouse puppet on her right hand and a green snake puppet on her left, Farryl Hadari, a puppeteer from Israel, abruptly stopped her story and said she was confused.

In the story, the mouse and the snake puppets had become friends only to be told by their mothers that mice and snakes don't like each other. Since snakes were supposed to eat mice, the mouse and the snake were then unsure how to treat each other.

"The story from the book finishes like that," said Hadari, who teaches educational puppetry and puppet production at Seminar Hakibutzim College in Tel Aviv, Israel.

"It says whoever is really smart should be able to figure out how it ends."

Hadari enlisted the help of the students gathered for several of Monday's Storytelling classes in Nichols 7 to make up an ending.

One student suggested having the snake trick the mouse and eat her.

Hadari acted out the scene for the class, but several students said they didn't like this ending.

They wanted the mouse and snake to end up as friends and suggested the animals continue playing together and lie to their mothers.

Hadari also acted out this ending, but some students said they were bothered by the lying.

As the students struggled to find a happy ending, one student said the snake and mouse could never be friends because snakes need to eat mice to survive.

The story, which Hadari said had no right or wrong ending, illustrated the point that conflicts can be hard to resolve.

"It is easy to say they need to get along and that we need peace and shouldn't hurt each other," she said. "It is harder to do this."

Hadari uses her puppets, which she makes herself, to convey various issues.

She has been traveling across the United States since August giving presentations to Jewish communities.

Mary Nichols, speech instructor, said she hoped the students in her Storytelling classes learned from Hadari.

"What I want them to learn is how to do things differently to communicate," Nichols said.

"Right now, there is so much emphasis on technology in the classrooms that I'm afraid we'll forget what communication is."

"Computers can't talk to each other. You need real-life situations to get the full experience."

Molly Jordan, senior in life sciences, said she learned a lesson while watching the story about the mouse and snake.

She said she disagreed with the ending in which the snake ate the mouse but said she realized the need to listen to other people's points of view.

"I'd have a different ending for my story," she said. "But we need to listen to what others have to say."

"The story showed we need to accept each other and become friends."

Jordan said she thought Hadari's method of using the puppets to deal with issues made the conflicts easy to understand.

"She taught me that problems can encompass all ages," Jordan said. "Even little puppets don't have easy solutions."

Hadari founded the Israeli Puppetry Center, which focuses its Students discover solutions for stress

ROBIN KICKHAEPER

Freshmen, seniors, graduate students alike — at some time or another, all students bypass the count-to-10 stress-management method and may opt for ripping out every lock of their hair. In other words, they are stressed out.

Students may experience stress for many reasons, including classes, work and extracurricular activities.

"Having so many things happening at once is what really stresses me out," Kellie Knowles, freshman in hotel and restaurant management, said.

Nafis Ahmed, senior in accounting, gets worked up for similar reasons.

"Tests, classes, everything going on at once stresses me," Ahmed said.

Attending organization meetings on top of everything else is hectic, too, Ahmed said.

Mark Thome, sophomore in electrical engineering, said he worries most when he has a big test coming up.

But tests don't only stress out the people taking them. They also worry the people that are giving them, like Stacy Petermann, graduate student in English. Petermann said having a lot of papers to grade at one time is what stresses her.

Students and teaching assistants may choose different ways to overcome stress.

Some opt for being alone; some choose to be with friends.

Many people exercise their way to mental stability, while others turn to the television and momentarily become vegetables.

Still others rely on the weekend scene to ease their worries.

"I like to go out on the weekends and party," Thome said. "It helps relieve the stress."

Ahmed said he also relies on friends to ease his stress.

"I like to go to a friend's house to watch television or a movie," Ahmed said.

Knowles has a similar solution for controlling stress.

"When I want to relax, I go for a drive with a friend or just talk to someone," Knowles said.

Petermann said she chooses to just get away from whatever is stressing her, especially if it is her work.

"It really doesn't matter what I'm doing, as long as I'm completely ignoring my work," she said.

Emporia minister petitions Finney for prison release

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EMPORIA — An Emporia minister convicted in the death of his wife says he'll petition the governor to be released from prison, but another petition being circulated asks that he remain behind bars.

Thomas Bird was a key figure in the highly publicized case involving the slayings of both his wife and the husband of Lorna Anderson, his secretary at Faith Lutheran Church in Emporia. The story was made into a television mini-series, "Murder Ordained," aired in 1987.

Bird has maintained his innocence throughout the investigations and during his imprisonment. His case has been publicized frequently by the "Christian News," a Lutheran newspaper.

An article published by the newspaper last month recounted the case and reiterated Bird's claims of innocence. In a letter quoted by the News, Bird and his wife, Terry, said they would petition Gov. Joan Finney to gain his release.

But another petition is asking that Finney deny Bird's request for release.

That petition, which The Emporia Gazette received in the mail from members of the family of Sandra Bird, his slain wife, recounts the convictions and Bird's unsuccessful appeals.

Tobacco ban won't stop or help smokers

What David Kessler missed in his zeal to cure the country of its smoking habit is the millions who would be left to struggle with their addiction.

Don't flick your Bic now, but Joycelyn Elders, the loose-cannon Clinton-appointed surgeon general, sounded like a reasonably intelligent person when she denounced a nationwide ban on cigarettes.

Elders made statements Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation" that the federal government should regulate cigarettes but that banning them would not solve the problem.

Elders' discussion was prompted by Food and Drug Administration chief David Kessler's effort to have cigarettes regulated in the same manner drugs are controlled.

What Kessler missed in his zeal to cure the country of its smoking habit is the millions who would be left to struggle with their addiction to nicotine.

Cigarettes are not healthy. No one is arguing that.

But they won't disappear just because Kessler snaps his non-nicotine stained fingers and says, "Cigarettes are now illegal. You may not smoke them anymore."

What will work is to apply social pressure on people that discourages them from smoking. We have already seen drastic decreases in the number of smokers during the past few decades.

There is no doubt that as smoking becomes less socially acceptable, and it is, it will begin to disappear.

Elders also called for greater treatment programs, such as nicotine patches and gum, to help smokers break the addiction.

She was on target in saying that smoking will not stop because the government bans it — it will stop when people are informed and armed with the weapons to fight the addiction.

Until then, legal or not, smoking will continue to be a costly habit for millions of Americans.

You can bet your ash on that.

Hank, if you want that fraction of a cent, take it

There once was a man in Manhattan who whined like a wheel on a wagon When the "homos" came out He did meekly give shout: "Oh damn-fag-hell-boo hoo, we can't have 'em"

Aaron "Hank" Wilcox doesn't know about the rest of us, but he came here to get a damn education. Having read his letter in the March 14 edition of the Collegian, I am wondering what happened.

After all, anyone with a, say, 10th-grade education would be perfectly capable of arguing whether or not student funds should go toward a club that focuses on the sexual preferences of its members without resorting to petty name calling.

Indeed, the argument holds rich potential. Why should we contribute our fee money to clubs that don't mesh with our sexual, political, religious or sports preferences?

I, for one, find it absurd that the College Libertarians, those self-proclaimed champions of independent self-reliance, ask for funding. It's akin to the Campus Crusade for Christ asking for sacrificial animals.

But, considering the amount of an individual's fee money that goes to any one club is a fraction of a cent, one would need to weave one hell of an argument on principle to avoid sounding like a whiny cheapskate. (Which, I might add, requires a lot more than simply spitting out a hell of a lot of hells.)

But Mr. Wilcox, sadly, seems unable to keep his argument up. His only point is that if a person's sexual habits were meant to invade the hallowed halls of our proud University, we'd have "one hell of a heteronympho club, with meetings every night."

We do — it's called Aggieville, and I've sat through enough Monday morning stories of carnal conquest to know we heterosexual males have our own penchant for openly celebrating our sexuality.

Aaron "Hank" goes on to claim that homosexuals offer some special support to weakened structures. If this is the case, then I suggest he strap a few over his argument, for it certainly could use 10 percent more reason, 10 percent more substance and 10 percent more dignity. But, then again, 10 percent of nothing is still nothing.

That's it! He's not trying to argue at all, but instead is seeking to launch a tirade. Hate has soul, too, though, and even in this he falls short.

It doesn't take a rocket scientist, or even a construction scientist, to jump up and down and shout "fag-got."

In fact, it doesn't take much of anything, and when all the manly hells and damns are stripped from Hank's letter, not much of anything is exactly what remains.

I suggest that if there are people who turn rabid at the mere thought of having their fraction of a cent go to the Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society, the University should cheerfully refund their money.

The cash could go toward a new shirt fund because, if the content of Mr. Wilcox's letter is any sort of general indicator, the ones they wear now are probably covered with drool stains.

Seriously, though, if these people can't contribute anything to the arena of free speech besides name calling, then they deserve every bit of hell they get from others of us who won't tolerate their moronic ways of expressing their beliefs.

Which brings me to the real point of this column: I'm not saying the Aaron "Hanks" of the world should be silenced, just that they should not go unanswered.

Some would answer with a hate-speech code, but I think Mr. Wilcox's letter is the perfect example of why K-State doesn't need a code.

If rules were in place, Hank's letter most certainly would have broken them. It's hateful, violently homophobic and even calls for the murder of homosexuals by drowning them in wet concrete.

If brought up on charges, though, Hank would inevitably be transformed from your run-of-the-mill, knee-jerk whatever venting his spleen in the local rag into a martyr for free speech.

I admire those Americans who have fought to secure the right of open debate too much to see the frothy-mouthed ravings of some overripe adolescent become associated with the cause.

I hope those who questioned my editor's judgment in running Hank's letter will come to realize it is best to let such trash stand free and legal in the light of day as a monument to what it truly is: not much.

RODEO

Goats deserve fair treatment, too

Dear Editor,

Last Saturday, I went to the K-State Rodeo. Maybe what I saw there is common practice, but I think the practice needs changing.

The event was goat wrangling or goat dogging; whatever the name was, the sight was disgraceful.

A small goat was tied at the end of a stake with 20 or so feet of rope. At the opposite end of the arena, a horse and rider come barreling out of the gate at full speed toward the goat.

When the horse gets up to the stake, the rider jumps off, charges at the panicky, bleating goat, tosses it to the ground and ties three of its legs together.

This maneuver so terrifies the goat that we have to get a fresh goat every two or three charges.

This event is in the women's competition. I realize women might have a hard time throwing calves that weigh 350 pounds, but to reduce them to goat dropping is unkind and undignified.

It is too pitiful to see little goats carried in, cradled in a woman's arms and then frightened half to death by a charging horse and rider.

I find myself wondering how they practice for this event. Do they throw their cats?

K-State not good enough to poke fun

Dear Editor,

My brother is a K-State alumnus and sent me your Feb. 23 editorial poking fun at (among others) the Missouri Valley Conference and Bradley University (I am a Bradley alumnus).

Did you know Bradley is 2-0 against K-State in basketball?

That Bradley ranks ahead of K-State in career wins in basketball, or even that K-State started out in the Missouri Valley Conference?

By the way, which conference is the University of Missouri-Kansas City in, and how many times would you have to beat them at home to get an NCAA bid?

To help you figure it out, Tulsa and Southern Illinois are two teams from the Missouri Valley Conference in the NCAA Tournament.

You're in the NIT with Bradley.

English, a sewer language? Works for us, n'est pas?

The history of the relationship between France and the United States is a mixed one at best. In many of our darkest hours of the Revolutionary War, the French played a considerable role in the restructuring of the Continental Army and allowed us to eventually defeat England.

Thirteen years later in 1789, the French modeled their revolution against an oppressive monarchy after ours.

Now, a new revolution is taking place. And it's not one against a monarchy or foreign country, but against a language. The English language.

It is a misnomer to say that this is a new revolution. The French Academy (La Academie Française) has spent years trying to keep the French language "pure," free of foreign phrases and words.

The academy's desire to embrace xenophobia has now reached a new high as the National Assembly, France's main lawmaking body, is considering passing a law outlawing all foreign phrases in business and government communications, radio and TV broadcasts, public announcements and advertising.

If a "suitable local equivalent" is available, it must be used. Punishment could range from fines to imprisonment.

Much of the world is laughing. And many French themselves find the law odoriferous, saying, "C'est pas tres cool."

The problem goes beyond xenophobia. It is rooted in the success of the English language. English is the fastest-growing spoken tongue on the planet.

Compared to most others, it is easy to learn, very definite and precise, and has a vocabulary unmatched by any other.

By way of comparison, the French language has about 100,000 words. English, including scientific and technical terms, has more than 2 million.

We are one of only a few languages needing a thesaurus.

The advantages continue. English is the primary tongue of more than 45 countries, covering one-fifth of the Earth.

One out of seven people on Earth speak or understand English to some degree. Sixty percent of the world's radio broadcasts are in English. And it is the language in which two-thirds of all scientific treatises and technical periodicals are printed and 80 percent of all computer texts are stored.

Perhaps the success of this bastardized combination of low Germanic and Norman French tongues is due to exactly what the French themselves fear. English accepts new words and phrases without bias, knowing no creed nor race.

English's strength comes from its willingness to accept any word, to grow without concern.

But this is all academic. The French response to the growth of English is supposedly one of self-preservation. With words like "le cash flow," "le stress" and "Le Walkman" making themselves quite at home in the land of the French vernacular, many feel a law stemming the flow of English into French is "an act of faith in the future of our country," as stated by Prime Minister Claude Hagege.

I have nothing personal against France. On the contrary, I've struggled with the idiom for nearly four semesters here at K-State and still have trouble knowing when to use le subjunctif.

But, I would warn the French conservatives about trying to legislate the use of language. It will never work.

First, language usually follows the path of least resistance. And if this means allowing English to describe things not French, then native speakers will certainly do it.

Further, people have always, without exception, resisted being told how to speak. Just ask your parents about your childhood.

And, as writer George Orwell was so adept at

JARED SAVAGE

DON'T SAY THAT IN FRANCE

The French have stopped using these English words in favor of these translations:

Airbag: coussin gonflable de protection

Best seller: succes de librairie

Brunch: grand dejeuner

Cookie: sable americain

Databank: banque de donnees

Prime time: heures de grande écoute pointing out, government first becomes too oppressive when it begins to slow the vehicle of intelligence, language. By putting stipulations on how people communicate, government takes the wonderful stew of language and waters it down into tasteless swill.

KATIE WALKER/Collegian

I can only hope the French people will shout out and demand the French tongue grow naturally, even if it means letting English weave its way in. And if the National Assembly doesn't like it, well, that's life.

Or, as we say in English, "C'est la vie."

Dollface
 "Corvette Summer"
 Crackpot

This Illinois band obviously derives much of its sound from the early-day Replacements. The music sounds honest — guitar-based, classic-style rock. The songs on "Corvette Summer" sound like they might have been covered by the Ramones if they had been written 30 years earlier.

If drinking half-cold beers in a moving car on a summer day was still in style, this would be a good album to listen to while doing so.

Course of Empire
 "Initiation"
 BMG Music

Course of Empire swims in a far-away, mystic sound à la Alice in Chains. "Initiation" is chock-full of syncopated drum beats, catchy guitar hooks and lots of feedback.

The band shows quite a bit of versatility. Sometimes, this experimentation pays off. The palm-muted rockabilly on "Infested" is wonderfully odd — White Zombie meets Brian Setzer.

Other songs, however, would have been better off left unrecorded, especially those when singer Vaughn Stevenson sounds like a knockoff of John Lydon.

Ted Hawkins
 "The Next Hundred Years"
 David Geffen Co.

Ted Hawkins is shooting for the Otis Redding market. Hawkins, an ex-street musician, used to entertain crowds that would form on Venice Beach. This may have been entertaining, but the experience doesn't translate well in the studio.

Hawkins seems to be trying to create folk songs that will sound instantly familiar to the listener; however, the result is a collection of bland, neutered material.

Just because you're old as dirt and play an acoustic guitar doesn't mean you have soul.

Ted Hawkins may indeed have soul, but it isn't evident from his recording.

Eugenius
 "Mary Queen of Scots" Atlantic

Get ready for more moody Brits with lots of delay on their guitars. Eugenius is sunshine scruffiness at its best — even the happy songs sound depressing as hell.

The songs on "Mary Queen of Scots" are well-thought-out, and they are punctuated with some cool guitar runs at times, but as a whole, the album is uninspiring.

Cell "Living Room"
 David Geffen Co.

If the words "standard grunge fare" can be applied to any band, Cell is it. Built around warm, sloppy guitar, the songs on "Living Room" are grindingly dissonant. The band tries to be melodic, but the melodies are lost in dreadful repetition.

At times, Cell seems to be trying to take a stab at Pearl Jam-like, two-guitar solo weaving, but these excursions are laughable.

Phantom Blue
 "Built to Perform"
 Geffen

Phantom Blue is composed of five women who look like discarded extras from the set of "Married with Children." These women aren't just pretty; they can actually play.

The problem is they play recycled cheese metal that should have been left to the Scorpions. As forgettable as their name, Phantom Blue takes you on a trip down bad-memory lane with ballads reminiscent of Mötley Crüe and percussion that sounds like it was lifted from a Twisted Sister record.

DEAR CASSIE,

 Cassandra Duveaux

Reader with obesity fetish gathers ridicule, rude jokes from friends

Dear Cassandra,

I have a personal dating situation that has been bothering me for a long time. I have a fetish for dating heavy-set women. Some men like long legs and blonde hair. I prefer my mate to be sizably bigger than me. I don't know why, but obesity really turns me on.

The thing that is troubling me is that all of my friends ridicule me whenever I go out with one of my full-figured friends. I am becoming very depressed because I'm afraid to date the types of girls I like. Is it wrong to have an intimate relationship with a large woman? What should I do? Listen to my friends and conform to society's pressure or follow my heart and be the object of rude jokes?

Sincerely,
 Capt. Ahab

Dear Capt. Ahab,

There are all kinds of people out there. If everyone dated the same kind of people, there would be lots of lonely people on Friday nights without dates.

There is no reason why you should stop dating full-figured women because your friends don't like the way they look. You can't let them control your life.

My advice is have your friends meet your dates. Let them get to know these women. Once your friends realize they are good people, they may lay off on the criticism.

Hey, here's an idea — you could even go out on a double date. It could be a problem, though, if you are the only one who can get a date. They do go out on dates, don't they?

Dear Cassandra,

There is a girl that I have liked for about six months now. We were friends before we went out on a date, and our first date went really well. The problem is that she just got out of a long relationship, and she didn't want to get into another, so she told me that we probably shouldn't let things go any further.

Approximately two months after that, she called me and wanted to start things up again. I wasn't seeing anyone at the time, but I also didn't want the same thing to happen again. I really liked her a lot when she first told me she just wanted to be friends, and I fell like a brick. I was afraid of this, so I kind of brushed her off.

Then about three months later, we began to talk again. I told her that I really liked her still, and she told me that she still liked me. She said she was seeing other people, but she liked me more. Well, I saw this as an opportunity, and so we began seeing each other again. Now, I am at a point where I am head over heels in love, but she still wants to go out with other people. I'm not looking for someone just to go out with every now and then. I'd really like to have a relationship, but she is still afraid from her last experience to get involved with another guy. I wish I would have left things the way they were. What should I do?

Signed,
 Double Shocked

Dear Shocked,

Sounds like a difficult decision. If you want a relationship and she doesn't, you should wait until she is ready. She needs time to heal, and you don't need to enter into a situation where you can get yourself hurt. I'm sure this decision will be difficult, but it is for the best.

Flour will fly at festival

ROBYN NASH
Collegian

Kansas bread bakers may stir up a cloud of flour as they celebrate their home baking tradition during the Festival of Breads, which takes place during Open House on April 9.

This third biannual bread baking contest is sponsored by the Kansas Wheat Commission, the Kansas State Board of Agriculture and Kansas Wheathearts.

"The main objective for having this contest is to encourage home baking and to recognize the talented bakers we have in Kansas."

And, of course, to promote our Kansas flour and land-of-Kansas products," said Cindy Falk, home economist for the Kansas Wheat Commission and contest coordinator.

This year, the contest has been expanded to two categories: bread made in an automatic machine and bread made by the traditional methods, which, Falk said, include bread mixed by hand, mixer or food processor.

"We're still seeing most of the bread made in the traditional methods," Falk said.

About two-thirds of the 150 pre-entries are traditional recipes, and one-third are made in bread machines, Falk said.

The top three winners in both categories will participate in the cook-off on April

9. "We have all parts of the state entering. And, we have all ages, too," Falk said. "There are high-school home-ec students who are required to enter by their teachers. We have women and men entering this year."

"The exciting thing about this contest is that the state competition will be held on campus during Open House, and everyone is invited to stop by."

Christy Wagner is a Manhattan resident who competed in the contest a couple of years ago and has entered again this year.

"I think one of the best things anybody can get out of a contest like this is to learn something new," Wagner said.

"You don't only learn about your own product, but also about other people's products. You learn how you can improve upon your techniques."

Falk said those that stop by the bake-off that will take place in Justin 115 will be able to sign up for the door prize, a West Bend automatic bread machine.

The finalists' breads will be judged on taste and quality, appearance, originality and ease of preparation and practicality.

All finalists will receive hotel accommodations for one night in Manhattan and a basket of Kansas trademark products. The winner in each category will receive $300.

Fundamentals collapse for Cats against Vandy

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

NEW YORK — First went the outside shooting. Then, K-State couldn't score inside. Finally, the defense fell.

And down went the Wildcats.

In front of a mostly empty and indifferent Madison Square Garden, the Wildcats lost 82-76 to Vanderbilt in the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament.

After a 56.3-percent shooting performance against Fresno State, the Wildcats could only muster a 37.5 percent clip against the Commodores.

And the culprits Monday night resided mostly on the Wildcats' perimeter.

Anthony Beane went five for 14 from the field, and he hit only one of seven in the first half.

Demond Davis hit two of 11.

Ski Jones, the record-breaking hero in last week's 115-77 win against Fresno State at Bramlage Coliseum, had a quiet 17 points in the Garden.

And all of that was through Vanderbilt's design.

The Commodores threw the proverbial kitchen sink at K-State's perimeter players, switching from zone to various junk defenses.

And Jones, who scored 62 last week, was the main target.

"Obviously, he's a tremendous outside shooter, and we basically tried to crowd him," Vanderbilt coach Jan Van Breda Kolff said.

"We played a lot of guys on him and mixed it up."

But the defensive credit went to Vanderbilt guard Ronnie McMahan, who hounded Jones into four-of-11 shooting while scoring 27 points of his own.

"I've been challenged to guard the other team's best scorer a lot this year," McMahan said. "I crowded him and tried to make it tough by making him play on both ends of the floor."

"I wanted to keep him from scoring 62 again."

But that was never a serious concern Monday night. McMahan drew a quick offensive foul on Jones in the first few seconds of the game.

Jones then picked up another midway through the half, and he spent most of his time on the bench next to Altman.

Jones' halftime stats: one basket, two free throws, four points.

But the Wildcats kept the game close on the strength of Deryl Cunningham, who gave K-State an inside threat to counter-act the outside shooting woes.

Cunningham hit three of his first four shots, and K-State preserved a narrow lead most of the first half.

"We felt pretty good at halftime," senior Ron Lucas said. "We didn't shoot the ball well in the first half, and we thought that would turn around."

It did, but not for K-State.

After hitting 42.3 percent of their shots from the field in the first half, the Commodores punched up their offensive production to 50 percent in the second.

Beane hit a couple NBA-range three-pointers in the second half to keep the Wildcats within striking distance, but Vanderbilt's lead kept expanding.

"They started driving the ball more, and we kept fouling and sending them to the line," Beane said. "They gave us opportunities. We just didn't play defense."

And midway through the second half, K-State gave up eight points on three plays, and Vanderbilt never looked back.

K-State will play Siena in the third-place game Wednesday at 5:45 p.m. CST against Siena, which lost 66-58 to Villanova.

"I'm disappointed, I'm not going to lie to you," Cunningham said. "I'm sure the team will be ready — I'm planning on going out my senior year on a winning note."

"But I sure had plans to be playing in the championship game."

OLAJUWON SUSPENDED

Hakeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets, the league's third-leading scorer and rebounder, was suspended by the NBA for one game Monday. He hit referee Bill Spooner in the stomach during Sunday night's game in Phoenix. "Spooner felt a shot in the solar plexus. That can happen with a guy running by, it can happen a thousand ways," said NBA supervisor of officials Darell Garretson.

Askia Jones, K-State senior guard, looks over Vanderbilt's Frank Secker before making a pass to Anthony Beane. Jones made just four of 11 shots in the Wildcats' 82-76 loss to the Commodores.

CATS' NIT NOTES

SCOTT ABEL

EATING NATIVE — With the large variety of cuisine to choose from in New York, where do you think the Wildcats chose to eat their pregame meal?

That's right — the one and only McDonalds.

"You always want to give them the food they're used to," assistant coach Brian Fish said. "Heck, that's what the team voted for."

FAMILY SUPPORT — Among the Cat parents who made the trip to the NIT was ex-NBA player Wali Jones, father of guard Askia Jones.

Wali Jones now works for the Miami Heat in community relations.

"He's had so many obstacles and setbacks in his career, I'm just so proud of what he's accomplished," he said of his son.

"But the proudest day we had is when we got his diploma in the mail."

Cats prepare to play Sooners

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State baseball team will try to end its three-game losing skid tonight as it takes on the nationally ranked Oklahoma Sooners.

The game will begin at 7 p.m. at the L. Dale Mitchell Park in Norman, Okla.

The No. 18-ranked Sooners are the seventh team the Wildcats have played who have been in the top 25 this season.

The Cats have compiled a 10-17 overall record and are 1-3 in the Big Eight Conference.

Coach Mike Clark said the Sooners, coached by Larry Cochell and 18-8, 3-4 in the conference, are one of the better teams to play around the country.

"They are very, very talented. They have the talent of a Kansas (team) and maybe a Texas A&M (team)," Clark said.

"They are right in there (as one of the top teams in the nation)."

"Larry Cochell said this is the best ballclub he has ever had, and it was a couple years ago they were in the College World Series."

"I know Larry expects this team to compete for the Big Eight title, to be in the top 25 and possibly in the World Series," he said.

The Sooners are led by second baseman Rick Gutierrez. Gutierrez earned first-team all-Big Eight honors last season with a .336 batting average, six home runs and 14 doubles, and he was never caught stealing in 22 attempts.

The Sooners had the best team batting average last season at .322, but

CAT WATCH

K-State will play No. 18 ranked Oklahoma at 7 p.m. tonight in Norman, Okla. Wednesday, the Cats will play the Sooners for a second time at 3 p.m. Rob Merriman will pitch for K-State tonight and David "Country" Johnson will pitch Wednesday.

they were hurt greatly by their pitching staff, which had an earned run average of 6.58.

Cochell said his team would have won more games if it wasn't for its pitching.

"Pitching was our Achilles' heel last year," Cochell said. "Last season, it was the most demoralizing thing for me as a head coach. There's not much you can do when you can't get anyone out."

If the Sooners' pitching hasn't jelled yet, Clark said his inexperienced batters can start producing runs.

"We're working with very young kids who tend to be a little eager in RBI situations," Clark said. "Hopefully, we can put together a big stretch where we can get those big hits and good pitching to make a run."

"They're a good team, but we hope they don't warm up against us."

K-State will send Rob Merriman (2-4) to the mound for tonight's game, and start David "Country" Johnson (0-0) for tomorrow's contest, which starts at 3 p.m.

OUTDOOR TRACK

Team's travels during break success for 3 members

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The Wildcat track team logged some frequent-flyer miles during spring break and landed three national qualifiers in the process.

Dante McGrew, Nicole Green and Kristen Schultz all hit provisional qualifying standards at the College Station Relays at Texas A&M on March 19.

K-State then traveled to the University of Arizona for the Arizona Shoot-out March 26, but Coach Cliff Rovelto said rain and fatigue caused some bad performances.

"The meet at Texas A&M went well overall," Rovelto said.

McGrew qualified in triple jump with a leap of 52 feet, 4 inches at College Station.

It was the second-straight season he qualified in the event.

He also scored in the long jump at College Station with a leap of 23' 10-3/4".

"I'm happy with the mark, but I think I'll have to improve to make the national meet," McGrew said.

McGrew is in his final outdoor season at K-State.

However, he has one year of indoor eligibility remaining after being red-shirted during the indoor season this year.

Green, fresh off an all-America performance in the 400-meter race during the indoor season, eclipsed the provisional mark in the 200 meters with a time of 23.82 seconds, three one-hundredths faster than the provisional mark of 23.85.

"The sprinters got to run in several events, which helped with conditioning," Rovelto said.

Green finished second in the 200 meters.

Earlier in the day, she sprinted her way to a third-place finish in the 100-meter dash with a personal-best time of 11.71, one-hundredth of a second off the qualifying time.

The third athlete to produce a provisional qualifying mark at College Station was Schultz in the javelin.

Schultz threw the spear 160' 5", surpassing the mark of 152' 6-1/2" and capturing first place.

"I was ready to get outside and throw the javelin and see what would happen," Schultz said.

Schultz is the defending Big Eight champion in the event. She said her winning throw was a personal best by more than 6 feet.

At Arizona, Schultz finished second in the shot put behind teammate Shannon Flanagan, who won the event with a heave of 45' 4".

Chris Pryor placed second in the 400 meters and the 200 meters at the Arizona Shoot-out.

The difference between first and second place in the 400 meters was one-hundredth of a second.

Pryor was edged at the finish line by Arizona's Dexter Russell, who won the race with a time of 47.76.

"The track was wet from the rain, and I slipped," Pryor said. "I think it might have cost me the race."

The 1,600-meter relay team, of which Pryor was a member, finished third at Arizona with a time of 3:14.

Jeanene Rugan had an outstanding week as well.

She won the 3,000 meters at the College Station Relays by nearly 20 seconds with a time of 10:06.79.

She improved her time to 10:01 at the meet in Arizona but finished second.

"It's more fun to race outdoors because it's not so monotonous," Rugan said. "It felt good to win a race."

The Cats will return to Manhattan on Friday for the KSU Heptathlon/Decathlon and Saturday for the KSU Invitational, both at R.V. Christian Track.

"We had some good workouts during the week," Rovelto said.

"I think some of the performances at Arizona weren't as good because of the travel and the tough practices."

Dante McGrew, Nicole Green and Kristen Schultz all met provisional qualifying standards during the College Station Relays at Texas A&M.

Running mates hope to keep tuition down

The open forums would begin next week so students can have a chance to get to know Peterson and Finkeldei and discuss what issues they want the candidates to deal with, Peterson said.

Peterson said he would also like to have open letters in the Collegian where students could write in with questions or concerns and he and Finkeldei could respond.

This would give a chance for better communication between the student body and government, he said.

The most important issue in their campaign is taking a stand on education issues.

Peterson said student government erred by not taking a stand on the Partnership for Excellence this year.

"If you miss the boat to take a position on the most important issue in education, you're saying student government doesn't make a difference," he said.

"We are willing to fight for what students want."

Both said they would like to keep the cost of tuition and fees down.

Finkeldei said they would promise not to approve any fee increases.

"When we say we aren't going to approve student fee increases, we'll stand by that."

"We can't say there's no way they won't increase, but we will make it more difficult," Peterson said.

As for Union expansion, Peterson and Finkeldei said they were glad it was on a student referendum, but they hoped students would be educated on both sides of it before voting.

Peterson said he was in favor of bringing in outside vendors to raise revenue for the Union, but that $21 million shouldn't be spent to bring it in.

"I challenge students to get out and meet the candidates," Peterson said.

"We're going to have an open and honest leadership, and if that's what students want, then we're their candidates."

Adams, Moore promise luau

"Being on the speech team, we've been in a lot of different unions," Adams said.

"And I've seen that bigger unions don't necessarily mean more students will use the services."

"The bottom line is that we don't want our tuition raised," Moore said.

Adams and Moore also stressed communication between SGA and the rest of the student body.

"SGA should be the facilitator of students' opinions," Moore said. "But it seems to have gotten off track."

If elected, Adams said he will regularly attend student organizations' meetings to hear student concerns.

They were also critical of the Skoog administration for not coming through on its promise to have a campus luau.

"We'd like to have at least have one luau if we get elected," Moore said.

Puppets aid communication puppet productions on issues such as divorce and domestic violence.

She also works with children in an Israel school system who have learning and emotional disabilities.

She said the puppets help them deal with their problems.

"The children make puppets and tell a story," Hadari said.

"They often do a transfer of themselves into their stories."

Doesn't everyone feel better after getting something off their chest?"

By telling stories with her puppets, Hadari said she wants people to become aware of different methods of communicating.

"I want to give the message of using creativity as another form of communication," Hadari said.

"The puppets are a way of storytelling, and a story gives another way to communicate."

Get informed before going to voting booth

SARA ABRAHAM
Collegian

Voting days will soon be here.

All registered students at K-State, full-time and part-time, are eligible to vote in the upcoming Student Governing Association elections on April 12 and 13.

A valid student ID is the only thing students need in order to vote. Unlike general elections, they are not required to register with anybody before the election.

Voting will take place in the Union first floor alcove, by the travel board outside the bookstore. A polling booth will also be set up outside the cafeteria in the basement of Trotter Hall for students in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The Union polling booth will remain open from 7 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. The booth in Trotter Hall will be open from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Also on the ballot this year will be a referendum for the Union expansion fee. Tricia Nolfi, coordinator of student activities, said, "which is another big issue that students really need to make sure that they're knowledgeable on."

"The ballot is going to look a lot like it did last year," Shanta Bailey, chairperson of the elections committee and senior in psychology, said. "Most likely, it will be bigger because we'll probably have more names on it, more offices to elect."

"They're doing it a little different this year," Nolfi said. "In the past, we've sent it over to Computing and Networking Services to do (the tallying)."

"But what we're doing is, we're creating our own program and our own system here, with computers we bought in the fall, so we can have it tallied here and save several hundred dollars a year of Student Government money."

The SGA elections committee is considering implementing a system of cross-checking this year, Nolfi said.

"They'll have to have their student ID with them, and they'll be checked off."

The roster at the Veterinary Medicine polling booth will only have the names of Veterinary Medicine students, so voting at that center will be restricted to those students.

Students need to go to candidate forums and other open forums to get informed about the issues of the elections, Nolfi said.

"This body is responsible for a lot of things that affect students, so they're strongly encouraged to pay attention to those issues," Bailey said.

Seniors to leave basketball legacy

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

NEW YORK — Sandwiched in the traffic and neon lights of Broadway, K-State's four seniors acknowledged the fact that their own long-running show is about to end.

"This is it," Deryl Cunningham said. "It's going to be our last game."

For Cunningham, Anthony Beane, Askia Jones and Ron Lucas, tonight is their last chance to wear the jerseys of Wildcat basketball.

K-State will play Siena in the National Invitation Tournament in Madison Square Garden at 5:45 p.m.

And while this group of players was together at K-State, the Wildcats have posted a combined record of 39-25, earning a trip to the NIT Final Four and a sixth seed in the NCAA tournament.

"When I look back at Kansas State, we just worked so hard," Jones said.

"It seemed like we outplayed and outworked a lot of people."

"Tenacious defense — when that was going, nobody could beat us."

Jones is the last player left on the team from the Lon Kruger era, and in his five-year stay in Manhattan, he rewrote most of the Wildcat record books.

Jones has scored at least 20 points in 33 games as a Wildcat. He will leave as K-State's third all-time leading scorer, behind only Mike Evans and Rolando Blackman, and second on the career steals list.

Although a true forward at 6 feet 7 inches, Cunningham took on the Big Eight's taller and heavier centers to become one of the conference's leading rebounders.

Lucas spent his two years as the Wildcats' top reserve, while Beane leaves as fourth on the list for all-time assists at K-State and with a knack for hitting the game-winning shot.

Besides the numbers, each senior is leaving his own personal legacy with K-State basketball.

"Anthony is fiery and led our team more through his actions and his emotional play," Coach Dana Altman said.

"D.C. and Ski are more reserved and showed their leadership through their hard work, while Ron has been steady for us in practice and showed his leadership there."

"I think they represented Kansas State well with their hard-nosed play," he said.

"Off the court, they've gone to class, and they're going to graduate."

"They're a hard-working group of young men, and they've set a great tone for the underclassmen to follow."

"All four have my utmost respect."

There were also huge disappointments for these seniors, none bigger than a slump in this year's conference season that ended their hopes of making a second trip to the NCAA tournament.

Art museum to serve community, campus

JEFF GRAHAM
Collegian

Once the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is up, it will provide a gateway between the K-State campus and the community, Nelson Britt, director of the museum, said.

Ground breaking for the museum will be May 6.

"When you leave through the University exit, you will see Anderson Hall. The Higinbotham Gate and Aggieville will be seen when leaving through the community exit," Britt said.

The museum will be in the southeast corner of campus. Construction will begin in July 1994 and is expected to be finished in late fall 1995, Britt said.

Arthur Andersson, of Moore/Andersson Architects, from Austin, Texas, designed the 21,516 net square foot building.

It will be nestled among the trees with McCain Auditorium and Thompson Hall on the west and the Higinbotham Gate on the east, Andersson said.

Britt said about eight trees were removed from the site. Five were replanted on campus, and three were removed.

The location encouraged the architects to design entrances on both the north and south sides of the building, Britt said.

This opens the door for both the University and Manhattan communities, Andersson said.

Sidewalk to increase pedestrian safety

TONYA BOBBITT
Collegian

An eight-foot-wide path that will cover about 7,000 feet, the equivalent to over 1-1/2 miles, will be a new addition to K-State next semester.

The sidewalk will begin at Throckmorton Hall and go all the way to Kimball Avenue along Denison Avenue, Mark Taussig, landscape architect for facilities planning, said.

From there it will head west past the Bramlage Coliseum to College Avenue, where it will head south.

The construction of the path will start about late August, and it will take about 60 days.

The main objectives of the path are to provide a safe environment for pedestrians and bicyclists and to encourage them to use other modes of transportation, Taussig said.

The path will also help pedestrians and bicyclists with access to the Veterinary Medicine Complex, Jardine housing, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, Bramlage Coliseum and the growing residential area to the west.

Taussig said he has received numerous complaints about the lack of sidewalks, and he said this path will be a great asset to everybody.

"I have been at K-State for nine years, and we have received many complaints about how there is not enough sidewalks," Taussig said.

Some thin sidewalks already exist, but they are damaged and neglected, he said.

"So, when this grant came up, I applied. I did not think it would go through, but it did, and I think the University is fortunate to be able to put this sidewalk in for such a low price," Taussig said.

Last April, the Kansas Department of Transportation approved the grant request of $181,000.

K-State will be responsible for 20 percent of the cost, about $45,300, which includes construction and design. The money will come from a special maintenance fund that helps maintain the facilities, Taussig said.

The path will serve several functions.

It will link with planned bikeways on the main campus, make the campus more accessible to pedestrians and bicyclists, and it should provide safety because bicyclists will not have to compete with traffic, Taussig said.

The path should also help with the parking problem that currently exists at the University, he said.

The sidewalk is phase one of Manhattan's plan to finish building a linear park which will eventually consist of paths that go through and encircle Manhattan. K-State and KDOT will be heading phase one.

SIDEWALKS

New sidewalks will be in place next semester in these shaded areas.

NATIONAL NEWS

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

► MORE FALSIFIED CANCER RESEARCH DISCOVERED

WASHINGTON — Discovery of a second batch of falsified data has cast new doubts on a significant cancer study, causing the National Cancer Institute to request that a researcher be fired and that no new patients be added to the research.

The NCI announced Tuesday it was asking the University of Pittsburgh to replace Dr. Bernard Fisher as the director of the National Surgical and Adjuvant Breast and Bowel Project, an $8-million study coordinated by the university for NCI. An NCI statement said the action was taken after experts auditing the project found what was called a "new irregularity" at one of the institutions participating in the study. The institution was not identified, but a source said it was in Canada.

A statement said the experts found that "a discrepancy exists in data reported to NSABP in 1993 by one of its member affiliates."

The NCI said the finding has been turned over to the Department of Health and Human Services research integrity office for investigation.

Additionally, the NCI ordered the researchers involved in the NSABP to stop adding new patients until the federal agency completes an intensive review of all records and quality assessment and control procedures.

The freeze affects seven studies that were enrolling patients, a representative said.

Dr. Sam Broder, director of NCI, would not take calls from journalists. A representative in his office directed questions to Bruce Chabner, director of cancer treatment, who did not return calls.

► U.S. SEEKS CHINA'S HELP WITH N. KOREA

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Warren Christopher said Tuesday he was confident China will move in unison with the United States to try to compel North Korea to open its suspect nuclear sites to international inspection.

Christopher's optimism conflicted with reports that South Korean President Kim Young-sam had left the Chinese capital empty-handed in his quest for Chinese intervention in the dispute with North Korea. Kim told reporters in Beijing that China's leaders agreed that talks should continue.

Christopher told reporters he would get a detailed report here Wednesday from South Korean Foreign Minister Han Seung-joo.

► MUSLIMS, CROATS BEGIN REBUILDING

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — With the guns around Sarajevo silenced, Muslim and Croat leaders met Monday to begin building a federation viewed as a key step toward ending Bosnia's 2-year-old war.

Both sides appeared confident a joint assembly would approve a draft constitution and agree on an interim government to rule until elections within six months.

"Now is not the time for euphoria, nor for pessimism, but for serious, determined and intensive work on the implementation of the agreement," Haris Silajdzic, prime minister of Bosnia's Muslim-led government, said in opening remarks. The accord was signed March 18 in Washington.

No formal action was expected before Tuesday because some delegates were delayed by transportation problems.

► KILLER'S APOLOGY LEAVES VICTIMS' FAMILIES COLD

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — The man who killed five college students said Tuesday he regrets "with all my heart what my hand has done."

"Whatever I might have to say at this moment is overshadowed by the suffering I've caused," Danny Harold Rolling told a judge who will decide whether to give him life in prison or death in the electric chair.

The families of Rolling's victims weren't impressed.

"His words are empty," said Ada Larson, whose daughter Sonja was raped and mutilated. "The way I look at it, his deeds spoke for him."

She and other relatives of Rolling's victims submitted more than 50 heart-wrenching letters to Circuit Judge Stan Morris.

"People say something good will come of these horrible murders," Mrs. Larson wrote. "For me personally, there can never be anything good come from the senseless death of Sonja, not in my lifetime."

Morris scheduled sentencing for April 20. A jury recommended that Rolling be executed for the deaths of Larson, Christina Powell, Christa Hoyt, Manuel Taboada and Tracy Paules. In addition to Larson, Powell, Hoyt and Paules were raped.

Diana Hoyt, Hoyt's stepmother, said she saw no sorrow in Rolling's statement.

"I think he feels sorry that he was caught, not that he did it," she said. "If he was out right now, I think he would do it again."

► NEA OFFERS MATCHING FUNDS TO ARTS PROGRAMS

WASHINGTON — Fifty arts groups were offered federal grants Tuesday, provided they can raise $3 on their own for every federal dollar they receive.

The so-called challenge grants from the National Endowment for the Arts total $13.1 million and were offered to groups in 16 states and the District of Columbia.

The grant winners were selected from 94 applicants, the endowment said. The challenge grant program was established in 1978, and officials estimate that during the years it has helped generate $2.4 billion in matching money for arts programs across the nation.

The 1994 challenge grant awardees include programs in Arizona, California, Washington D.C., Illinois, New York and Oklahoma.

Richard Morse, professor emeritus of family economics, holds a book he co-wrote, "The Consumer Movement," in the Farrell Library archives, which was recently refurbished with funds donated by the Family Economics Trust. Morse was head of the Department of Family Economics from 1955 to 1982.

Professor a consumer crusader

ROBIN KICKHAFFER
Collegian

Michael Bauer hit the nail on the head when he called Richard Morse a consumer crusader in an article he wrote for the Kansas City Star nearly 30 years ago. Morse, professor emeritus of family economics, said he has made it his life's priority to ease the lives of consumers.

Morse testified repeatedly before the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives in favor of the Truth-in-Lending and Truth-in-Savings bills for years before they were finally passed.

The Truth-in-Lending law, which was passed in 1968, requires lending institutions to fully inform consumers of the annual percentage rate before the consumer receives a loan.

The Truth-in-Savings law requires that interest be computed on a daily balance and that depository institutions provide depositors with a statement of account sufficiently informative for the depositor to verify computations. It also defines annual as 365 days. Truth-in-Savings was passed in 1991, nearly 30 years after it was first introduced.

Morse also served on the Consumer Advisory Councils of Presidents Kennedy and Johnson, and he served as head of the Department of Family Economics from 1955 to 1982 at K-State.

"I'm just different, I've decided," Morse said. "I could've lived my life teaching class after class."

But Morse said he chose not to confine himself to the classroom.

"I believe in lifelong education," Morse said.

And so he does. Morse spent much of his time trying to ensure that basic banking concepts, were standardized.

"It is so much more logical that banks and creditors should tell you in a language that is defined and reasonable," Morse said.

Morse said he thought one of his greatest achievements was establishing the guidelines for disclosing rates of interest for savings and credit.

Morse also fought for the requirement of companies to print the net weight of their products in a visible manner.

"I used to bring a box of Tide™ to my lectures and throw it out to the audience," Morse said. "I'd have the person who caught it tell me what the net weight was."

It usually took an entire minute for the person to find the weight, Morse said.

Nearly 30 years ago, Morse also carried on a heated correspondence with a major credit card company because it was quoting two interest rates on its billings.

Today, however, Morse is a little more trusting of credit cards.

"The use of credit cards is fine, as long as they're used wisely," Morse said.

"Like I'd tell someone who uses knives, I wouldn't outlaw them, but I'd recommend being careful using them," Morse said.

Morse said credit cards are a good way of building a credit record.

In 1987, Morse, with K-State Libraries, established the consumer movement archives.

The archives include collections from 20 consumer leaders, including Morse's papers.

The archives serve people interested in consumer movement activities by facilitating research, issuing publications, sponsoring special projects and awarding scholarships.

Students can control stress by prioritizing

ROBIN KICKHAFFER
Collegian

When it comes to dealing with stress, there's good and bad news.

The bad news is that in order for people to enjoy the luxury of stress-free lives, they have to be dead, Art Rathbun, a counselor at Lafene Health Center, said.

But the good news is that stress can be controlled, Charles Drees, a therapist at Pawnee Mental Health Services, said.

Drees said a person can do some basic things to keep the stress in their life under control.

"Eating nutritiously and avoiding junk food is important," Drees said.

It is also important to avoid alcohol and caffeine because drugs minimize the body's responses to the effects of stress, Drees said.

"If you're going to use alcohol, use it for celebrations rather than as a drug that deadens stress."

It helps if the students are more disciplined during the semester so that they don't end up trying to do everything at the end, Drees said.

"It helps to prioritize things and stay on top," Drees said. "If you have a lot of things to do and don't know where to start, you have to just pick something."

Eating well and being disciplined aren't the only necessities for controlling stress, however.

"An appropriate amount of sleep is important, but the appropriate amount is different for everybody," Rathbun said. "You need to find out how much you need."

Equally important in the battle against stress is being physically fit, he said.

"Exercise makes a difference in the body," Rathbun said. "It is uplifting emotionally and can alleviate depression and anxiety."

Students sometimes turn to cigarettes and alcohol to alleviate some of the stress in their lives. This isn't such a good idea, Rathbun said.

Taking breaks is also a good way to ease stress, even if they're only for 10 minutes. They're also important because a person's performance level is going to drop off after doing something for five hours, Drees said.

"That's a good way to get into abuse," Rathbun said. "Your body wants more and more all the time."

Maintaining a healthy diet, keeping in shape and getting enough sleep are effective in fighting stress, but they don't take the place of learning self-relaxation skills, Rathbun said.

Students need to learn these skills to enable them to live fuller, richer lives, Rathbun said.

Finally, something for college that just got less expensive.

IN OUR OPINION

Clinton too preoccupied with Whitewater

By the Collegian Editorial Board

If all an investigation of Whitewater will find is nothing, then let it find nothing.

It seems it is difficult for any presidential administration to make it through its term without being nabbed with some type of investigation.

The Clinton administration has fallen face first into Whitewater and the multitude of implications that go with it.

Clinton would have us believe Whitewater is of no importance and that it should be left well enough alone.

Maybe the blame should be put on the Republican party, which Clinton has painted as dogs out for the kill.

If Whitewater was out of the way, Clinton claims, he would be able to get back to running the nation.

Right now, he can't because he is being hampered by those who want to find out the truth about Whitewater.

He states the problem is the opposing political party members are only out to besmirch the Clinton name. Basically, he claims they are being vengeful.

If there is nothing to cover up, then why is the president spending so much time and effort to tell us there is nothing to cover up?

If all an investigation is going to find is nothing, then let it find nothing. This would definitely make his opponents look like idiots and turn him into the hero.

Could it be that some Republicans are not out for vengeance but just want to know the truth? Not many people seem to go for that one, but it does seem quite reasonable.

Clinton should stop wasting his time with press conferences and speeches telling us what the truth is or downplaying those who seek it.

If there is nothing there, Mr. President, ignore it and move on so that you can act like a president and not the spokesperson for a cover-up.

When in America, traveler beware

Let's see, the two Japanese students who were killed in a San Pedro supermarket in California brings the number of foreign visitors and students murdered to what, 20?

Probably more than that. Gotta warn those foreigners about this country now. What to say, what to do, what it means when someone rams your car from behind.

The Kansas City Star reported in its March 29 edition that books are being sold in Japan that include phrases such as "back off," "hands up" and "freeze."

Or, in the words of the Florida tourism board, "The rules are different here."

Yeah, different like Bosnia. It cracks me up that our government takes such a strong stand on other countries. In fact I just heard a statement out of Washington to the effect that Bosnia should develop a society based on something other than guns.

Like us?

Ambassador to Japan Walter Mondale said foreigners are getting a skewed view of America. I say that when you have to warn people not to stop if someone rams them, there's something seriously wrong.

The problem is we're telling people how to stay alive in our country. We give out pamphlets on what to say or do when you're attacked.

No one says our society should change. The people who come here need to learn how to protect themselves — that's all we say.

Adapt to our way of life, such as it is.

Why don't we just hand visitors a flak jacket and an Uzi when they get here? If our government can supply the Contras with weapons, we can provide visitors with tourist visas and complimentary evasive-driving lessons.

Actually, I feel sorry for the Japanese. Here they come, just wanting to see the United States and all the great stuff they've heard about, and we murder them for their cars.

Exercising our Second Amendment rights at the neighbors is one of the things we do best here.

How about some truth in advertising? Let's have the ad for Florida showing Mickey Mouse in a shootout with Donald Duck while driving down Orange Blossom Trail in Orlando.

California should have a flag made up that shows the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse riding through the ruins of Los Angeles.

Washington, D.C., should be a demilitarized zone. Try a skull and crossbones for the city's logo.

The United States is far better off than most of the rest of the world. We have a lower poverty rate than oh, say, Mexico. The problem is that we keep killing each other over stupid stuff. How important is a car? What about sneakers or a jacket?

The rate of gun-related deaths is less in most other countries. Guns are illegal in Japan. In England, the police don't even normally carry guns. They rely on diplomacy.

So, instead of trying to improve conditions for the poor in this nation, we sit here waiting for the people in power to realize there is a direct link between poverty and crime. Instead of trying to help the people who have lost hope in California, the governor wants to expand the death penalty. After all, these murders are wreaking havoc on travel and tourism.

A die for a die, as they say in the movies. Let's stop these killers before they kill again.

By the time we get to that point, it's a little too late, isn't it?

COLLEGE ALGEBRA

Calculators not only problem in course

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to the letter by Pat Mitchell, graduate teaching assistant in mathematics, concerning the algebra course being offered by K-State.

I will agree the original letter by a struggling algebra student placed a great deal of criticism on the calculator required by this course.

Although these calculators are difficult to understand, it certainly isn't the only reason the grade average is so incredibly low.

Perhaps the blame should be placed on numerous problems — a textbook that is difficult to understand even by the instructors, math problems that are more complicated because the solution to the problems should be easier to find because of the enhancement of the calculators, and old exams that are of little use because the new format is entirely different.

Fifty minutes a week in class with an instructor, or more probably a graduate teaching assistant, is not enough time to absorb anything more than four or five examples of next week's homework assignment.

What is the math department doing to solve this dilemma?

I paid good tuition money to be taught this course, and I don't believe it's my lack of brains that is the problem.

By the way, I bought my calculator at Wal-Mart at a cheaper price than offered at Varney's or the K-State Union.

Where is the $40 price break offered to the students Pat quoted in his letter? Although I'm not doing as well in this course as I wanted, even I know the meaning of the word break.

LANGUAGE

French just don't want to be Americanized

Dear Editor,

This is a letter in response to Jared Savage's column about the use of English words in the French language.

The French Academy is not trying to keep the French language pure, as you said, but rather it is trying to maintain the integrity of my native language.

In your column, it sounds as if the French people consider English a "sewer language," and that bothered me a lot.

It implies there are some bad and good languages, which is wrong, of course. Each language has its own character, and it should be kept that way.

French do not want to be Americanized; they want to keep their culture. Anything wrong with that?

The fact that French has 100,000 words and English more than 2 million still remains to be proven to me.

If it is true English has that many words, Americans only use about 1,000 of them, anyway. If you have any doubt about that, just read the Collegian.

TOLES

Truthcentrism lacking at universities

JOHN HART

Know what you believe and why. The most challenging idea I have faced at college is the notion that truth is relative to the individual or the culture.

Is the purpose of my education then to help me learn what truth is for others so I can function in a diverse society or is it to pursue objective truth?

The rise of relativism has profoundly altered the atmosphere of the university.

As the notion of absolute truth has been vanquished from most universities, the interconnections between the philosophy of multiculturalism, the ethic of tolerance and the dogma of relativism have been united to form a new orthodoxy.

The foundation of the new ortho-doxy is built on this tenuous idea of relativism.

If truth is relative, who's to tell me I'm wrong for going into my neighbor's house and blowing his family away with a shotgun? After all, what's right for me may not be right for you; what's true for you is not true for me.

For that grisly action to be judged as wrong, we must appeal to an objective standard of right and wrong, a standard we consistently appeal.

That standard is a real and integral part of all of our lives, regardless of the tendency of a few professors to fancifully deny its existence.

In reality, few people are total relativists. When pressed, most appeal to a few absolute standards: racism is wrong, compassion is good, for example. The sum of these standards, which are exceptions to the relativistic perspective, form the postmodern ethic of tolerance. Truth is relative, they say, but everyone should be tolerant.

Here two fatal contradictions in the new orthodoxy become apparent. First, the very claim of relativists that there are no absolutes is an absolute. Second, the ethic of tolerance is an objective standard in a system that rejects objective standards. The tolerance ethic embraces and repels the notion of objective truth simultaneously. We can not have our lights on and off at the same time.

Even when people are determined to embrace the idea of relativism, the tendency to embrace an objective standard that applies to all of us is inescapable.

In a world of more than 5 billion competing sets of likes and dislikes, humankind has managed to agree on a standard of right and wrong when a world ruled by relativism would be marked by a sea of random, anarchic confusion.

Although the tolerance ethic is firmly rooted in mid-air, I find most of it very appealing and attractive. I would love to see our country be more compassionate, less racist and more accepting.

Yet, the appeal of the tolerance ethic is not in its philosophical viewpoint, but its content — all of which was said thousands of years ago and some of which I believe to be true. The value of tolerance is in its truth, not how it makes me feel.

Truth does not play favorites. It does not prefer one culture over another. It does not embrace one set of feelings over another. Truth does not conform to us; we conform to it. We do not define truth; truth defines us.

Truth is an unchanging definition of reality, an enduring standard of right and wrong, an eternal source of guidance.

It can be threatening to admit that an objective truth may exist because we then have to face the stark reality that we may be wrong and dreadfully missing the point.

I believe we all express a need to be objectively right. People don't like to be wrong, and we go to great lengths to justify our thoughts and actions to others.

I certainly do not have all the answers or exclusive access to truth; I merely believe a truth exists to be pursued. I do believe I have some answers.

The answers I have found have given me purpose, direction and motivation for my life.

For me, truth is in Jesus Christ. In John 14:6, Christ said, "I am the way and the truth and the life." That is quite a claim. But it is a claim I believe can be verified historically with a high degree of certainty through the event of Christ's life and miracles, especially the resurrection event.

College should be more than a diploma factory; it should be a place where students are encouraged to freely examine and critically evaluate ideas.

Education is about learning. And what better to learn than the truth. We don't need education to be less ethnocentric; we need it to be more truthcentric.

John Hart is a junior in political science.

New York time ticking away for Cats

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

NEW YORK — The Wildcats will play their last game of the season tonight against Siena. The Cats have been working hard in anticipation, but they also have been having fun while in New York.

A THREE FOR D.C. — With little more than a minute to play in the K-State-Vanderbilt game Monday night and the Cats down by eight points, center Deryl Cunningham found himself unguarded at the top of the three-point arc.

Cunningham took the shot and hit it for the first three-pointer of his career, pulling the Cats to within five.

Cunningham had tried two other three-point attempts in his career, including a miss in last week's 115-75 victory over Fresno State.

"I'd rather just hit the boards and take a win any day," he said.

SWITCH OF PRACTICE VENUES — K-State practiced Monday morning at the New York Athletic Club, located directly south of Central Park.

The club is best known for awarding the annual Heisman Trophy winner for the best collegiate football player.

Unfortunately for the Cats, the Club has a strict suit-and-tie dress code for entry, which K-State, dressed in practice gear, did not qualify for.

After some hurried negotiations, the team was smuggled through a side entrance to the gymnasium for a one-hour shootaround.

The Cats practiced Tuesday at Pace University, located in Lower Manhattan between Wall Street and Chinatown.

ON SPRING BREAK, PART DEUX — K-State was the only school at the NIT that didn't bring its pep squad and band to Madison Square Garden.

But concurrently, the Wildcats were the only one of the four universities on spring break when their teams made the Final Four.

"We had our spring break two weeks ago," Vanderbilt cheerleader Autumn Johnson said. "It's just so sad — missing more school to come to New York."

CROWD FAVORITE — The 62-point performance of Ski Jones last week made him a household name in New York.

Jones' scoring exploits were the subject of articles in the New York Times and New York Post over the last few days, and Jones was the only player to draw heavy applause during the introductions Monday night.

SISKEL & EBERT, CUNNINGHAM AND HILL — NIT roommates Deryl Cunningham and sophomore George Hill took some time Sunday night to go see the new basketball movie, "Above the Rim," showing at the Times Square Theater across from the player's hotel.

"It was good," Hill said. "I really enjoyed it."

Cunningham was a little more enigmatic about his critique.

"I give it five stars," he said.

Five Stars?

Last chance for year

■ The Siena Saints were defeated during their semifinal game, 66-58, by Villanova.

■ The Cats and the Saints have never played each other.

NEW YORK — The K-State roller coaster will officially close for the season tonight.

The Wildcat basketball team will play its final game of the season against Siena in the consolation game of the National Invitation Tournament at 5:45 p.m. CST in Madison Square Garden.

And a season with respectable accomplishments and big disappointments is coming to a halt.

The Wildcats have secured a 20-win season for only the third time in the last 12 years, but that contrasts with a 4-10 mark in the Big Eight and a sixth-place finish.

The Siena Saints are 24-8 overall, 12-2 in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference.

Doremus Bennerman, a key Siena player, has been averaging 31 points per game since the start of the NIT.

The Wildcats won three games to get to the NIT Final Four, but their 82-76 semifinal loss to Vanderbilt Monday night now guarantees them a finish no better than third, dovetailing nicely with the pattern of their season.

"We wanted first place, and we're not going to get it," guard Askia Jones said. "We just want to come out and win this game, have some fun and come out with a victory."

And that's the theme in the Wildcats' final day of the season.

"I would have rather be playing in the championship game," Ron Lucas said.

"But as Coach says, not a lot of teams have a chance to go out on a winning note.

"We have that chance tonight."

"We just want to come out and win this game, have some fun and come out with a victory."

Tourney surprises even an 11-year-old bookie

If you're like me, many of you were probably glued to the TV set throughout most of the NCAA Tournament.

If you're like me, you probably weren't watching the games just for the sheer love of the sport.

And if you're like me, you're losing big time this year because annoying little underdog teams like Wisconsin-Green Bay and Tulsa kept winning, screwing up the entire bracket betting system.

Chances are, you probably had high financial interests at stake with the outcome of each game, since betting on tournament brackets has become as synonymous with March Madness as Dick Vitale.

Every year around this time, I make a promise to myself to be a good little girl and just enjoy the games.

I tell myself that sports are supposed to be fun and entertaining, not a financial adventure.

But every year around this time, people like my fellow sportswriter, Jeremy, come into entering their little office pools, saying, "Come on, Nicole, you know you could win it all this year," and "Why don't you enter more than once — you'd have a better shot."

My 11-year-old brother, Cody, even helps corrupt me, as he pulls me into his little gambling ring. He's just a sixth grader, but he's probably the biggest bookie Hoxie Grade School has ever seen.

So this year, I vowed to give up betting on tournament games. I even decided to give it up for Lent.

But when Jeremy flashed me that empty, neatly copied tournament bracket, I just couldn't resist.

I quickly switched my Lenten sacrifice to desserts, handed Jeremy the money, and away I went.

Before I made a single mark on my bracket, I consulted with my bookie, er, brother, Cody, promising to share half of the winnings with him if he would help me out on some of the pairings.

Cody is usually the authority on random sports facts and unknown teams, but he was a little off this year. Let's just say I'm going with my gut next time.

But not even Cody could have anticipated some of the upsets that occurred throughout the tournament.

The first major one that probably shocked bracket betters everywhere was the Wisconsin/Green Bay upset over California. Where has Wisconsin/Green Bay been hiding all year? With Gonzaga?

The second big one was Tulsa's upset of fifth-seeded UCLA, then moving on to the Sweet Sixteen with a victory over state rival Oklahoma State and Big Country Bryant Reeves.

See you next year, Country. Go home and eat.

At this point in the tournament, I was losing points right and left, so it shouldn't have shocked me when perennial powers North Carolina and Kentucky were knocked out.

SPORTS DIGEST

► JOHNSON TAKES A HIKE FROM DALLAS, JONES

IRVING, Texas — Jimmy Johnson severed his tempestuous five-year relationship with Jerry Jones Tuesday, leaving the Dallas Cowboys and a chance to win an unprecedented third-straight Super Bowl.

Johnson's resignation capped a long-standing feud that boiled over in Orlando, Fla., last week when Jones suggested in a barroom conversation that he should hire a new coach, and his remarks got back to Johnson.

"After our discussions, we have mutually decided that I would no longer be the head football coach of the Dallas Cowboys," Johnson said, sitting to the right of Jones at the Cowboys' Valley Ranch headquarters after two days of meetings.

But their kind words today aside, the feud between the two began almost as soon as Jones bought the team in 1989, fired Tom Landry and made Johnson his coach.

During the NFL owners' meeting last week in Orlando, Jones had suggested in public that he would fire Johnson and replace him with former Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer.

Johnson, infuriated, left the meetings the next morning.

Jones said at their joint news conference Tuesday that no successor to Johnson would be named immediately.

Weather helps propel team to 2nd place

CRAIG PINKERTON

The K-State women's team rebounded from a rough start to finish the Southwest Missouri State Golf Invitational in second place.

The Wildcats were led by Jacque Wright for the eighth-straight time this year. Wright fired an 86 and a 77 for a second-place total of 163. The second-place finish tied Wright's career-best finish, which she also recorded at Iowa State last year.

Wright was the only player in the tournament to record a round in the 70s on the final day at Hickory Hills Country Club in Springfield, Mo.

Wright credits some of the improvement in the team score to the weather, which was much better than the 8-degree wind chill the golfers experienced in the opening round.

"The weather wasn't nearly as bad today, so if you went on a bad run, it wasn't as hard to pull yourself out," the junior said.

Assistant coach Jim Brennenman said he was pleased with the way Wright finished the tournament strong.

"Jacque played really well today after she didn't finish well yesterday," Brennenman said. "She just took it one stroke at a time and she shot well."

Troy Halterman led the men's team by shooting 78-81-77 — 236, good for a 22nd-place finish individually.

Jason Losch finished 37th with a 240. Chad Buckridge, the only freshman on the trip, finished the tournament in 48th.

The men's team, which took no one older than a sophomore to the tournament, finished 12th after carding 327-318-311 — 956 at Highland Springs Country Club.

Museum's galleries, wing named after art patrons

JEFF GRAHAM
Collegian

Two galleries and an educational wing to be in the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art have been dedicated to outstanding people who appreciated fine art, Nelson Britt, director of the museum, said.

Both of the galleries and a wing have received $500,000 each in donations. In order to build the museum, $5 million in donations has been raised.

The largest gallery will be named for Mary Holton Seaton, a 1933 K-State alumna.

Shortly after her death in 1989, her husband, R.M. Seaton, asked that the largest of the five galleries be named in her honor.

The gallery will feature works by regional artists of the 20th century.

The Holton and Seaton names represent prominent K-State families with campus buildings already named in their honor, Britt said.

Richard Seaton, University

attorney, and Edward Seaton, owner and publisher of the Manhattan Mercury, are sons of R.M. and Mary Holton Seaton.

"R.M. Seaton was one of the first benefactors to come forward with a significant gift," Jessica Reichman, curator of collections, said.

"His leadership in this endeavor inspired others to contribute to the project."

Another gallery will be the John Helm Memorial Gallery. It will exhibit works from the K-State permanent collection, which are now housed in different buildings around campus. The art will be shown on a rotating basis.

Helm was a faculty member in architecture and was instrumental in developing a permanent art collection at K-State, Britt said.

Helm also founded the Friends of Art, and in the 1960s, Helm taught History of Painting and Sculpture.

"John Helm's legacy as a teacher who had a vision for K-State's art collection was well recognized," Pat Conderman, president of the Friends of Art, said.

"Because of his influence in the classroom in those days, it is more enjoyable to visit a museum today."

Britt said the museum will also feature an educational facility because of a generous gift from Crosby and Bebe Kemper.

The Kemper Educational Wing will include a lecture hall with movable seating for up to 200 people, as well as a projection booth and an audio-visual storage area.

"The state-of-the-art facility will have the necessary equipment to link up with the Dole Communication Center for statewide and national coverage, Britt said.

"The educational center will reach a wider audience and help those people who cannot visit the museum," Reichman said.

"It will allow everyone the opportunity to enjoy our programs."

Reichman said the Kempers provide funding for a variety of cultural efforts through the Kemper Foundation, Reichman said.

The Kempers, from Kansas City, Mo., were recognized as one of the top 100 private collectors in the United States in 1993, Reichman said.

KILLER TOOLS.

What can turn ordinary augers, ladders, trimmers, sprinklers and towers into killers? Contact with an overhead line.

Any object tall enough to touch a power line can conduct electricity directly to you. And just one brief touch can kill you or cause very serious injury.

Simply look up before you lift or move any tall equipment or tool so you can avoid the danger of touching an overhead line.

That way you'll be safe. And your tools won't become killers.

Building site allows for expansion the town, but it is also important to address and embrace the University," he said.

There are several reasons why this site was chosen over four others, Britt said.

The advantages include readily available parking, opportunities for future expansion and its proximity to several other culturally oriented buildings such as McCain Auditorium and Nichols Hall, he said.

Because of the slope of the land, the University entrance on the north will be on the main level, and the community entrance on the south will be on a lower ground level, Andersson said.

The site will also allow 4,000 to 6,000 square feet of outdoor space for possible sculpture display, he said.

Andersson said he believes it is important that the new building complement the surroundings.

With this in mind, he said, his firm has decided the exterior of the two-story structure will be limestone and concrete.

The slope of the roof will be compatible with the roof on Thompson Hall, and, like Thompson, it will have gray shingles.

"The distinction of the exterior as well as the interior architecture comes from the already established environment and designated use," Andersson said.

The interior space will be divided into public areas, including galleries, assembly areas and other space for preparation.

Space will also be provided for administration and mechanical facilities, he said.

The public areas include entries on both the ground level and the main level, Andersson said.

A commons area will be located on the main level along with a catering kitchen, cafe, bookstore, information desk and a coat room.

A vault, a temperature-controlled room that will house several galleries, will also be located on the main level, Andersson said.

The preparation and support areas will be on the ground level along with storage rooms, work space, a student study room and a works-examination studio, Andersson said.

Administrative offices will also be on the ground level.

Britt said he felt Andersson had studied every detail.

Bird watchers up at crack of dawn

For more information on the trips or the Flint Hills Audubon Society, call David Rintoul at 532-6663.

MEREDITH REILLY
Collegian

People of all ages gather together once a month to share their interest in bird watching through field trips organized through the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society.

David Rintoul, associate professor in biology, usually leads the group of about 10 people each month on its outing.

Who shows up to bird watch usually depends on the weather, he said.

Rintoul has been involved with the bird-watching field trips for about three years.

The bird-watching trips begin about 7 a.m. on the second Saturday of every month and last no longer than five hours.

"We bird watch only in the mornings because that's when the birds are hungry and most active," Rintoul said.

Where the group goes to watch birds depends on the season of the year.

Rintoul said the group will gather and decide that morning where they want to go.

The group goes to wetlands to see water fowl such as ducks and geese.

For smaller migratory birds, they may go to Ashland Bottoms, which is south of the Kansas River near the Konza Prairie.

One place in Manhattan where the group goes to watch birds, because of the quiet atmosphere, is the Manhattan Cemetery.

Another place they used to go was on a nature trail behind the First Territorial Capital Museum on Fort Riley Boulevard.

"We don't go there anymore because it was ruined from the flood," Rintoul said.

He said the types of birds they look for depends on the people that are on the trip.

Children, beginners, experienced and new people to the community may show up each month.

If there are children, they focus on the bigger birds that they can see easily.

With a more experienced group, they will look for smaller and quicker birds.

"We usually see something," Rintoul said. "It's neat to take people out who aren't from around here."

The group spotted 178 species of birds last year.

One rare sighting was the Barrow's Golden Eye, which is a diving duck.

It was only the third or fourth spotting of that species in Kansas and the first documented one because, Rintoul said, he got pictures of it.

Duane Kerr, a microbiologist for the pathology and microbiology department, is the field trip chairman.

"We organize field trips for the whole year," he said.

The group plans local natural area field trips on public land, especially for new Manhattan residents, to show them new areas, Kerr said.

Bird-watching field trips are not the only activities the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society plans.

There are also astronomy, fossil, wildflower and insect-field trips.

"They're periodical," Kerr said. "Whenever people express their interests about something else, we plan it and go."

For the bird-watching group, however, there is a social event each year, Kerr said.

At about Christmas, a national event called the Christmas Bird Count takes place.

Each Audubon chapter establishes a centerpoint. The Northern Flint Hills' centerpoint is Anderson Hall.

Near Anderson is a 7-1/2-mile radius. Bird watchers gather and look for birds from sunrise to sunset in that area.

They count the species and how many of each species they find.

"The Christmas Bird Count gives a calculation every year of population trends," Kerr said.

About 100 people show up for the event and about 90-100 species are spotted, he said.

The Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society is open to anyone in the community.

The society has monthly meetings, except in July and August.

"We try to tie our schedule with the University schedule," Kerr said.

MEXICO

Successor to ruling party named

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — Mexico's ruling party named Yale-trained economist Ernesto Zedillo as its new presidential candidate Tuesday, making him the favorite to be the country's next leader.

The former public education secretary was chosen to replace Luis Donaldo Colosio, who was assassinated while campaigning in Tijuana last week. Zedillo was Colosio's campaign manager for the Aug. 21 election.

Zedillo, 42, has never held an elected office. Analysts described him as a technocrat and good negotiator.

He stands squarely in the tradition of President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and his predecessor, Miguel de la Madrid, both free-market financial experts with Ivy-League degrees.

Zedillo's campaign began amid disorganization almost unheard of for the Institutional Revolutionary Party, known as PRI, which has run Mexico for 65 years. No other party in the world still in power has ruled so long.

"I assume (the nomination) with the absolute conviction that the best man to take the PRI to victory and the country to fulfill its aspirations was at all times Donaldo Colosio," he said in an acceptance speech largely dedicated to the slain candidate.

Huge banners bearing Colosio's name still drape party headquarters.

Two men are held in Colosio's killing and investigators say they are trying to determine if more may have been involved.

A crayfish by any other name could still smell like profits to researchers

AARON GRAHAM
Collegian

Whether you say crayfish or crawdaddy, those little crustaceans are big business, and a K-State professor is conducting research to help grow them commercially.

Harold Klaassen, associate professor of biology, is researching techniques to mass produce crayfish efficiently for consumption by people and other animals.

"We're trying to develop techniques to grow crayfish commercially either for bait or for food," Klaassen said.

Crayfish are freshwater crustaceans that resemble a small lobster. People in southern states commonly eat them, and others around the country use crayfish as bait.

Klaassen, who has been researching crayfish for more than 10 years, studies crayfish at ponds on University and public land and at an aquatic tank at Bushnell Hall.

"We use crayfish native to the area," he said. "It's a bad policy to introduce organisms like that from some other place."

One of the goals is to find a food that will help the crayfish grow quickly, but cost little.

"They'll eat anything, but the idea is to find a food source that is cheap and nutritious for them," Klaassen said. "We've found they will eat some algae and an assortment of organisms growing on decomposing vegetation."

Other areas of Klaassen's crayfish research include reproduction, growth rates, and management methods to maximize the commercial production of crayfish.

Klaassen said area residents may be missing out on a good business opportunity if they overlook the crayfish market because they are the best natural bait and because they are tastier than any other crustacean, such as shrimp or lobster.

"I think there is a potential for a crayfish market in the area, but it depends on how it is developed and promoted for both bait and consumption," he said.

"We have gotten good production at 600 to 1,000 pounds per acre per year without much input. There's a good possibility someone could net $1,000 per acre, but most people aren't willing to develop the market."

The crayfish research is funded by the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station and the North Central Regional Aquaculture Center in East Lansing, Mich.

Bert Pulaski, senior business and finance officer for the experiment station, said the money from the experiment station is given to each department to allocate.

"We did not assign specific dollars to Dr. Klaassen because that is up to the department head, but I think that's an interesting project he's got going," Pulaski said.

Running mate named by gubernatorial candidate

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — Sen. Sheila Frahm of Colby will be the lieutenant governor running mate of Secretary of State Bill Graves in his bid for the Republican nomination for governor.

Graves' campaign aides confirmed on Tuesday that Frahm has agreed to join his ticket, and said an announcement would be made next week in a statewide tour of about seven cities.

While neither confirming nor denying reports that she has agreed to run with Graves, Frahm said, "I've said I would keep all my options open. I've thought about it long and hard, and I believe it's the right decision."

She said being lieutenant governor "would give me a statewide perspective, the opportunity to use my knowledge and experience statewide."

Frahm, 49, has served six years in the Senate, the past two sessions as majority leader.

Before that, she was a member of the state Board of Education. Graves, 41, has been secretary of state for eight years.

She becomes the second woman senator to join a gubernatorial candidacy. Sen. Barbara Lawrence of Wichita is the running mate of Pittsburg businessman Gene Bicknell, another contender for the GOP nomination for governor.

Two other GOP contenders, Rich Becker of Lenexa and Fred Kerr of Pratt, have not disclosed who their running mates are. Democratic contenders Jim Slattery and Joan Wagnon, both of Topeka, also have not said who will run with them.

STATE GOVERNMENT

Films could give tax break

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — People would receive a tax break if they invest in a Kansas movie that gets two thumbs down from the public under a bill passed by the Senate.

The Senate on Tuesday approved the bill 33-7 that supporters say would open the door to more films in Kansas.

"This is a growing industry in Kansas," said Sen. Marge Petty, D-Topeka. "We have a wonderful opportunity now."

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina, amended a minor bill to allow Kansans to recoup some of their losses from films that bomb if they are shot in the state.

"We ought to encourage these investments," he said. "Nothing ventured, nothing gained."

Under Vidricksen's amendment, people who invest in a film being shot in Kansas would be able to claim state income tax credits to get back part of their investment if the movies fail to make money.

The deduction would be on a sliding scale. For example, if a person invests $40,000 in a movie being filmed in Kansas and loses $30,000, then a tax credit of $3,000 could be claimed.

The tax credit could be used only for movies being shot in Kansas.

Sen. Paul Feleciano, D-Wichita, was less than impressed with the amendment. He said the Legislature could provide such a tax break for all kinds of investments.

"I want to invest in some ostriches," he said. "The list could go on and on and on."

"I don't think it's that big a deal,"

Vidricksen said. "It's not going to hurt the fiscal integrity of the Legislature."

Vidricksen's amendment was tacked onto the bill on a 15-14 unrecorded vote.

Sen. Barbara Lawrence, R-Wichita, said the measure can only encourage the Kansas film industry.

Lawrence is also a member of the Kansas Film Commission and the lieutenant running mate of GOP gubernatorial candidate Gene Bicknell. Bicknell has produced and acted in a few movies.

Lawrence said she does not know whether Bicknell invests in movies anymore.

"We've got a lot of Kansas film makers, those who are directors and producers," she said. "They like Kansas."

PLO, Israel resume peace talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — The PLO sat down Tuesday with Israeli negotiators and discussed security for Palestinians in Hebron despite its anger over the Israeli army's slaying of six PLO militants in the occupied lands.

PLO leader Yasser Arafat had threatened to scrap the session because of the slayings, but officials at the PLO headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia, said he authorized the meeting to decide whether to restart broader talks on Israel's withdrawal from the occupied Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho.

Those talks have been halted since Feb. 25 when a Jewish settler massacred 30 Palestinians in a Hebron mosque.

The meeting began at mid-afternoon between the two chief delegates, the PLO's Nabil Shaath and Israeli Maj. Gen. Amnon Shahak, Egypt's Middle East News Agency reported.

Abbas Zaki, a member of the central committee of Arafat's Fatah PLO faction, said the Palestinians want answers on how many foreign observers and Palestinian police will be allowed as a security force in Hebron.

"The Palestinians want guarantees from the Israelis when it comes to the security and protection of Palestinian people," he told The Associated Press by telephone from Tunis.

Israel has agreed in principle to posting international observers in Hebron.

But it is arguing for a force in the dozens, while the PLO wants up to 200.

One Palestinian source said that if agreement is reached on the Hebron issue, the negotiators could move quickly to discussing the Palestinian autonomy in Gaza and Jericho that was outlined in the Israel-PLO accord signed Sept. 13.

The source, who insisted on anonymity, said the autonomy talks could be completed within a week.

On Tuesday, a 17-year-old Palestinian was killed and more than 50 other people were wounded in clashes with the Israeli army that erupted after soldiers shot and killed six PLO militants Monday night in the Gaza Strip.

In Tunis, Arafat claimed that anti-peace elements in the Israeli army were responsible for the slayings.

"The crime is deliberate, the timing is deliberate and the aim is to sabotage the peace process," he said.

Tutors can make a difference between failure and success

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

The middle-school years may be a difficult time for some children, especially if they are having problems academically.

The Manhattan Youth Center has recognized this and has recently started a tutoring program for seventh and eighth graders using primarily K-State students as tutors.

"It's a difficult time and turning point for kids," Donna Edwards, tutor coordinator for the youth center, said.

"If students can get through seventh and eighth grade successfully, their chances are much higher of making it in high school."

The tutoring program started Monday, March 7, in conjunction with the opening of the Manhattan Youth Center at 410 Houston St.

Betsy Urbanek, junior in secondary education, saw an ad in the Collegian asking for volunteers to tutor in the afternoon and decided it would be a good opportunity to become familiar with middle school students.

"It's the age group I think I want to teach, so it's good experience to show me if I want to teach this age group or not," Urbanek said.

Amy Gates, sophomore in elementary education, said she enjoys working with the students and often finds herself laughing at their definitions of words.

"They're kind of scampers," she said. "They'll kind of trick you into reading more pages or doing stuff for them."

The target group for the program is students in the seventh and eighth grade in danger of failing a class or grade level.

"Overall, the main goals of the tutoring program are to assist students at risk academically as well as to provide support in terms of mentoring," Edwards said.

For the first week, the tutoring program had six students on Monday and Wednesday and five students Tuesday and Thursday. In the future, Edwards said they would like a maximum of 20 students per session and a one-to-three ratio between tutors and students.

Edwards said the tutors from K-State, many of whom are from the Marketing Club or are education majors, all have been enthusiastic and supportive of the program.

BE A TUTOR

If you are interested in volunteering as a tutor, call Donna Edwards at work, 587-2150, or home, 776-0865. Tutors are needed the most during May.

Conversational partners explore new cultures

RENEE MARTIN
Collegian

Participants in the International Student Center's Conversational English Program do more than just talk.

They also learn about different cultures and establish friendships with people from around the world.

"The program is designed to match American students with international students to help them with their English-speaking skills," Kathy Hund, program coordinator and graduate student in special education, said. "More important than improving English skills are the friendships and the learning about American culture firsthand."

The program is open to American students, international students and their spouses, and community members. Hund said 200 people currently participate.

To join the program, people fill out information sheets so they can be matched with partners who share similar interests.

Once they are matched, the partners are encouraged to meet for one hour once a week throughout the semester but are not limited to this time schedule.

"Some partners meet not only for a semester but for as long as the international student is at K-State," Hund said.

Bill Bahr, senior in history, and Khalid Al-Gabir, graduate student in statistics, share a long-lasting partnership. Al-Gabir, who was matched with Bahr three years ago, said their relationship has gradually changed throughout the years.

"We started as partners and developed as friends," Al-Gabir said. "Now, I consider him my friend, and I ask him to come over to my home as a friend."

When they first began meeting, Bahr said they were both a little hesitant.

"It was kind of uncomfortable the first couple of times because his language skills weren't real good," Bahr said. "At first, we talked about general information, such as our families and ages."

He said the conversations changed as the two became more comfortable with each other.

"He's more interested on what I think of world issues," Bahr said. "It's been a good exchange of ideas."

Al-Gabir introduced Bahr to eating ox tail and reading the Koran, while Bahr took him to his first basketball game. Both said they enjoyed learning about each other's culture.

"I know the American culture better than before," Al-Gabir said. "Actually, he teaches me the good things about American culture."

Sheila Cook, senior in journalism and mass communications, said she volunteered for the program because she is able to relate to international students. Cook, who grew up in India and the Middle East, moved to the United States four years ago.

She is matched with Yaping Tsai, who moved to Manhattan from China so her husband, Weibing Xing, graduate student in horticulture, could attend K-State.

"I'm from another country and can relate to her experiences," Cook said. "I know how difficult it is to live in another country and put myself in her position."

Cook said Tsai is improving her English-speaking skills through conversation. Their topics, which range from health and fitness to their futures, also provide them insight to differences between Chinese and American culture.

"Learning a language and learning a culture are two different things," Cook said. "You have to accept differences even if you don't believe in them."

Another participant from China is Xiao Mei, whose husband is a K-State student. Mei joined the program two years ago, but her partner graduated in December, so she is waiting to be remarried.

"I'm working in a lab right now, so I need better English to talk to my boss and other people," Mei said. "I want to talk to someone who will push me in English."

Mei is one of eight people who remain unmatched. Hund said she is trying to find partners for them and encouraged more American students to join the program.

"A lot of people think they can't be an English tutor, but anyone can do it," Hund said.

People should take advantage of the opportunity to learn about another culture, she said.

IN FOCUS

MARCH 30, 1994

Tonya Garza, Goodland, and Billy Ray Smith, recreation director at Job Corps, play checkers between classes.

Toyna Garza, Goodland, and Rebecca Hamilton, Girard, work on invoice tables for a business/clerical class at Flint Hills Job Corps. The assignment took the students about thirty minutes to complete.

Job Corps offers hands-on training

The Flint Hills Job Corps gives economically disadvantaged youth a second chance at a better education and a better life.

The Flint Hills Job Corps, near Manhattan airport, provides residential education and vocational training at no cost for unemployed and undereducated young men and women.

"The program makes these youth employable, productive citizens who in return give back to the community," Lynda Bachelor, placement and outreach specialist for Flint Hills Job Corps, said.

Only about 20 percent of the students at the center have a high-school diploma, Bachelor said.

Shenita Livingston, Job Corps student studying business and nursing, said the program helped motivate her to study to become a nurse. She is 22.

"If you are determined and know what you want, then it is a good program," she said.

Livingston, who is from Liberal, said she would like to take classes at K-State toward her nursing degree after she finishes the Job Corps program.

Job Corps students must be between the ages of 16 and 21 when they start the program, come from low-income homes, lack education or training that prevents them from getting a job, and have the ability to complete the training and benefit from the program.

Students have rules they must follow upon entering the program. These include attending all classes, meetings and appointments.

They are not allowed to have cars and cannot leave the center without authorization, Bachelor said.

"This is a voluntary program, but we need to protect the students. That is why we have these rules," she said.

Tamyra Clark, from Topeka, has been at the center for 21 months studying nursing.

Clark, 23, said the sheltered environment at the center helped her get on track. She said she plans to study mortician science when she finishes the program.

"At first, I didn't want to be here and didn't know what I wanted to do. Now, I don't want to leave," Clark said.

Tonya Garza, who is studying business, said she is anxious to finish the program and get a job. She is 19 and is from Goodland.

"It teaches you to do well with the skills and socially, but some things we will just have to learn on our own," Garza said.

The average time it takes to complete the program is nine months, but some students may take two or three years.

"Students learn at their own pace. There is no semester or quarter system. The school is year-round," Bachelor said.

Alternating attending academic and vocational classes, students attend classes Monday through Friday from 8:10 a.m. to 3:50 p.m.

Seven vocational training programs are offered: Business, Clerical Occupations, Health Occupations, Culinary Arts, Building and Apartment Maintenance, Plumbing, Carpentry and Cement Masonry.

Each program offers hands-on training, and most of the work benefits the Job Corps.

The residents are responsible for 95 percent of the upkeep and maintenance of the buildings and grounds.

"No workers are contracted from the outside," Clark said. "We do the work that needs to be done with the skills we are learning."

Students in the culinary arts are responsible for preparing a full meal two days a week for the other students and planning banquets and special meetings.

"The guys in cement masonry poured the floor for the outside smoking shelter. Then, the carpenter and apartment-maintenance groups will come in and put up the rest of it and install the electrical outlets," Clark said.

The Job Corps program was enacted by Congress as part of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964.

Flint Hills Job Corps is one of 112 Job Corps operated through the U.S. Department of Labor. It opened its doors to its first students Feb. 11, 1992.

The Flint Hills location was chosen for its proximity to K-State and Fort Riley, Bachelor said, and because the buildings could be renovated, keeping the architectural value.

James Noonan, Manhattan, sets studs for a gazebo he and fellow carpentry students are constructing.

Phil Harlet, Junction City, installs a p-trap in a model house for plumbing installation class.

Renee Funk, Springfield, Mo., places son Justin in his stroller after her Job Corps classes end for the day. Funk lives in the single-parent dorm on the Job Corps campus.

Singers bound for Chicago

The K-State Singers are hitting the road.

For the second time in three years, the Singers have been chosen to participate in the Collegiate Showcase Invitational. It will be showing April 7-9 in Chicago.

Jerry Polich, K-State Singers director, said only 15 colleges from across the United States were selected.

"You get to see groups from across the entire country perform. Each group has different sounds and styles, so we can learn from them, and they can learn from us," Polich said.

Laura Kelly, senior in apparel and textile marketing, participated in the showcase two years ago and said the experience was worthwhile.

"It's really nice to see other groups perform," she said. "Sometimes we think that our style is the only kind of singing, but showcases like this let us see that we are so different from everyone else because we use comedy."

The showcase not only highlights jazz and show choirs, but also solo performances. Mark Schultz, senior in marketing, was one of eight soloists chosen to sing in this year's Collegiate Showcase Invitational.

"I was very grateful to be chosen to sing. It's quite an honor. We've been to the showcase before, and the talent has been phenomenal, and I'm really excited to be a part of it," Schultz said.

"It will be a great way to top off my last year at K-State. I'm really lucky."

Transvestite scares reader stiff

Dear Cassandra,

I need your help. I am your typical college student. I have been stressing out lately because I have been bogged down with tests. Like most students, I go to Aggieville to relieve some of the pressure. I must have been more stressed out than I thought because I got really drunk.

Well anyway, I met this wonderful woman. It was like we were made for each other. She seemed to understand my problems. I thought she was wonderful. After a while, I found myself at her apartment. We started to have sex. We were really hot and heavy. We started to take off our clothes.

I screamed in horror because the girl of my dreams turned out to be a man. I ran out of the apartment. Now, when I walk around campus I wonder if there are more men dressed as women. I am really scared. Cassandra, what should I do?

Sincerely,
Scared stiff

Dear Stiff,

First thing is you need to learn the correct procedure to have sex. Clothes come off BEFORE you have sex and get hot and heavy. Try this method next time and you will discover equipment problems much sooner.

Dear Cassie,

Film festival honors Italian director Fellini

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Federico Fellini is the quintessential Italian filmmaker of this century.

His style and artistic grace has influenced hundreds of directors. His movies have entranced both Italian and foreign audiences alike.

Sadly, the famed director passed away in 1993. What better way to remember Fellini than to see his films? Thanks to the gracious people at the Union Program Council, K-State students can see two of his master works, "I Vitelloni" and "8 1/2."

"8 1/2" is by far his greatest cinematic achievement. It's like Attenborough's "Gandhi" or Spielberg's "Schindler's List," if you will. It is simply the height of his talent, the summation of his gifts. And, possibly, it is autobiographical.

Although it has no dated feel, "8 1/2" was made in 1963. That same year, it won the Oscar for best foreign film. A few years ago, Fellini accepted the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. It was the feather in his cap after creating an extraordinary cinematic heritage.

"8 1/2" explores the torment of a famous director, Guido (played remarkably well by Marcello Mastroianni), who cannot decide what to make his next movie about. He has no script and practically no idea.

To complicate matters, he has a mistress, a wife and many female admirers who are all vying for his attention. He isn't living his own life. They are living it for him.

What can he do? Well, he escapes his frantic life by delving into a dream world of past fantasies. He visits his childhood. He recalls events from his education in a Catholic school. And, as most men do, he dreams of wild fantasies — women and himself embracing in wild, orgasmic pleasure (picture a harem, Guido and about 50 girls, with his wife doing the cooking, washing and cleaning).

Fellini surprises us with these montages of memories. He delights us with witty camera angles. Every once in a while, he will throw in a confusing scene or subplot that bewilders us. It doesn't necessarily have to make sense. Does life make sense?

Mastroianni, who last starred in "Used People," is wonderful. It is not hard to understand why he has had such a lengthy and distinguished career. He has a very timeless appeal.

The music that Fellini chose is wonderful. It's so un-American, not in style, but in usage. It feels awkward when a fast concerto dances through a very inanimate scene in the movie.

Between fantasies, Guido is sucked back into his fast-paced life. His so-called movie goes nowhere. He is at the end of the road. So, he does the only thing he can do — make a movie about his own life.

The final scene in the movie is a mad romp through a movie set involving everyone of importance in his life. It is confusing, romantic and questionable.

In other words, it is life.

MOVIE REVIEW

The Union Program Council will be presenting a Federico Fellini Film Festival as part of the Kaleidoscope movie series. "I Vitelloni" will be shown at 8 tonight and at 7 p.m. Thursday in Union Forum Hall. "8 1/2" will be shown at 9:30 p.m. Thursday and at 8 p.m. Friday in Forum Hall.

Clinic for creatures both great and small

JENNIFER KELLER
Collegian

The K-State veterinary clinic is not only a place to take sick or injured animals, but it is also a place of learning.

Housed in the Veterinary Medical Sciences Building, the vet clinic is divided into two sections: small animal and large animal.

The large-animal clinic treats animals including cows, pigs, horses, goats and llamas. The small clinic sees domestic animals such as cats and dogs, and exotic animals such as birds, iguanas, snakes, turtles, ferrets and guinea pigs.

The small clinic also treats the animals from the Topeka and Manhattan zoos.

"The animals we see come from local ranchers and farmers and from lots of other states like Missouri, Oklahoma and Nebraska," Kelly Ingalsbe, office supervisor of the large animal clinic, said.

Among the 38 clinicians, 20 interns and 80 senior veterinary medicine students, they see about 10 large animals and about 30 small animals daily, depending on the injuries and the time of year.

"Since we are basically open 24 hours a day, seven days a week with our emergency service, we are able to treat quite a few animals each day," Ingalsbe said.

The costs for the services in both clinics range from $15 for an office call, which includes a general exam, to $100 for "working your animal up," including blood work.

Costs can vary in the case of broken bones and fractures depending on what bone is broken and the supplies needed to repair it.

To help the senior veterinary students gain experience, the vet clinic has them work for one year with clients.

"Their last year is really important because it lets the students apply what they have learned in the classroom to real animals," Linda Rohs, office supervisor of the small-animal clinic, said.

The students work in rotation groups in which they spend six weeks in each of the eight sections of the hospital. Their days are broken into shifts in which the student works between 10 and 12 hours a day.

"Their last year is really important because it lets the students apply what they have learned in the classrooms to real animals."

NATIONAL INVITATION TOURNAMENT

Vandy sends Wildcats to consolation game of NIT

SCOTT ABEL

Collegian

NEW YORK — It was reality-check time for K-State.

No 115-point scoring outbursts. No three-pointers raining down from all angles. No broken records for Askia Jones.

In front of a mostly empty and indifferent Madison Square Garden, the Wildcats lost 82-76 to Vanderbilt in the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament.

And they lost the way the Cats lost 12 other games this season — through poor shooting and poorer defense.

After a 56.3-percent shooting performance against Fresno State, the Wildcats hit only 37.5 percent from the field against the Commodores.

Jones, who scored 62 points in the Cats' 115-77 win against the Bulldogs at Bramlage Coliseum last week, had a quiet 17 points Monday night in the Garden.

And that was through Vanderbilt's design.

The Commodores threw the proverbial kitchen sink at Jones on defense, switching from zone to various junk defenses to try to slow him down.

"Obviously, he's a tremendous outside shooter, and we basically tried to crowd him," Vanderbilt coach Jan Van Breda Kolff said. "We played a lot of guys on him and mixed it up."

But the defensive credit went to Vanderbilt guard Ronnie McMahan, who hounded Jones into four-of-11 shooting while scoring 27 points of his own.

"I've been challenged to guard the other team's best scorer a lot this year," McMahan said. "I crowded him and tried to make it tough by making him play on both ends of the floor."

"I wanted to keep him from scoring 62 again."

But that was never a serious concern Monday night. McMahan drew a quick offensive foul on Jones in the first few seconds of the game.

Jones then picked up another midway through the half, and he spent most of his time on the bench next to Altman. Jones' halftime stats: one basket, two free throws, four points.

But the Wildcats kept the game close on the strength of Demond Davis, who, along with Deryl Cunningham, gave K-State an inside threat to counter-act the Cats' outside shooting woes.

Davis shot only one-for-seven from the field, but he hit five of seven free throws after being fouled underneath the basket.

◀ Deryl Cunningham wrestles with Vanderbilt's Frank Seckar during the second half of the Cats' 82-76 loss in the semifinals of the NIT Monday night. K-State dropped to 20-13 with the setback.

SHANE KEYSER
Collegian

Cunningham hit three of his first four shots, and K-State preserved a narrow lead through most of the first half.

"We felt pretty good at halftime," senior Ron Lucas said. "We didn't shoot the ball well in the first half, and we thought that would turn around."

It did, but not for K-State.

After hitting 42.3 percent of their shots from the field in the first half, the Commodores punched up their offensive production to 50 percent in the second.

But K-State guard Anthony Beane hit a couple NBA-range 3-pointers in the second half to keep the Wildcats within striking distance.

Overall, though, Beane hit only five of 14 shots, including one of seven in the first half.

"They started driving the ball more, and we kept fouling and sending them to the line," Beane said. "They gave us opportunities. We just didn't play defense."

And midway through the second half, K-State gave up eight points on three plays, and Vanderbilt never looked back from there.

K-State will play Siena in the third-place game today at 5:45 p.m. CST against Siena, which lost 66-58 to Villanova.

"I'm disappointed, I'm not going to lie to you," Cunningham said. "I'm sure the team will be ready — I'm planning on going out my senior year on a winning note."

"But I sure had plans to be playing in the championship game."

PREVIEW

Siena will be final foe for K-State

SCOTT ABEL

Collegian

NEW YORK — Because of its first-round loss to Vanderbilt Monday night, K-State will play its last game of the 1993-94 season tonight.

The Wildcats will grapple with the Siena Saints for third place in the National Invitation Tournament at 5:45 p.m. CST.

And playing a consolation game in what many people consider a consolation tournament isn't exactly setting the Wildcats afire.

"I guess we don't have a choice, do we?" senior Ron Lucas said.

"Then we'll play for third place."

"No, I want another shot," Askia Jones said.

"Another chance at a victory."

K-State's last chance this season will come against the Saints.

Despite a 66-58 loss to Villanova in the semis, Siena (24-8) and its fans are still enjoying one of their best seasons ever.

Even though the university in Loudonville, New York, only has a little more than 2,000 students, the Saints brought 100 chartered buses to New York for the NIT.

During the K-State/Vanderbilt game, Madison Square Garden was 80 percent empty, but it gradually filled as 14,000 raucous green-and-yellow Saint fans filed in to await their team to take the court.

"Our success has brought an enthusiasm to Albany that I never thought we would be able to do," said Doremus Bennerman, Siena's leading scorer this season.

"This is something that we'll all remember for the rest of our lives."

"I just wish that we could have come out with the W."

For K-State's seniors, it's the last chance.

"It's disappointing," Jones said.

"I wanted to go out with a championship. I guess I'll have to settle for a win."

NIT SEMIFINALS

Cats' defense disappears in loss to Commodores

SCOTT ABEL

Collegian

NEW YORK — Just when the Wildcats needed it most, the bread and butter of K-State's success suddenly vanished.

And no, it wasn't Askia Jones.

While the four-for-11 shooting night of Jones grabbed most of the attention at the National Invitation Tournament, the real culprit of K-State's loss to Vanderbilt was really due to another high-profile disappearing act — the Wildcat defense.

"I think the score speaks for itself," senior forward Ron Lucas said. "If a team gets its average against us, it usually beats us."

And Vanderbilt did that, and more.

The Commodores entered the game with a 78.9 points-per-game scoring average, but they tacked an 82-76 loss onto the Wildcats, including a 50-point hammering in the second half.

"It's a difficult loss for our basketball team," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "We just gave up too many points for us to win. They played well offensively, but they're a good shooting team. Our movement wasn't very good."

"We didn't take them out of their offense like we thought we would, or could."

The Wildcat defense did the job early in the game, forcing the Commodores into two early turnovers and two rushed shot attempts as the shot clock ran out.

But K-State never did clamp down, and the Cats ended up trailing by three, 32-29, after allowing a layup by Vanderbilt forward Chad Sheron to end the first half.

The Commodores then ran wild in the early part of the second half.

Vanderbilt's Ronnie McMahan hit a driving layup to tie the game, and center Chris Lawson completed a three-point play after being fouled by Deryl Cunningham.

McMahan was then fouled on a jumper for another three-point play, and K-State was back on its heels the rest of the way.

"We were a step late on defense all night," Cunningham said. "Lawson got points on me underneath, and then they'd kick it out to the perimeter. Then, it seemed like our wing players were a step slow."

McMahan finished with 27 points, while Vanderbilt's leading scorer, Billy McCaffrey, had 28, including a 10-for-10 performance from the free-throw line, which sealed the Commodore win.

Lawson added 17 points, and his active play under the basket caused Cunningham to foul out for only the third time this season.

"He's a big guy, a hard banger inside," Cunningham said. "All year, I've been trying to get it done inside, but he was extremely hard to front. I got fatigued down the stretch fighting with him."

And for the Wildcat defense, the math becomes incontrovertible. K-State is 17-4 this season when holding opponents to 70 points or less. When a team breaks the 70-point barrier, the Cats are 3-9.

"We scored enough points," Jones said. "It was our defense that was the problem. We needed to take more charges, be more aggressive. We weren't."

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Ron Lucas applies defensive pressure to Vanderbilt's Dan Hall in the semifinal game of the NIT Monday. K-State will play Siena for third place on Wednesday.

Injuries, sickness force Cats to shift priorities

CRAIG PINKERTON

Collegian

At the beginning of the season, everything looked bright for the K-State women's tennis team.

The team featured the then-20th-ranked player in the nation and one of the top doubles teams in the country. Soon after the start of the season, the team was also looking at its first-ever national ranking.

Now, the netters are having to deal with the loss of Karina Kuregian, K-State's top singles player and half of the team's top doubles combination.

Kuregian is out, possibly for the rest of the season, with a back injury.

"I'm very, very disappointed that this has happened to me this year," Kuregian said. "I was looking forward to playing in Athens, Ga., at the NCAAs."

The squad also has lost its No. 3 and 4 players, Alex Thome and Karen Nicholson, who are both out indefinitely because of illnesses.

Having to deal with the loss of three of the team's top four players has caused Coach Steve Bietau to shift some of the priorities he had set for the team.

"We are not going to worry about the team results as we would normally," Bietau said. "We will concentrate more on developing and getting better."

The younger players are gaining valuable playing experience, Kuregian said.

"Many of the girls are improving a lot. Karen Nicholson and Nicole (Lagerstrom) are both improving a lot," Kuregian said. "I think that they will do much better next year when they get more experience."

Despite having to play without Kuregian, Thome and Nicholson, the netters still expect to do well in tournaments but also realize things aren't the same.

"It's important to have high expectations, but it also has to be tempered with some realism," Bietau said. "To think that we are the same without those two is not being realistic."

One thing that hasn't changed for the netters is their focus on improving.

"We have six people. Any improvements we can make anywhere up or down the line is going to be good. But, that is no different than it was before. It is safe to say that we are being tested," Bietau said.

Several players have stepped up for K-State and are getting the opportunity to play against a higher level of competition.

One of those players is Masha Meidell, who has stepped from the No. 2 position into the top spot. Meidell's record since assuming the No. 1 position is 4-2.

"She's been doing well playing No. 1," he said. "She knows what she needs to do and is developing the confidence to do it all of the time."

One player who was out because of an illness earlier this season and has made a strong return is Lagerstrom. Lagerstrom made a return to singles action against Creighton with a victory.

"Nikki Lagerstrom is coming around nicely," he said. "She was out for three weeks, and from the first match when she has come back, she has played better than she did before."

Brooke Brundige is another player who has improved as the season has progressed. The junior from Kansas City, Mo., has picked up a pair of wins so far this spring and is continuing to improve.

"Brooke has been a real plus for this team," Bietau said. "She's had a great attitude, and she has made herself more competitive as the season has gone on."

The netters will have to turn their focus to their Big Eight Conference opponents as they begin their conference season March 31 against Missouri.

"We haven't thought much about the conference — we have just been trying to do the best we can today," Bietau said.

NCAA TOURNAMENT

Former K-State coach propels Florida Gators to 1st Final Four appearance in school history

NICOLE POELL

Collegian

Although K-State isn't playing in the NCAA Final Four this year, there will be a Kansas connection in Charlotte for Wildcat fans to keep an eye on.

Former K-State basketball player and coach Lon Kruger leads Florida against the Duke Blue Devils Saturday as his Gators make their first appearance in the Final Four.

Kruger

It's also Kruger's first berth in the Final Four, as he previously guided K-State to the Elite Eight in 1988.

Kruger, a native of Silver Lake, played the guard position for K-State during the 1971-74 seasons as the Cats won back-to-back Big Eight Championships in 1972 and 1973.

Replacing former coach Jack Hartman in 1986, Kruger is the only coach to lead the Cats to four straight NCAA Tournaments.

The Cats' 1987-88 Elite Eight squad was Kruger's most successful, advancing to the Midwest Regional championship game in Pontiac, Mich., before losing to the eventual national champion — Kansas.

K-State ended the 1989-90 regular season fourth in the Big Eight when Florida came calling for Kruger.

Coming off a dismal 1989-90 season that saw the Gators finish 7-21 overall and 3-15 in Southeastern Conference play, Florida made Kruger an offer he couldn't refuse, K-State assistant basketball coach

Greg Gensing said.

"He would be able to recruit players from a much broader base down there," Gensing said. "There are just so many more Division-I players available in Florida. He couldn't pass up the opportunity."

In just his fourth year as coach at Florida, Kruger has helped get the basketball program back on its feet.

In his first season at Gainesville, the Gators went 11-17, and since then, Florida has made two consecutive appearances in the National Invitation Tournament, making the NIT Final Four in 1992.

Kruger's efforts earned him SEC Coach of the Year honors in 1992 from both the Associated Press and league coaches.

This year's squad finished the regular season as the winningest team in the 75-year history of Florida basketball, going 29-7 overall and claiming the Eastern Division co-champion title with Kentucky.

It was another first in school history as the Gators were ranked in the final Associated Press poll, holding the No. 14 spot.

Kruger gained national attention this year as he was named the 1994 SEC Coach of the Year and was one of 12 finalists for the '94 Naismith National Collegiate Coach of the Year Award.

This year is the fourth time Florida has played in the NCAA Tournament, which also earned berths in 1987, '88 and '89. In this year's tournament play, the Gators downed James Madison, Pennsylvania, Connecticut and Boston College to head into this weekend's showdown with Duke.

Joel Glass, Florida's basketball sports information director, said Gainesville is going crazy over Kruger and the Gators.

"People here are just euphoric," he said. "There were over 5,000 fans out at the airport Sunday night when the team got home. It's just been great."

Florida's assistant sports information director, Mike Happe, said Kruger has finally garnered some respect for the basketball program.

"This is a big football town, but support for the basketball team has grown each year since Kruger's arrival," he said.

Bob Chipman, Coach at Washburn and one of Kruger's teammates at K-State, said the Florida coach has a competitive spirit.

"He is pretty difficult to beat at anything," Chipman said. "He is just naturally good at most things. Pool, bowling, you name it. He works hard and is a fairly gifted athlete. We all knew back then he would be a coach."

Jones makes last home game one for record books

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Askia Jones walked out to a standing ovation in his last home game.

But the contest with Fresno State in the quarterfinals of the National Invitation Tournament was already over and had been for nearly five minutes.

The crowd wanted one more look at the Big Eight's new record holder for the most points scored in one game.

Jones captivated fans and spectators across the country when he scored 62 points — more than any player in the nation this year — in the Wildcats' 115-77 win at home last Thursday.

"That was one heck of a shooting performance," Coach Dana Altman said. "Guarded, unguarded — it didn't matter — he knocked it down."

The senior from San Antonio eclipsed Wayman Tisdale's Big Eight single-game record of 61 points set in 1983.

The win boosted the Cats, 20-12 overall, into the semifinals against Vanderbilt Monday at New York's Madison Square Garden.

"Jones was incredible," Fresno State's Brandon Blake said. "I have never seen anyone play like that before. It was the night of his life."

After scoring only eight points combined in the last two games of the regular season, Jones broke loose, hitting 14 three-pointers to tie an NCAA Division-I record.

"Everyone was quick to jump on him when he had a six-point performance against Iowa State and a two-point performance against Kansas," Altman said. "I wanted him to end his career here with his head up."

Jones was 18 for 25 from the floor and 12 for 16 from the free-throw line.

"Yeah, I saw that once — on Michael Jordan's 'Come Fly With Me' video," Deryl Cunningham said.

"I was just sitting on the bench, tripping on all of the shots he was making."

The Wildcats scored 70 points in the second period, breaking a school record. K-State enjoyed a 45-26 lead at halftime, but after Jones got hot, the Cats took a 78-48 lead with 12:35 to play.

"Just being in a zone is a great feeling. I'm still in it," Jones said following his performance. "I'd like to thank my teammates for some good screens that got me open. A lot of them sacrificed their shots to look for me."

"It's a great feeling to break the record, but more importantly, we are going to New York."

Jones, who had been pulled by Altman, re-entered with about nine minutes left and hit a foul shot and three more treys before being pulled again. With 2:20 left, Altman put him back in, and the Fresno State assistant coaches raised their hands and looked at Altman, as if to ask "why?"

The Wildcats were beating the Bulldogs 105-72, and Jones already had 57 points.

Altman looked back at them and said, "He's going after a record."

Jones broke the league single-game scoring record with one minute left, dribbling behind his back and driving into the lane for a jumper to give the Cats a 110-73 lead.

"The reason I put him back in the game was because he's been here for five years, and he's had four surgeries," Altman said.

Fresno State assistant coach Charles Fisher was annoyed when Jones came back on the floor.

"Of course it bothered me," he said. "I understand Dana putting him back in ... but, of course, if you're on my end, you're not going to like it very much."

Jones scored 45 of his 62 points in the second half, including seven straight three-pointers.

"He had the night that every basketball player dreams of," Blake said.

NATIONAL INVITATIONAL TOURNAMENT

Through 3 rounds: Wildcats 3, Bulldogs 0

K-State posts wins against 3 teams, all called the Bulldogs, to make semifinals

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

The road to the National Invitation Tournament Final Four was not very bumpy for the K-State Wildcats.

In three games on the way to Madison Square Garden in New York, the Cats handled two opponents easily and played strong against a third.

Also, K-State's Askia Jones set multiple records with a 62-point shooting spree in the game against Fresno State, leading the Cats in the 115-77 victory.

Jones hit the most points by an individual in the NCAA this season, and he set the Big Eight single-game scoring record with his 62 points.

K-State's first-round opponent was the Mississippi State Bulldogs. The Cats trounced the Dogs, 78-67, in front of a crowd of 2,690 fans.

Those fans created more noise during the game than many of the 10,000- and 12,000-person crowds did but still set a record for the lowest attendance ever in Bramlage Coliseum.

After a long season, and many close losses, Coach Dana Altman said he was pleased with the way his team played.

"Our guys played awfully well tonight," Altman said. "We had a lot of success offensively. It did turn into some fun."

Altman was not the only one to say the game became fun. The players also said they were enjoying themselves.

"One of the things we had in mind was to have fun," Ron Lucas said. "We were comfortable and we played hard."

Deryl Cunningham agreed with Lucas' assessment of the game and the preparation leading up to it.

"We really had a good week of practice," Cunningham said. "It was probably the most fun week we had all year. Coach let us have some fun so we played hard and executed."

What seemed to mark the change for the team was the shooting show it had. The Cats hit 32 of 61 shots for a 52.5 shooting percentage for the game. The problems the team had experienced in making the ball fall through the hoop were forgotten for the evening.

"You need something good to happen sometimes," Altman said after the game. "We just needed something good to happen tonight."

The team has played all season with a lot of heart, but since the NIT began, the offense has been working better.

"There is a looseness there, a crispness there that comes with a little confidence in your teammates," Altman said. "It's just more fun when things are going well."

K-State's scoring slowed down during its second-round NIT game against Gonzaga, but the Cats still managed to win. The Cats won the game 66-64 after a difficult battle.

The Cats led by one point with 1:30 remaining in the game. Demond Davis then hit a free throw to give K-State a two-point advantage.

With about 10 seconds left in regulation, Anthony Beane shot a three-point basket and missed, but Jones got the long rebound and was fouled. With just 4.9 seconds remaining, Jones sank two free throws to preserve the win.

"That was one good thing about the three-point shot, it was a long rebound," Altman said.

While the Cats did get the win, Altman said Gonzaga was a solid club.

"They are as disciplined a team as we've played all year," Altman said. "All those five-year seniors they have, they are well coached and well disciplined on the offensive end."

After the game against Gonzaga, most of the team and many of the fans watched the Fresno State-BYU game on ESPN and rooted for Fresno State. If BYU had won in the second round, the Cats would have had to travel to Provo, Utah, to face the Cougars.

Instead, with the Fresno State win, K-State was given home-court advantage for the third time during the NIT.

K-State took advantage of the home field to put on a shooting display beyond anything done by the Cats this season.

Led by Jones' 62 points, K-State broke the century mark for the second time this season.

"The NIT has been very good for us," Altman said. "The NIT is good for basketball. The NIT has given us an opportunity to play."

K-State's Stanley Hamilton fronts Fresno State's Ted Bull during the Wildcats' quarterfinal win against the Bulldogs. The victory sent the Cats into the semifinals against Vanderbilt.

ON THE ROAD FROM BRAMLAGE TO NEW YORK

First round: K-State beat Mississippi State 78-67 at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State shot 52.5 percent from the field against the Bulldogs, who led the Southeastern Conference in field-goal percentage defense. Askia Jones paced the Cats with 20 points. Deryl Cunningham scored 16, and Anthony Beane added 13.

Second Round: The Cats downed Gonzaga 66-64 at Bramlage. The lead changed hands eight times in the second period. The Cats took the lead for good when Demond Davis connected on a three-point play with 1:30 left. Jones led K-State with 22 points.

The Cats played all three rounds at home.

Third round: K-State 115, Fresno State 77. Jones scored a Big Eight record 62 points, eclipsing Wayman Tisdale's 61 points in 1983. Jones also hit 14 three-pointers, tying a Division I record. Beane scored 15 points and had 10 assists. Walk-on Ben Warta hit a three-pointer with about one second left, giving K-State 115 points and tying its best output ever. The Wildcats also scored 115 points against K-State's berth in the NIT semifinals is the best by any Wildcat team in the post-season tournament.

The Wildcats' three-straight wins followed a four-game losing skid to end the regular season.

This season's NIT bid for the Cats marks their 25th post-season tournament in school history.

Cats split with Hawks

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Even though the K-State baseball team only won a single game in five contests over spring break, the one victory was important — an 8-5 win against intrastate rival Kansas last Wednesday at Frank Myers Field.

The second game of the series didn't start so promising as the Jayhawks, who had their 14-game winning streak snapped, scored three runs in the first inning off Wildcat Shane Hicks.

K-State (10-17, 1-3 in the Big Eight Conference) got a run in the first inning, then batted around in the third inning and scored six runs.

Coach Mike Clark said everything went the right way for his team in the bottom of the third.

"In our big inning, we executed well and were able to move runners," Clark said. "We put together quality at-bats to allow us to have a big inning."

The big hits of the inning were Mike Gardner's two-run single up the middle and Chris Hess' two-run double down the right-field line.

Kansas fired back in the eighth inning. The bases were loaded, but the Hawks didn't score any runs as David Johnson struck out Clint Wilmot and forced Clint Hardesty to ground into a double play.

Kansas rocked K-State in the first game on Tuesday with three home runs and six doubles for a 15-5 win.

K-State traveled to the Metrodome in Minneapolis to play the Minnesota Golden Gophers, and the Cats were swept in three games, 10-4 last Friday and Saturday and 4-1 on Sunday.

Even though Minnesota's record jumped only to 10-9 with the sweep, Clark said the Gophers are a good squad.

"They are a very experienced club. They have a ton of fifth-year seniors," he said.

"They will probably win or finish second in the Big Ten."

K-State jumped to a 1-0 lead in the first inning on Sunday on a single and stolen base by center fielder Adam Green. Green then scored on a single from designated hitter Matt Miller.

The Golden Gophers got a run in the second inning and took the lead when center fielder Wes Denning led off the fifth with a double. Denning scored on a single by catcher Darren Grass off Oiseth.

Minnesota sent 11 batters to the plate with two outs in the bottom of the fifth inning for five runs as the Gophers beat the Cats 10-4 in the first game on Friday.

The Wildcats took a 2-0 lead in the first inning before Minnesota came back with four runs in the second inning.

The Cats started the second game of the series with a solo home run by Hendrix into the right field upper deck of the Metrodome.

Minnesota came back with three runs in the third inning from starting pitcher Eric Yanz. The Cats regained the lead in the fourth with three runs to take a 4-3 advantage.

The Gophers fired back with a run in the fifth and three runs in the sixth.

K-State plays a three-game series at Iowa State starting on Friday, and then comes back to Frank Myers for a contest with Creighton on Tuesday.

The K-State women's golf team entered the spring season looking to make improvements from its fall performance.

To make advancement on their games during the winter months, the team spent its time practicing in Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

This allowed the players to work on improving their game while the cold temperatures and snow-covered ground prevented them from playing outdoors. "I think the girls really worked hard during the off season," Coach Jim Brenneman said.

It appears the off season practice has paid off for the Wildcats.

The team recently started the spring season by finishing in fifth place after rounds of 321 and 325 at the University of North Texas/Southern Methodist University Invitational.

The tournament was played at Oakmont Country Club in Denton, Texas.

"I was happy with the way we played. It was our best tournament of the year," Brenneman said.

"This was our first tournament of the spring, and the other teams had all played three or four already."

Jacque Wright led the Cats individually with rounds of 76 and 74 to finish tied for second, three shots behind the winner.

The K-State track team will return to Manhattan for the first time in six weeks.

The events will begin Friday at R.V. Christian Track with the KSU Heptathlon/Decathlon and conclude Saturday with the KSU Invitational.

K-State journeyed to Texas A&M March 19 for the College Station Relays and to Arizona March 26 for the Arizona Shoot-out.

The College Station Relays proved to be the most productive as Dante McGrew, Nicole Green and Kristen Schultz all surpassed qualifying marks in their events.

McGrew leaped past the qualifying mark in the triple jump with a jump of 52 feet, 4 inches.

The jumped marked the second-straight year McGrew has eclipsed the provisional qualifying mark in the event.

"I think I can do better, but I am happy with the mark right now," McGrew said.

Green continued to run well after her all-American 400-meter performance at the NCAA Indoor Championships in Indianapolis.

However, it was the 200 meters in which Green passed the provisional mark with a time of 23 minutes, 82 seconds, running past the provisional mark of 23.85.

"The sprinters got to run several events, which helped with conditioning," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Sophomore Kristen Schultz bettered the qualifying mark in the javelin of 152' 6-1/2" with a throw of 160' 5", earning her first place.

Schultz is the defending Big Eight champion in the event. She also competes in the discus and shot put.

Teammate Shannon Flanagan placed first ahead of Schultz at the Arizona meet with a heave of 45' 4-1/4". Schultz finished second in the event with a throw of 45' 1-1/4".

Schultz' winning throw in the javelin improved on her personal best by 6'.

Chris Pryor gathered a pair of second-place finishes at the Arizona Shoot-out in the 200 and 400 meters.

Building a proactive government is the hope of the latest pair to announce its candidacy for student body president and vice president.

Michelle Smith, junior in political science, and Patrick Robben, junior in political science, announced their candidacy late Wednesday morning.

"We shouldn't be a reactive government, but a proactive one," Smith said.

A proactive government involves communication between students and the government. This communication factor has become the rhetoric of many candidates, Robben said.

"Students have been hearing all these sugar-coated stories about how candidates want to listen to them," Robben said.

Smith said they are definitely willing to listen to students but that "it's kind of a given — that's what we're elected for."

Their main concern is the issues, they said.

"We have two or three important issues that we're dead sure we're going to get accomplished," Robben said.

One of the first issues they would like to address in reaching their goal of proactive government is Student Senate's fiscal responsibility, Smith said.

One of their ideas would be to implement an outside watchdog group to look over Student Senate's shoulder, since Senate seems to have a hard time minding the cookie jar itself, Smith said.

Farrell Library is another concern, Robben said.

"Farrell is one of our biggest priorities," he said. "There's been so much hoopla about the recon-

Duo promises '12 steps'

Two new candidates for student body president and vice president announced their 12 steps to recovery for K-State at Christopher O'Bryan's Pub and Grill on Wednesday night.

Ben Eastep, senior in agricultural economics, and Taylor Miller, senior in finance, said they are not like other candidates who K-State students have seen in past elections.

"Our goal is not to impress everyone with our credentials because that's been tried before and hasn't worked," Miller said. "We want to show people that you're not going to live forever, so why try?"

This attitude is reflected in the duo's platform, which consists of 12 actions they would take if elected, Miller said. The first step to recovery is to build a petting zoo (with a monkey island) in front of Waters Hall. Another is to solve parking woes on campus.

"The ultimate solution to the parking problem is to build a gondola from the parking lot at Bramlage Coliseum to the Union and to Aggieville," Eastep said. "We want to handle the parking problem with class."

Funding for the gondola project would come from the revenue of step three, which is to allow beer and tobacco sales in the Union, Eastep said.

Also included in the the campaign platform are plans to replace the K-State Police with an adult novelty shop featuring live performances, Miller said.

"We want to run a campaign where people don't have to accept straight-laced, tight people who usually win," Miller said. "That's not what we're about."

Eastep said another major step in the platform is to construct a drag-racing strip in front of the president's home.

"We know the fans at K-State would love it (the drag-strip),"

Fort Riley reviewed for closing; Dole optimistic of post's future

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

A federal commission is reviewing Fort Riley and other bases for closing, but Kansans refuse to give up the base without a fight.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., said he is optimistic that Fort Riley will not be closed when he spoke at a Kansans for a Strong Fort Riley banquet on the base Wednesday night.

Dole, along with Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., Gov. Joan Finney, Maj. Gen. Joe Robles, commander of the 1st infantry division stationed at Fort Riley, and Harlan Pridle, director of Junction City Economic Development, spoke to about 100 military personnel and community members at the banquet in an attempt to rally support for the fort.

"The soldiers' performance has been magnificent," Dole said. "Considering the long proud history of the Big Red One, it is hard to believe they are at risk, but they are."

A federal commission has begun the 15-month process of reviewing all military bases. The commission will look at downsizing the military from 12 to 10 divisions. This could mean the closing of Fort Riley.

Dole and Kassebaum said they would work to get more money added back into the military budget.

Dole said the military budget shouldn't be sacrificed to fund social programs.

Dole said the base closings have not saved the taxpayers any money yet. There are up-front costs to close bases, and savings won't be seen for years, he said.

"If we are going to waste money, we should spend it to secure the liberty, freedom and future of America," Dole said.

Kassebaum said the military loses valuable training grounds when it closes a base.

"Once you cut Fort Riley, it is something that cannot be brought back," she said.

Dole said that the military is being downsized too quickly. President Bush cut $60 billion from the defense budget, and President Clinton wants to cut another $127 billion.

He said the military needs to be maintained for the security of the nation, and the military

Education proposal sent to faculty

AMY ZIEGLER

The fate of the general education proposal now rests in the hands of the Faculty Senate.

Academic Affairs decided in the second open hearing Tuesday to send the entire proposal on to Faculty Senate for consideration.

The subcommittee of Faculty Senate made recommendations and minor changes in the meeting at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in Union 209.

The proposal will be debated in Faculty Senate in two weeks if it is approved as an item on the agenda.

"It's good to get it to the Senate in April so they will have a few months to think about it."

"The Senate will then have the opportunity to pass it in May," Bill Schapaugh, chair of Academic Affairs and professor of agronomy, said.

General education could be on the road to implementation or rejection with the outcome of Faculty Senate's vote.

"They can accept, reject or modify the proposal or send it back to committee," he said.

Schapaugh said the proposal is long and detailed and will take time to go through and evaluate.

Academic Affairs examined the proposal at length and expects many questions and concerns to be raised by the senators.

"This proposal will be hotly debated in Senate, and I'm sure all the issues we talked about will be debated again," Schapaugh said.

The committee focused on obtaining the money needed to fund the implementation.

Provost Jim Coffman came to the meeting to discuss the financial aspect of the proposal.

He said $250,000 will be given for the implementation of the general education program if the proposal gets passed by the Senate.

Coffman, as well as other committee members, expressed the concern that once the policy is in place, not enough money will be available to support the demands of the program.

"I'm afraid that we'll approve this and then fall on our face because we don't have enough resources."

Ann Coulson, assistant professor of human development and family studies and Academic Affairs member, shares the Provost's concern.

"I'm behind it all the way, but it's going to take dollars.

"We might go forward and not get enough money to make it happen because we're stretched so tight already," she said.

The committee also decided to allow each college to be represented on the implementation task force.

The task force is designed to research and review the courses to be used in the general education curriculum.

The task force will be appointed directly after the approval from the Faculty Senate and will work through the summer and next school year on the program.

"They will be involved in getting this off the ground. The task force is in place to relieve the workload of Academic Affairs and provide guidance and recommendations," Schapaugh said.

► FORMER STUDENT KILLED IN CRASH

A former K-State student died in a one-vehicle accident Tuesday night.

Paige Neumann, 23, of Overland Park, was traveling on Kansas Highway 18 when the accident occurred, Riley County Police Department reports said.

Neumann's car ran off the road about six miles from Manhattan and overturned. She was ejected from the car and pinned beneath it.

Police responded to a call at 5:45 p.m. Emergency personnel managed to remove Neumann from under the car.

She was transported by helicopter to the Saint Mary Hospital in Manhattan. She was pronounced dead at 6:34 p.m. by Marc James, doctor of head trauma.

The RCPD is still investigating the cause of the accident, but the report said there is no indication that Neumann was wearing a seatbelt.

Neumann attended K-State as a sophomore in 1991.

► STUDENT PUBLICATIONS STAFF HIRED

On Wednesday, the Board of Student Publications hired four people for summer and fall 1994 staff positions.

Trey Johnson, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, was hired as summer editor of the Collegian. Johnson, currently the sports editor, is a native of Baltimore.

Todd Fleischer, senior in marketing, was hired as Royal Purple yearbook editor for the 1994-95 school year. Fleischer is a native of Topeka.

Jim Stothard, senior in advertising and marketing, was hired for the position of summer ad manager for the Collegian. Stothard is a native of Olathe.

Ryndell Little, junior in advertising and public relations, was hired for the position of fall ad manager for the Collegian. Little, currently the ad manager, is a native of Leavenworth.

The fall 1994 Collegian editor will be chosen after interviews are conducted on Monday.

CRITICIZED AUTHOR DIES OF HEART ATTACK AT 66

NEW YORK—Albert Goldman, whose pitiless biographies of Elvis Presley and John Lennon infuriated fans and many critics, died of a heart attack at 66.

Goldman, who lived in New York, died Monday as he traveled from Miami to London.

"My books are a cold dose of reality," he said in 1988.

In "Elvis," published in 1981, Goldman depicted Presley as a drugged, perverted and gluttonous man of questionable talent.

While some critics liked the book, particularly for its vivid portrayal of Presley manager Tom Parker, others had the same view of Goldman's talent as Goldman had of Presley's.

Rock critic Dave Marsh, who has written several books, including the text for a picture book on Presley, called Goldman's book "the work of a man who hated Southerners, blacks, women and anybody else who wasn't exactly like him."

Such criticism and the anger of Elvis fans didn't prevent the book from becoming a best seller.

In 1988, Goldman took an equally unflattering look at Lennon that suggested the former Beatle committed a murder in his youth. "The Lives of John Lennon" received mostly negative reviews.

Goldman said he had started work on the book with a positive opinion of Lennon. He said he concluded after much research that "it doesn't pay to meet your idols."

CLINTON SIGNS GOVERNMENT BUYOUT LEGISLATION

CORONADO, Calif. — President Clinton signed legislation Wednesday allowing the government to offer its workers buyouts of up to $25,000 if they resign or retire.

The new law is part of an effort to pare the federal work force by nearly 12 percent over five years.

"After all the rhetoric about cutting the size and cost of government, our administration has done the hard work and made the tough choices," Clinton said in a statement.

The law should reduce federal employment by 272,900 by the end of fiscal 1999, dropping the size of the federal bureaucracy below 2 million for the first time since 1966 and to its lowest level since 1950.

Clinton signed the legislation while vacationing in Southern California.

"Agencies need the cost-effective incentives provided in this bill in order to avoid excessive reductions in force that are costly, disruptive and disproportionately strike younger workers, many of whom are recently hired women and minorities," Clinton said. "With the 'buyout' authority granted by this legislation, agencies can target employees in unnecessary high-level jobs and maximize savings."

REYNOLDS FALLS ILL ON SET OF 'EVENING SHADE'

LOS ANGELES—Actor Burt Reynolds fell ill on the "Evening Shade" TV set Wednesday and was taken by paramedics to a hospital.

The actor was taken to North Hollywood Medical Center about 9:20 a.m., Bob Collis of the city Fire Department, said. Collis said the problem was described as chest pains, but a representative for the actor described it as dizziness and nausea.

Reynolds, 57, was conscious and undergoing tests, hospital spokeswoman Tricia Spellman said.

On the Studio City set of his CBS series, Reynolds complained he was dizzy and nauseated, Reynolds' publicist Joe Sutton said.

"It could be a 24-hour virus. Reynolds is prone to or stress that Reynolds has acknowledged in his life over the past year," Sutton said. He gave no other details.

TEXAS ENGINEERS TO HALT DUMPING

HARLINGEN, Texas — The Army Corps of Engineers agreed to stop dredging and dumping sand, sludge and mud along a 120-mile stretch of the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway and study alternatives to clear the way for barge traffic.

The decision Wednesday came after Gov. Ann Richards wrote to the Corps saying she was concerned about open-bay dumping.

Environmentalists called it an important, although temporary, victory in their fight against the practice of dumping the material into the vast, shallow lagoon in the Laguna Madre. The waterway extends from Corpus Christi to the border town of Brownsville.

SUB ACCIDENT KILLS 10 FRENCH SAILORS

PARIS — Ten French sailors died in an accident aboard a submerged nuclear-powered attack submarine off Toulon, the Defense Ministry said Wednesday.

The ministry said all the deaths occurred in the Emeraude's turbo alternator compartment, where two steam-powered turbines produce electricity.

The accident did not affect the submarine's nuclear equipment and "in no way puts into question either the nuclear security of the vessel or the environment," said a ministry representative, whose name could not be used under French rules.

Officials gave no other details on the accident aboard the Emeraude.

Riley County's extensive and well-hidden baseball history was brought into the center field Wednesday afternoon during a discussion highlighting the olden days of baseball at the Riley County Historical Museum.

Baseball fans and former players reminisced about the old days of America's national pastime during a discussion called "Baseball and Sports, the Way They Used to Be."

The discussion covered the sport from the turn of the 20th century until the beginning of World War II.

It was a time when baseball was much simpler, Glenn Anderson, former catcher and manager for the Leonardville team, said.

"When I was a kid, we didn't have much organization as far as choosing teams," he said. "And we didn't have uniforms."

Transportation was also an unorganized matter.

"We used to beg our fathers for a ride to the field," Anderson said. "One time, we pulled our whole team to the field in a trailer."

Many changes occurred in the technology of the equipment.

In the 1930s, players were still wearing steel-cleat shoes and played with gloves that had only three finger holes and one thumb hole, Charles Setterquist, former first baseman for the Leonardville team, said.

Baseball and softball were a part of small-town residents' lives, Bud Stewart, former first baseman for Hartford and K-State, said.

"Weeknights were for softball, and Sundays were for baseball," he said. "That's the way it was for small towns."

Sunday games posed a moral dilemma for some players and spectators, Merlin Gustafson, former pitcher for Leonardville, said.

"I usually tried to go to church every Sunday," he said. "One time, the preacher taught a sermon against Sunday baseball."

"I couldn't keep my mind off the sermon that night, and we ended up losing."

Although Riley County was comprised of small teams whose players did not get paid, there were several major-league exhibition games in Manhattan, Anderson said.

"There was one held between New York and Detroit. Ty Cobb was playing for Detroit at that time. It was played right on the K-State campus."

Racial tensions were building at the time, and there were very many mixed teams. Most teams with African-American players were traveling teams, Anderson said.

Often, these teams had excellent players. One such team was the Brown Cubs, he said.

"I saw the only triple play I've ever seen when I was watching the Brown Cubs," Anderson said.

Local baseball teams and traveling teams ended with the outbreak of World War II, Setterquist said.

"It all came to a standstill at wartime," he said. "The traveling teams just never started up again."

Daily stress causes physical problems

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

You have four major exams next week, you still haven't filed your income taxes, and you may have to donate plasma in order to pay your utilities — you've reached your breaking point.

When people are this stressed, they may begin to feel not only the mental effects of stress, but also some of the physical symptoms.

Physical symptoms may include anything from back and neck pain to muscle tightness.

Dr. Nadar Kumar, a Manhattan neurologist, said the symptoms he most commonly sees as a result of stress are muscle-tension headaches, migraines and a tension around the jaw called Temporal Mandibular Joint Syndrome (TMJ).

Muscle-tension headaches are the most common effects of stress overload, Kumar said.

"The muscles around the scalp go into spasm, and it feels like someone has put a wide rubber band around your head and is pulling it very tightly," he said.

This headache can happen anytime of the day, but most commonly occurs in the late afternoon and evening because people have the entire day's stress built up in their heads, Kumar said.

People who have the headaches over a prolonged period of time may also develop insomnia, anxiety and depression.

"I have seen patients who have had the condition for several months at a time," Kumar said.

The first course of action against muscle-tension headaches should be to get some fresh air and pursue some low-stress activities, Kumar said.

"Often, all that is needed is a short vacation or some time to take it easy," he said.

Medication can also help cure the problem, Kumar said.

Migraines, another type of headache characterized by throbbing on one side of the head, are not caused by stress, but they can be irritated, worsened and become more frequent because of stress, Kumar said.

"Migraines are usually periodic — not an everyday thing — and, in most cases, there is family history of migraines," he said.

TMJ, although not very common, can occur as a result of stress.

"The person with TMJ will have tension and pain around the jaw area. It's another problem with muscle tightness," he said.

TMJ can usually be cured by wearing a brace around the neck and jaw area, Kumar said.

Dr. Mark Hatesohl, a Manhattan acupuncturist, is another doctor who deals with victims of stress.

Like Kumar, Hatesohl has several patients with muscle tightness around the neck and back, he said.

"Acupuncture is often helpful in dealing with these problems," he said.

It is effective in soothing the physical symptoms of stress because it increases blood flow to tense muscles and helps loosen them.

It also increases the circulation to the head and neck, he said.

Although the most widely known type of acupuncture is done with pins and needles, Hatesohl said there are other kinds, too — none of which are very painful.

"We do use needles very often, and that feels kind of like a mosquito bite. There is also electrical current, in which the patient usually cannot feel anything. The last is finger pressure. That feels like a massage," Hatesohl said.

The best suggestion for someone who is experiencing mild stress-related pain is to get a good back rub, Hatesohl said.

"There are several acupuncture points in your back. Back rubs can really help," he said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Public housing tenants have rights, too

Citizens don't check their constitutional rights when they walk through a project's doors.

In Chicago, apparently the end justifies the means.

A new gang war in Chicago's Robert Taylor Homes high-rise public housing project has tenants and city and housing officials convinced that letting police search the project's apartments for guns, without search warrants, is a partial answer to ending the violence.

The Chicago Housing Authority was prompted to ask police to conduct random gun searches after last summer's violence in the city's housing projects.

The American Civil Liberties Union responded, on behalf of the 135,000 tenants, with a class-action lawsuit against the housing authority.

Then, last month, U.S. District Judge Wayne Andersen temporarily halted the searches and called the policy a "greater evil than the danger of criminal activity."

He's right. Citizens don't check their constitutional rights when they walk through a project's doors.

Although the gang warfare is forcing tenants to live in fear of being killed, the solution to the violence is not in denying citizens' constitutional rights.

Instead, city officials should face the problem by realizing what is needed is more enforcement, even if that means bringing in the National Guard. If the violence is so severe it is readily endangering lives, the city should immediately provide emergency shelter for tenants.

The residents of Robert Taylor Homes are entitled to their constitutional rights — not to being treated as second-class citizens.

Bypassing the Constitution for the sake of convenience is no way to solve the problem.

Honor people for what they do, not because they're entitled to it

There is nothing in the world like recognition.

Everyone craves it. Some deserve it. But those who deserve it don't always receive it.

I can't count the number of times I've heard, "He doesn't need this award (or scholarship, or promotion, or raise). He's doing great and has everything going for him. We'll give it to somebody else. It will really help their self-esteem."

People of ability and talent can live their lives without hearing a "great job." This happens in the same world in which "Ghost" was nominated for Best Picture.

This happens either because able people know or don't know just how good they are.

If they don't know, they get used and don't receive recognition. If they do know, they are passed off as arrogant egotists who don't need to receive recognition.

Frank Lloyd Wright was a prime example of this. He was probably one of the greatest architects who ever lived, not to mention a brilliant man in general. Wright once said, "I had to make a decision early in life between hypocritical humility or honest arrogance. I chose honest arrogance." What people failed to realize was that Wright had every reason to be arrogant and proud about what he did.

Brilliance often goes unrecognized, and this shows up in the most ironic places. In any mall bookstore, the canned pocket-sized volumes of Shelley, Keats and Shakespeare are kept a shelf away from the latest Harlequin Romances. The bookstore doesn't come out and say they are equal in quality. It lets customers make that decision. And the latest by Danielle Steel sells a lot faster than the latest by Dante.

Anyone can do a mediocre job, kiss up and be successful, if he or she has the right luck or style or connections. These are the people who are often promoted to CEO while the brains of the company are stuck in middle management.

This is not to say that this always happens and that nobody at the top deserves to be there. I have been successful, and I have earned my success. But this should be a hard and fast rule, especially in this country.

Everyone likes to hype about "what America was founded on." It's kind of a silly question. It was founded on the middle half of the North American continent. The nature of the concepts that made it great will always be debated.

But I would bet my college education that America wasn't founded by the kind of men who made decisions based on making people feel better or giving them fresh starts.

Something inside me has this nagging doubt that George Washington was the first president not because he was the best person for the job, but because he really needed the job.

Something gives me the crazy idea the Founding Fathers chose him because he was the best qualified. The country got the best man for the job, and Washington got recognized for the great leader he was. You see? The concept works.

And what of the people who don't get the jobs that they are underqualified for? What is left for them? Well, there's always middle management or writing government reports for a living. And if that is all they choose to make themselves qualified for, that is what they deserve.

Our society views the giving to the undeserved as a virtue. But it too often forgets the giving to the deserved. It's sort of like the old saying, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Too bad that without an equal number of people to receive, giving is pretty pointless. And it should be more blessed to give to people who are worthy than to people who are not.

Recognition or awards that are allegedly merit-based should be based on merit alone. The vital question should not be "Do they need it?" but "Have they earned it?"

Sometimes the only reward is intrinsic. If you know an unrecognized talent, you don't have to arrange for them to win a Nobel Prize. But it wouldn't hurt to give them a pat on the back.

SARA SMITH

Technology links world, drives people

For the last few years, I have had the pleasure and privilege of being a citizen of "Cyberspace," the world created by communication over the computer networks.

Like most buzzwords, this thing called the "Information Superhighway" has invaded all forms of mass communication.

You can hardly open a magazine or watch a TV newscast without hearing of how well we will be able to communicate when construction of the "Information Superhighway" is completed.

The most interesting thing about this phenomenon is that it pretty much already exists.

It may not be hard-wired into your home through cable television yet, but most of the features promised are currently available, free of charge, right here at K-State.

The Internet, a large "network of networks," links computer systems of colleges, businesses and governments around the world.

K-State is on this system, and getting access to the system is as easy as filling out a form in the basement of Fairchild Hall.

This account gives you the ability to talk with people around the world, download games and other software, and just about anything else you could imagine.

You can track legislation in Washington via the Library of Congress, send electronic mail to Bill Clinton or Rush Limbaugh or play games with people all over the world.

Newsgroups offer the ability to contribute to or just read discussions on virtually anything you could dream of, and if you can't find your niche, you can create your own newsgroup.

Want to vent frustration at Barney the Dinosaur? Then try alt.barney.dinosaur.die.die.die.

If you want to view collections of nude pictures, go to alt.binaries.pictures.erotica. The net isn't all so frivolous; serious topics on science, computing and politics also exist.

The net is not run by any specific organization; it is simply different networks mutually agreeing to open a link to each other, sometimes creating mass confusion.

With this almost instant communication now available, the net seems to be suffering from, to use another trendy buzzword, an "information explosion" — simply communication for the sake of communication.

We may be able to talk instantly to people as in Japan or Norway, but we are fast realizing we have nothing to say to each other.

The net is simply "The Next Big Thing" that everyone must have, joining home computers, exercise equipment, television, kitchen appliances and cars in the heap of things that plot to further complicate our lives.

I seem to remember seeing old films from the 1950s touting the virtues of all of these time-saving technologies, how we were only going to have to work 20 hours a week in the future, and robots were going to wait on us hand and foot.

It hasn't happened; in fact, the reverse has become true.

People have become enslaved by technology, working more hours a week than ever, to supposedly be able to afford the things that will make our life easier.

You can't win.

Now, don't think for a second that I want to join a commune or revert civilization back to the Middle Ages (heck, I'm having the time of my life), but look at the glut of information that now exists.

Every day in America, we are bombarded with signals that tell us how to dress, talk, worship and work.

If we think that each "TNBT" will bring us more happiness, then we are setting ourselves up for failure.

I led a relatively fulfilled life before the age of this "Information Superhighway," and I would like to think I could live without it, but there is an attraction to being able to send E-Mail to the president, even though I probably would never sit down and write him a regular letter.

I will talk and debate with people all night about philosophy, politics and religion, but I feel reluctant to do these things with people right in front of my face.

Is this new technology destroying our ability to have good relationships with those closest to us?

I wonder if the generations before us thought about the same thing each time something new came along — we all remember those front-porch "In my day" conversations with Grandpa.

Maybe Grandpa was right after all.

FRENCH

Jared, we don't speak perfect English, but at least we try

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to Jared Savage's column about the French.

After we read his column, we immediately felt that our French language and culture has indeed been savaged.

It seems that basic French is very difficult for some people — even after four semesters. "N'est pas?" does not exist. "N'est-ce pas?" does.

One can have trouble with "subjunctif," but certainly less with "subjunctif." Let's forget about "la Academie" for "l'Academie" and other things as we have no time to waste.

We know we don't speak wonderful English, but at least we try to be correct, because we respect the people we talk to. Criticism is easy, but art is difficult.

We also thought a senior in history should know the difference between a revolution for independence in a colony and a revolution to change power in a country. If the French revolution had been modeled after the American one, it would have failed because of its different nature and causes. But history is not the topic of this letter, even if more should be said.

A course in language history would show Jared that French existed before English and that it was the official language of Great Britain until the beginning of the 16th century.

English itself is made up of 50 percent French vocabulary — the other 50 percent is mainly Latin and Germanic.

The main difference between French and English is the fact that French generally has one word for one meaning while English uses combinations of the same word for different meanings.

Jared said French has about 100,000 words while English has more than 2 million. We think he should check his sources before he writes such misinformed statements.

English is the most commonly spoken language in the world not because of its characteristics but because of the dominance of the British Empire followed by post-World War II U.S. world dominance.

This is what has made it the international language. If the French Empire had been bigger, French would have been the first language in the world. Jared would be speaking perfect French if Napoleon had not sold Louisiana to the States. One rule in history is that the winner always imposes his language, however difficult it may be.

Regarding the subject of Jared's column, it looks like he didn't understand the will of the French Academy and French authorities. The French Academy was created centuries ago to record French language in a huge encyclopedia.

Those people try to preserve what makes French language original. In France, most people speak English but not all, especially the older generation.

For this reason, French authorities wish that each time an English expression is used in France — for instance on a sign — it should have a French equivalent next to it. We've never heard of a French citizen who went to jail because he asked for a "cheeseburger."

George Orwell's book "1984" condemned uniformism. Wouldn't it be uniformism if the minority should have to speak the language of the majority on Earth?

French is the third most commonly spoken language in the world. French is not English; it is a question of cultural identity.

Kassebaum says job future shaky

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., said health care, economy and the military are all interwoven in the uncertainty of the future.

Kassebaum spoke for Women's History Month, sponsored by the Union Program Council's Idea Committee, Tuesday in the K-State Union.

Kassebaum said the domestic agenda has been shaken up because of society. She said uncertainty of job security is more evident today than years ago.

"Job security for parents and grandparents is not here today," Kassebaum said. "There is uncertainty of what the future holds."

"We have to make clear how we regard our own rule," she said.

She said she places importance on a college education but that a job does not automatically follow.

People must be street smart to benefit from having a college education.

"Knowing when and how to be a participant is not always easy," Kassebaum said.

"A college education is most important, but it is not a ticket to a job."

She said she supports a universal-coverage health-care plan. Kassebaum said universal coverage simply means everyone would be covered under a plan.

She said people who have health-care insurance are paying for those who do not have insurance through cost shifting. People who have to be hospitalized and do not have insurance present a voucher and those who have insurance have to pick up some of the cost, Kassebaum said.

"I believe in universal coverage and a cut in cost shifting," Kassebaum said. "We're not going to do it through employers because it is not reliable. Like automobile insurance, you can have insurance on your car, and it can be taken off."

"We should allow choices of doctors and portability, but there is not going to be a vast basket of benefits."

She said she does not think the Whitewater issue has taken away any importance of the health-care issue, but she does think it has diminished some of the confidence of the people in the government.

"I think until we mark up and debate the point, we don't know where we're at," Kassebaum said.

"Whitewater has undermined the confidence level at this juncture."

Kassebaum said the government is spending a billion dollars in job training. She said she thinks it is a good idea, but the goals for it are unclear.

"What I'm worried about is we're not sure what we're training for," Kassebaum said.

"We need to think about where the jobs are."

Kassebaum said the 1995 budget for defense is $270 billion, a cut of $8 billion and a considerable down sizing of defense.

"In 1983, I was critical of rapid build up, and I am critical of rapid build down," Kassebaum said.

She said in the next few years, the 12 military bases will be cut to 10, and that is when Fort Riley will be in danger.

"I've always believed Fort Riley as being a strong military base," Kassebaum said. "It has always been active since the Civil War."

Kassebaum, who serves on the Committee on Foreign Relations, said the government and the people need to clarify the stance of foreign policy. She asked if national security should be the only guideline or whether the government be involved in humanitarian missions.

"Somalia was an important mission and was successful," Kassebaum said. "We may soon send 15,000 to 20,000 troops to Bosnia."

"Bosnia leaders said they will not sign a peace treaty if we don't commit troops. This is the risk we take in urging the peace treaty."

Illness claims life of former KSU math professor

NICOLE POELL
Collegian

A former math professor who taught at K-State for 32 years died Monday morning following an extended illness.

Leonard E. Fuller, 74, began his teaching career at the University of Wisconsin after earning his bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Wyoming.

He later earned his doctorate at Wisconsin, where he was a graduate assistant and instructor from 1946 to 1951.

Fuller worked as a mathematician for Goodyear Aircraft before arriving in Manhattan in 1952.

As a faculty member in the K-State mathematics department, Fuller taught as an assistant professor from 1952 to 1956, as an associate professor from 1956 to 1959 and as a full professor from 1959 until his retirement in 1984.

During the summer months from 1959 to 1974, Fuller directed summer institutes for high-school mathematics teachers through a grant from the National Science Foundation.

The program was designed to help prepare secondary-education math teachers for the more modern math systems.

Fuller wrote two books on matrix theory during his career, one of which has been translated into 16 languages.

Tom Muenzenberger, associate professor of mathematics, knew Fuller for 20 years and said he was grateful for Fuller's help as he began his career at K-State.

"Dr. Fuller supported me when I was a young faculty member, and I'll never forget that," Muenzenberger said.

"He and his wife were also strong supporters of the mathematics department, as they presented two Fuller Scholarships annually to undergrads studying math or math education," he said.

Fuller was also active in several civic organizations throughout Manhattan.

He was a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Manhattan, the Manhattan Kiwanis Club and was a past Distinguished Lt. Governor for the Kansas District of Kiwanis.

FULLER MEMORIAL

Cremation is planned, with a memorial service scheduled for 10 a.m. Friday at the First Presbyterian Church, 801 Leavenworth. Memorials have been established for the First Presbyterian Church or the KSU Foundation for the Leonard E. Fuller Scholarship Fund.

Contributions may be left in care of the Edwards-Yorgensen-Meloan Funeral home.

ROYALS MAKE CUTS

Steve Balboni, a member of the 1985 world champion Kansas City Royals, was among six players cut Wednesday by the team. Balboni, trying to make it back to the major leagues after spending the last three seasons in the minors, said he was retiring from baseball. The Royals also cut pitchers Rusty Meacham, Enrique Burgos, Bob Milacki and Doug Harris, and catcher Nelson Santovenia.

Villanova won the championship of the National Invitation Tournament, defeating Vanderbilt 80-73 Wednesday night. The Wildcats rallied from a 15-point halftime deficit to win.

Deryl Cunningham scrambles for the ball during K-State's 92-79 loss to Siena during the NIT consolation game. Cunningham scored a career-high 24 points in the contest.

Altman to speak with Creighton officials

SCOTT ABEL Collegian

NEW YORK — With the season over, it's time for the K-State basketball team to make plans for the future. And that decision-making includes head coach Dana Altman.

In the aftermath of K-State's 92-79 season-ending loss to the Siena Saints in the National Invitation Tournament, Altman said he would now talk to officials at Creighton University about the coaching vacancy of the Bluejays.

"They're in a hurry to do something, so I need to touch base with them and see where they're at," Altman said.

"But our season is over now, and I'm going to talk to them."

This isn't the first coaching job Altman has been offered during his tenure at K-State.

"I talked to Northwestern last year, and I was very flattered that they called," Altman said. "I went out there and looked, but I wasn't interested — really didn't even give it a chance."

Creighton coach Rick Johnson was fired this year after compiling a 24-59 record in three seasons.

The Bluejays went 7-22 this year.

Creighton, a small Missouri Valley Conference school in Omaha, Neb., is widely regarded in basketball circles as a step down from the competitive level of the Big Eight Conference.

But Altman, a Nebraska native, said the particular nature of the Creighton position has a certain attraction.

"It's very close to my wife's family," he said. "She's got two brothers and sisters that live in Omaha. It's 90 miles from her home.

"There seems to be a lot of people at Creighton that are excited about making a step with their basketball program. I'm just going to listen to what they have to say and go from there."

Altman discounted recent speculation about his job stability in the media as a reason for looking into the Bluejay position.

"It's frustrating, because you spend so much time talking about it," Altman said.

"I've always had a long-term contract. A guy calls into a radio show with no name, and there's an article written about that."

The late recruiting period for basketball begins in several days, and the Wildcats still have two scholarships to give.

But Altman said speculation on his departure to Creighton would have little impact on recruiting — because it's nothing new.

"They've seen things all year," he said. "What difference is that going to make? We've battled that ever since I've been here."

In Altman's four years, K-State has a 68-54 record.

The Wildcats' fourth-place finish in the Big Eight last season earned him Coach of the Year honors from the conference coaches.

"The fans have been fine. The administration's been great," Altman said.

"But maybe it's time to look at something else."

Dana Altman watches as K-State's defense is unable to contain Siena's Doremus Bennerman. Altman is considering talking with Creighton University about a basketball coaching vacancy.

Cats lose consolation game in consolation tourney

SCOTT ABEL Collegian

NEW YORK — There was another night of rewriting done in the K-State record book in the National Invitation Tournament Wednesday night.

Unfortunately for the Wildcats, it was Siena's Doremus Bennerman who made all the history.

The Siena point guard almost single-handedly pushed the Saints past the Wildcats in Madison Square Garden, scoring 51 points in a 92-79 win against K-State in the NIT consolation game.

"He was just spectacular," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "Our guys tried to play hard, tried to play with emotion, but we just couldn't guard him."

"He is the quickest, best scoring point guard that we've faced."

No player had scored more than 43 points against the Wildcats in any game since Bob Portman of Creighton did it in 1948.

But it ended this season for the Wildcats, who end the year with a 20-13 record and fourth-place finish in the NIT.

From the outset, the Wildcats had trouble containing Bennerman, who slashed through the lane time and time again, drawing fouls from the Wildcat perimeter players.

And it started from the tip-off.

Siena ran out to an early 11-6 lead on a Bennerman three-pointer and then drew K-State guard Anthony Beane into two quick fouls in the span of a minute.

Beane only played 11 minutes in the first half.

"That was the first point guard that I've faced that looked to score that much," Beane said. "He was quick moving side-to-side, real quick."

And in the low-pressure atmosphere of the third-place game, Bennerman shined.

With Siena up 39-35 at intermission, Bennerman stepped up again in the second half.

A jumper by Deryl Cunningham, who scored a career-high 24 points, put K-State within three at 50-47 with 13 minutes to play. But that was the closest the Cats could ever get.

Bennerman continued to drive past the Wildcat defense, and he spent the rest of the night camping on the free-throw line.

"Defensively, we were just a step slow," Altman said. "The guys went to the Empire State Building, and it looked like they climbed all those steps."

K-State loses to Oklahoma, travels to Iowa State

BRIAN ANDERSON Collegian

The Cats will next travel to Iowa State for a three-game stand against the Cyclones. The first game is Saturday at 1 p.m.

K-State's baseball team had just one run on nine hits, the pitching staff gave up 12 runs on 22 hits, and the defense committed six errors as the Sooners swept the Wildcats in a two-game series in Norman, Okla.

The Sooners won 6-0 on Wednesday and 6-1 Tuesday.

Mark Redman, 3-2, and Shawn Snyder combined for a four-hit shutout in Wednesday's game for Oklahoma (20-8 overall, 5-4 in the Big Eight).

K-State dropped to 10-19, 1-5 in the conference, and Wildcat starter David "Country" Johnson fell to 2-1 as he pitched 1 2/3 innings, giving up five hits and four runs.

Oklahoma scored two runs in each of the first three innings.

Center fielder Jerry Whittaker led the Sooner offense with three hits, while first baseman Damon Minor hit his ninth home run of the year.

K-State had a chance to come back in the fifth inning with runners on first and second base and no outs.

Shortstop Todd Fereday hit a grounder to third. Third baseman M.J. Mariani tagged the base, threw to second for the force and on to first for the triple play.

Sooner pitchers Russell Ortiz, 2-1, and Ken Gajewski worked together to pitch a five-hitter in Tuesday's game.

Cat starter Rob Merriman, 2-5, pitched 6 1/3 innings, giving up seven hits and six walks.

K-State got its only run during the first inning on a walk by right fielder Adam Green, a stolen base and a single from first baseman Dave Hendrix.

Oklahoma took the lead with two runs in the bottom of the first and four runs in the seventh inning.

K-State next travels to Ames, Iowa, for a three-game stand with the Iowa State Cyclones.

The first game starts Saturday at 1 p.m.

Switzer to replace Johnson, coached Aikman with Sooners

ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRVING, Texas — Barry Switzer, nearly unbeatable in college but untested in the NFL, replaced longtime nemesis Jimmy Johnson as coach of the Dallas Cowboys on Wednesday and said he wouldn't tinker with a team that won two straight Super Bowls.

Switzer, who won three national championships at Oklahoma but left amid scandal in 1989, got the job a day after Johnson walked out and ended his stormy five years under owner Jerry Jones.

Switzer, Jones' freshman football coach at the University of Arkansas, pledged to "be fair with people and treat people right."

He and Jones vowed the Cowboys would remain successful.

"Get ready to watch the Dallas Cowboys be the best in the NFL," Switzer said. "We have a job to do, and we're gonna do it, baby!"

Quarterback Troy Aikman and every assistant coach on Johnson's staff met with Jones and Switzer on Wednesday.

Aikman and Switzer have had a rocky history. Switzer recruited Aikman out of Henryetta, Okla., to come to the Sooners, telling him that Oklahoma was going to a passing offense. However, Oklahoma stayed on the ground.

Aikman played one game as a freshman in 1984, then started as a sophomore until he broke his ankle against Miami in the fourth game of the season.

Running back Emmitt Smith, who last week linked his future with Johnson's, appeared to have calmed down after talking to the former coach.

"I talked to Jimmy, and he was very positive and upbeat," Smith said.

Aging causes decrease in senses

Researchers add flavors to foods in order to motivate people to eat. The most effective flavors are roast beef, bacon and ham.

ALIE BRESADOLA

People are going to get old — there is no getting out of it.

And, most likely, people will experience decreased sensitivity in their ability to taste and smell.

"Taste and Smell Changes With Aging: What Do We Know?" was the topic of the Jean F. Caul lecture Wednesday in Justin Hall.

The lecture was delivered by Dr. Susan Schiffman, professor of psychology and medical psychology in the Department of Psychiatry at Duke University.

Speaking to a variety of faculty, students and regional experts, Schiffman touched on the senses of taste and smell.

She explained what is being done to help people with taste and smell deficiencies.

When people age, there are a variety of factors which lead to a decrease in the ability to taste and smell — aging, diseases and medications, Schiffman said.

Alzheimer's Disease, epilepsy, multiple sclerosis and diabetes mellitus all cause deficiencies in both taste and smell, she said.

"Pharmaceutical agents are notorious for taste and smell deficiencies," she said.

Some of these agents include anti-histamines, anti-thyroid agents, dental hygiene and psychopharmacological agents.

"My goal is to keep people off as many drugs as possible," Schiffman said. "We are an over-medicated culture."

It's hard for younger people with working taste and smell senses to imagine what it's like to be without them, she said.

One solution Schiffman gave for the problem would be adding natural or manufactured flavors to food in order to enhance the taste for the elderly.

"With a reduced sense of smell, there is a reduced sense of taste and a reduced motivation to eat," she said. "It's a serious problem."

At Duke's Sarah W. Stedman Center for Nutritional Studies, Schiffman's research includes adding flavors to food in order to motivate people to eat.

The most effective flavors are roast beef, bacon and ham.

"There are taste and smell problems in the elderly, and we can do something about it," she said.

"We can enhance the flavors of the food and make the people feel better."

Business owners tell success stories

PHIL SPIKER
Collegian

Supporting the visions of young people, volunteering within the community and being afraid of failure were some of the topics discussed at a business forum Wednesday.

The Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development recognized seven of this year's rural business leaders in K-State Union 212.

Ron Wilson, director of Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development, said the institute wanted to recognize the most outstanding rural business leaders in Kansas for 1993.

"We wanted them to come and share their stories with us," he said.

Gary Anderson, banker with the Farmers National Bank of Oberlin, was one of the leaders chosen.

He said people have to have visions, a commitment to what they are doing and courage in their convictions.

"You have to be convinced in what you believe in," he said. "You have to take some risks. Not every risk is going to be successful, but if you don't take risks, you're probably not going to succeed at anything."

Marvin Malcom, who created the Pi Bear company — which helps children deal with being in wheelchairs — in Lacrosse, said he thinks mistakes are constructively involved in the process of any worthwhile creation or idea.

"Mistakes are proof that you are not stagnating," he said. "If you don't get it right until the 10th try, then you just simply learned nine ways to do it that you don't want to repeat again."

Tom Ryan, owner of the Big Barn and Breakfast Inn near Valley Falls, said having visions and having people to support those visions is important.

"The message for the student today is to get out there and try the idea," he said. "We need to support our young people and their visions."

Allan Lindfors, banker with his hometown bank in Marquette, said people have to be willing to be involved and to keep enthusiasm and dedication going.

"You always have another project ahead," he said. "You have to have the dedication to keep it going."

Frank Meyer, owner and president of Custom Metal Fabricators Inc. in Herrington, said students should do as much volunteer work for one or two organizations as they can.

Men in education field slowly gaining ground on women classmates

BRENT BROWN

Men in the field of elementary education are still outnumbered by women, but that number could be showing signs of an increase.

Statistics show that while men are still behind in number, they are gaining ground, while the number of women in elementary education has grown more slowly, according to the Center for Student and Professional Services.

The total number of male K-State students in elementary education during fall 1989 was 86. This semester, there are 166 in the field.

However, the number of female students in elementary education at K-State has remained fairly constant throughout the years, according to the center.

The total number of women in the field during fall 1989 was 907, and this semester, it is 913.

"I think there are more men in the field now than there were before," Willard Nelson, associate director of the center, said.

Jamie Ralph, junior in elementary education, said she believes in the past, the field consisted primarily of women because of the way people perceived elementary education.

"I believe it was stereotyped as a female job," she said.

The need for men in the elementary classroom, however, is becoming more acceptable, Nelson said.

"I think schools feel that male influence in the school building is a positive factor for children," he said.

Nelson said he believes the need for male elementary teachers is becoming more of an issue in today's changing society because of the increased absence of a male figure in the home.

"Some of these children have very limited male contact," he said.

Right now, men are considered more frequently for job opportunities in elementary education than in the past, Ralph said.

Nelson said he thinks this could be in part due to the job market.

"With a tighter job market, they may have a better chance to get a job in this field," he said.

Statistics show that within the 50 states and the District of Columbia, the number of men teaching in public schools has risen in the past seven years, according to the National Education Association.

During the 1985-86 school year, there were 198,074 men teaching, and in the 1992-93 school year, there were 218,714.

Ryan Chatfield, senior in elementary education, said he knows he will be happy with his decision to teach in the future.

"I know it's going to be something I will enjoy and something that will be rewarding in the future," Chatfield said.

Steve Clark, sixth-grade teacher at Woodrow Wilson School, said he enjoys teaching because he can see children's growth.

"I see that what I'm doing helps others," he said.

chiropractor, said he sees many students who suffer from neck, back, arm and head pain caused by sitting in the same position for too long.

Students often feel a tremendous amount of stress before a big test. They will study for long periods of time without a break and while sitting in the same position, Gelhoff said. As a result, they often develop sore, tight and stiff muscles, he said.

"Pulling an all-nighter isn't very smart," he said. "You don't retain much of what you study, and it causes physical problems, too."

Stress is also thought to commonly cause ulcers and heartburn, but that is usually not the case, said Dr. Curtis Baum, a gastroenterologist at the Cotton-O'Neil Clinic in Topeka.

However, stress can aggravate an ulcer or heartburn, he said.

The most common internal problem that Dr. Baum said he sees as a result of stress is Irritable Bowel Syndrome (IBS), sometimes known as a spastic colon, he said.

"It's a functional problem that is most commonly seen in otherwise healthy young women," Baum said.

IBS is characterized by abdominal cramps and irregular bowel movements, Baum said.

To relieve many symptoms of stress, there are several medications that can help alleviate physical problems, Jason Kramer, pharmacist at Dunne's Pharmacy, said.

Two types of medications are most commonly prescribed for the stress symptoms: muscle relaxants and hypnotics, or sedatives.

Agreement reached by Israel, PLO negotiators

PLO demands for protection in Hebron were met Wednesday. The slaying of six PLO activists in the Gaza Strip Monday has threatened another halt to the peace talks.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israel and the PLO agreed on Wednesday to a police force of 100 Palestinians in the West Bank town of Hebron, but still argued over the make-up of a foreign observer mission there, PLO sources said.

An Israeli official said late Wednesday that many problems remained.

The PLO has demanded protection for Hebron's 80,000 residents before returning to overall peace talks on Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho.

The broader talks have been halted since Feb. 25 when a Jewish settler killed 30 Palestinians in a Hebron mosque. The Israeli army's slaying Monday of six PLO activists in the occupied Gaza Strip threatened to again disrupt the negotiations.

Yaacov Setty, representative for Israel's Embassy in Cairo, said he believed the talks were set back by the Gaza shootings and subsequent rioting by Palestinians. Before Monday's killings, negotiators had indicated they might reach agreement quickly.

"Maybe what happened in Gaza made for some difficulties in the negotiations. What we did (Tuesday) was overcome by difficulties that arose," Setty said.

Sources at PLO headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia, said the two sides agreed Wednesday that as many as 100 Palestinians would join Israeli forces on their patrols in Hebron.

But disagreements remained on the number and nationalities of foreign observers to be sent to Hebron, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The PLO has demanded American and Russian observers as part of the force, arguing that a U.N. Security Council resolution condemning the massacre urged an international presence.

Israel wants only observers from Norway, which was deeply involved in the secret talks that led to the Israel-PLO accord in September. Israel also is insisting the observers be under Israeli control.

The arguments have as much to do with politics as protection of Hebron's Palestinians. The PLO wants an international force to undermine the idea of continued Israeli rule. Israel has always resisted any foreign interference during its 26-year occupation of the West Bank and Gaza.

Setty said negotiators were working on final details of the security plan for Hebron, but would not say when an agreement might be announced.

"They are trying to finish with Hebron matters as soon as possible to move on to Jericho-Gaza," he told reporters.

The talks have been complicated by the need to get approval from Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin in Jerusalem and PLO chief Yasser Arafat in Tunis.

Setty said he hoped numbers would not again become a sticking point in the Hebron security talks. The PLO started off demanding 400 Palestinian police and 400 observers in Hebron, while Israel talked in terms of dozens in each group.

Both the PLO and Israel have said they hope to quickly agree on Israeli withdrawal from Gaza and Jericho before growing violence in the occupied territories again derails the peace talks.

On Wednesday, Israel put 300,000 of the territories' 1.8 million Palestinians under curfew to avoid a repetition of rioting set off by Monday's killings in Gaza.

Israel and the PLO already have agreed that advance units of the new Palestinian police force will be moved into Gaza and Jericho even before a final autonomy deal is worked out, to help ease tensions.

Disillusionment with the talks has grown in the territories since a Dec. 13 deadline for Israel to begin its withdrawal was missed.

Public schools win funding

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate on Wednesday approved a bill that would appropriate about $1.7 billion for the state's public school system.

The measure, which passed 24-16, returned to the House, which approved the bill earlier this year but must consider Senate amendments. The most significant difference is that the Senate's version provides less money for special education.

An effort by Sen. Bill Wisdom, D-Kansas City, to amend the bill to increase funding for special education failed. It was the only amendment offered during a relatively short but sharp debate, and it died on a voice vote.

The House version included $178.9 million for special education, which includes education for the physically and mentally handicapped and for the gifted. The figure would be a $25.4-million increase for fiscal year 1995, which begins July 1.

The Senate Ways and Means Committee cut that by $12.9 million, so the state would pay 79 percent of the excess costs associated with special education. Wisdom's amendment would have brought that up to 85 percent, the same as under the House measure.

"We have to increase special education every year," said Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. "This is a hole that we keep plugging money into."

Bogina said that under the bill, $68 million more will be spent on the state's public schools from kindergarten through the 12th grade than was appropriated for the current budget year.

"That's a lot of money for education," Bogina said. "We have treated education well."

However, Sen. Christine Downey, D-Newton, who is a teacher, said without passage of Wisdom's amendment, schools will spend money earmarked for regular education programs on special education. Under state law, each school has a base budget of $3,600 per student.

"There are aspects of special education that are out of control," Sen. Dick Rock, D-Arkansas City, said.

Worldwide nuclear testing ban possible

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GENEVA — A total ban on nuclear weapons testing may be agreed to next year after eluding the world for decades.

Overwhelming support exists for a speedy Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty to cover both underground and atmospheric explosions, the negotiating committee chairman reported Wednesday.

"There is a sense that this treaty is do-able and that it is do-able in a relatively short time — 12 to 18 months," Miguel Marin-Bosch of Mexico said at a news conference.

Marin-Bosch presides over the nuclear test ban committee of the 38-nation Conference on Disarmament. After years of Cold War stalemate, negotiations on a complete test ban started in January. The committee finishes its spring session Thursday.

In May, it will start examining concrete proposals, including such tricky issues as anti-cheating devices and eventual sanctions against violators.

Satellites, seismic stations and other technological advances have made it much easier to detect explosions, so verification of any prohibition is no longer seen as a real problem.

The United States, the Soviet Union and Britain agreed on a partial test ban in 1963 covering tests in the atmosphere, outer space and underwater.

But Washington and Moscow continued underground testing during their Cold War rivalry, arguing this was necessary to ensure the safety and reliability of weapons.

Nuclear powers China and France never signed the partial test ban treaty, which has been ratified by 116 nations.

The United States, Russia, Britain and France have suspended all testing in recent months. China carried out an underground test last October, touching off worldwide protests.

Beijing developed a nuclear capability much later than the other four powers and feels it needs to catch up.

Marin-Bosch said signs have emerged that China was preparing for another test explosion.

But he said Beijing was committed to a comprehensive test ban by no later than 1996.

IRA announces cease-fire to begin Tuesday

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The Irish Republican Army announced a three-day cease-fire Wednesday. But British Prime Minister John Major dismissed the truce as a public relations ploy even before it was announced.

The cease-fire will begin next Tuesday at midnight, the IRA said.

The British and Irish governments have been calling for a permanent end to IRA violence as the price for allowing the IRA's political allies to join in negotiations on Northern Ireland.

It was the second brief cease-fire announced by the IRA since Major and Irish Prime Minister Albert Reynolds announced their peace proposals on Dec. 15.

The cease-fire at Christmas was followed within days by an IRA attack that killed a police officer.

A cease-fire just after Easter is highly symbolic for the IRA, which reveres the "Easter Rising" of 1916.

Rebels seized the main post office in Dublin on the day after Easter, and the British decision to execute the leaders brought a wave of sympathy to the Irish nationalist cause.

Major told reporters before the announcement that a temporary cease-fire would be cynical.

He said people in Northern Ireland want an end to the violence.

In Dublin, Ireland, Reynolds echoed Major's comments in demanding an end to violence "to move the peace process forward."

But he didn't dismiss the IRA move completely, calling it "a very small step in the right direction."

The IRA, which favors uniting with the predominantly Catholic Irish Republic, said in a statement that the truce reiterates "our continued willingness to be positive and flexible in exploring the potential for moving the situation forward."

Gerry Adams, leader of Sinn Fein, the IRA's political wing, said the cease-fire was an opportunity to break a stalemate in peace efforts and urged Majors to authorize immediate talks.

Government lifts ban on corn planting

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Imagine an expanse of farmland nearly twice the size of New England, plowed into countless neat furrows and ready to be planted.

The corn crop scattered around the United States could reach those record proportions.

With supplies low after last year's flood-ravaged harvest, the federal government has lifted limits on how much corn farmers can plant this spring.

Last year's Midwest flood and other weather-related woes cut the fall harvest by 33 percent, prompting the government to encourage farmers to plant more corn.

Weak land idled in previous years will be seeded and sprayed with chemicals, increasing the risk for erosion and runoff into streams and rivers.

Farm suppliers are competing to tap into the larger demand for seed, fertilizer and herbicides.

Taxpayers have a stake, too. If the weather is favorable and corn yields climb, prices will plunge, triggering billions of dollars in government payments to farmers.

"It could be a roller coaster year," said University of Illinois farm economist Darrel Good.

This kind of corn won't end up salted and buttered on the cob. This crop, worth $16.5 billion in 1993, is turned into livestock feed, alcohol fuel, sweeteners, food ingredients and even packing material.

On Sept. 1, the surplus from last year's crop is expected to be only 802 million bushels, or 61 percent of what Illinois alone produced in 1993.

To replenish stocks, nearly 7 million additional acres could be planted in the United States, pushing total acreage to 80 million in dozens of states around the country, the highest since the mid-1980s.

The Agriculture Department will make its first estimate of spring planting on Thursday.

"Even with average conditions, we will produce a huge crop," said Champaign County farmer Mark Cender. "With average or less-than-average precipitation, we will grow a tremendous crop."

Farmers would not be planting more corn without a nudge from Washington.

The government usually requires farmers not to plant a crop on a portion of their corn acreage, a measure intended to balance supply with expected demand. In exchange, they qualify for cash payments if prices fall below $2.75 per bushel.

The land that is set aside can go as high as 10 percent, as in 1993, or 0, which is the 1994 policy announced last fall. Seed dealers such as Trisler Seed Farms in Vermilion County have been busy.

"It could mean a potential increase of 7 to 10 percent in sales of seed," Trisler general manager T.J. Hale said. "We went out very aggressively and solicited business. Everyone wants that extra 10 percent, so the competition is tough."

Soil scientist Dan Towery measures the impact differently. Farmers will be replanting some of their poorest land, out of production in previous years.

Sitcoms outdo 'NYPD' when it comes to innuendo

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — If you're looking for a bit of TV titillation, or trying to avoid it, you may be in need of informed guidance.

Despite its reputation, "NYPD Blue" is a veritable bluenose compared with some of the bawdier comedies, according to a new study out of Florida State University.

"NYPD Blue" tends to play nude peekaboo, but a review of 21 hours of broadcast television — including other dramas and sitcoms — found the comedies routinely pack the most profanity and sexual innuendo.

ABC's police drama gets the conservative Rev. Donald Wildmon riled up, but viewers of "NYPD Blue" are likely to come away with little more than creative uses of a few swear words.

Some of those sitcoms, though ... well, pull the blinds and send the kids to bed; this is hot stuff. The comedies studied had, on average, nearly triple the number of sexual references as "NYPD Blue."

Barbara Kaye, a doctoral candidate in Florida State's Department of Communication, decided to research the topic after the local ABC affiliate initially refused to broadcast "NYPD Blue."

"I wondered if it was really that bad and about what we're already seeing on TV," Kaye said by phone from Tallahassee. She worked with doctoral student Lucia Fishburne and coauthor Barry Sapolsky, an associate professor.

They studied series that, according to a poll of Florida State students, appeared to have the most sexual content. Programs from the four broadcast networks were taped and scrutinized, including ABC's "Roseanne" and Fox Broadcasting Co.'s "Married with Children."

The researchers randomly selected three episodes of each show; they excluded the first two hours of "NYPD Blue," however, because debut episodes tend to be exaggerated to gain attention, Kaye said.

She acknowledged that the show's initial episode contained a fairly graphic (for television) bedroom scene.

However, the three episodes studied contained no incidents of implied or explicit sex, although there was one shot of rear male nudity and the partial baring of a woman's breast, the researchers found.

But when it came to sexuality in general, such as language or topics, the incidence was nearly three times greater on sitcoms than on "NYPD Blue" — a per-half-hour average of 13.5 on comedies vs. 5 on the police drama.

On an episode of "Roseanne," for example, masturbation was openly discussed after a youngster was caught in the act.

DEAR CASSIE,

Ball caps not a sign of low I.Q.

Dear Cassandra,

Sounds as if "Bad hair day" is doomed to marry worse than a man who'll be bald before he's 30 — namely some jock-brained lump (great smile, though) who'll be completely brain dead five years out of college.

Funny, I always thought guys wore baseball caps to cover up the missing 30 points of I.Q. — not for fashion reasons. Sheesh! Or is that only how it makes them look?

Just like one of the herd, right? Sounds as if they'll be perfect for each other, so what do we know?

Signed,
 Mohair Sam

Dear Sam,

Whoa, I think you've drawn a couple too many conclusions about men who wear baseball caps.

Although I said most men who wear hats tend to either have no hair or just bad hair, I think it is wrong for us to also assume their intelligence level is one step above bread mold.

A lot of guys enjoy wearing baseball caps because of how the caps feel on their heads. I don't know if that is stupid.

Some of us refuse to get rid of that old, raggy pair of jeans because they are broken in and feel comfortable.

Sure, you look like a bum when you go out, but you can't replace the comfort and good feeling you have when you slide into them.

I thought "Bad hair day" may have been a little shallow for being repulsed by bald men, but there is nothing wrong with liking guys in ball caps.

Some women like preppie guys; some like sharp-dressed men. She happens to like everyday guys who top their heads with a ball cap.

What do you have against guys in baseball caps? Did one of them beat up your father?

Muslims make war with Serbs, peace with Croats

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnia's Muslims and Serbs made war Wednesday while Muslims and Croats made peace by approving a tentative constitution for their planned federation.

At least 10 people were reported killed in battles around the Muslim enclaves of Gorazde in the southeast and Bihac in the northwest. But Sarajevo was peaceful as a special assembly of Muslims and Croats endorsed the constitution.

Seeking to feed the peace momentum in Sarajevo, where few shots have been fired since a truce began Feb. 10, the United States' top general and U.N. ambassador arrived for talks with leaders of Bosnia's Muslim-led government.

U.N. Ambassador Madeline Albright announced a U.S. contribution of $10 million to the rebuilding of Sarajevo and said the United States continued to support the convening of an international tribunal to try those of all sides suspected of war crimes.

She spoke of a "mixture of sadness and great joy" upon viewing the destruction caused by 23 months of Serb siege — and the signs of life returning to the streets.

Albright and Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of Joint Chiefs of Staff, came for talks with President Alija Izetbegovic and Premier Haris Silajdzic. Albright also plans to dedicate the site for the U.S. Embassy in Sarajevo.

Shalikashvili said the United States was anxiously awaiting a comprehensive peace that includes the Serbs. He said U.S. peacekeeping troops will likely be sent to Bosnia only when total peace is achieved.

He and Albright later flew to Skopje, capital of Macedonia, where more than 300 U.S. soldiers are on U.N. peacekeeping duty.

Eastep said. "The money raised from the admissions will go toward salary increases for professors and graduate teaching assistants."

Decreasing the number of hours required for graduation to 65 and granting $5,000 to each new graduate who does not have a job are other actions the two would take if elected, Miller said.

"Our findings show that many of our most promising students have had their futures snuffed-out by being in college too long when they should be working, so we'd cut back on the required hours," Miller said. "As for the $5,000, they took our money for so long, promising riches and rewards, it's payback time."

Eastep said the two would not want to change everything. Current Student Body President Ed Skoog, senior in English, has led a successful administration for a multitude of reasons, he said.

"We feel Ed Skoog ran for the right reasons and ran his campaign the proper way," Eastep said. "He doesn't meddle in affairs where he knows he doesn't belong. He has done an excellent job as president."

Miller said the two hope to gather votes because they epitomize the students of K-State.

"Students should vote for us because we have found that everyone who tries to live forever — there's no way they can," he said. "And we are one of them."

struction that students have taken for granted that the library has been taken care of."

However, he said, the current funds are going toward the structure and not books and journals.

"Without a funding mechanism for materials, we'll have a big, beautiful building with nothing in it," Robben said.

Smith said she would like to hear from the library about what journals could be cut from circulation and how much funding would be needed to improve the quality of the library materials.

Improving the Union is another favorable point with both candidates.

Smith said they want to see the expansion happen, but they want to make sure students control what changes are made and not the administration.

"We would like the administration to give us time to find out what the students want to tell them," she said.

Student safety is one other important aspect of their campaign, Robben said.

"A safe campus should be a priority," he said.

Smith said they would like to deal with the lack of funding for the K-State Police.

Campus safety concerns can be tied in with Smith and Robben's campaign slogan, "You're safe with us."

Police search for end to gang war

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A gang war rages in a high-rise public housing project. Gunshots ring out as many as 300 times in a matter of days, killing one person and wounding six. Tenants cower in their apartments, afraid to venture out.

Officials believe they have a partial answer to the violence: Let police search the project's apartments for guns, with no search warrants required.

The episode has renewed a legal battle with civil libertarians who oppose plans for the searches, arguing that people don't give up their constitutional rights when they move into the projects.

But many of the tenants themselves don't buy that argument.

"I know if nobody tries to help us, more people will be killed — innocent people," said Tammera Evans, who lives in the massive Robert Taylor Homes project. "That's terrible. This is the United States of America, and we can't get no help. We're not free. We're here trapped."

Police said more than 300 instances of gunfire have been reported in the 28-building, 12,320-tenant complex since last Thursday. Authorities don't agree on the origins of the gang war, but they say the Gangster Disciples and the Black Disciples are likely battling over drug turf.

Since Saturday, housing police using metal detectors at the project's doors seized 26 weapons.

Evans says since the warfare broke out, she has had to dodge bullets just to buy groceries. She calls police to report more shootings, but she said they tell her to stay away from the windows. That can be difficult in a one-bedroom apartment.

Violence last summer in the city's housing projects prompted the Chicago Housing Authority to ask police to conduct random gun searches. The American Civil Liberties Union responded with a class-action lawsuit against the CHA on behalf of its 135,000 tenants.

ACLU lawyers argue that gang violence should be confronted with a strong police presence in the projects, not an end run around the Constitution.

"If the same level of violence occurring in and around CHA developments was occurring around upscale residential housing, there would be a constant police presence," said Harvey Grossman, the ACLU's legal director in Chicago.

U.S. District Judge Wayne Andersen temporarily halted the searches last month and called the policy a "greater evil than the danger of criminal activity."

On Monday, after the weekend violence, he refused to lift his restraining order.

He said he would allow limited searches for specific reasons after showing probable cause, immediate danger or with the consent of the tenant.

But the judge emphasized he would not grant the housing authority "carte blanche" to raid the projects.

Andersen's rulings incensed city and housing officials who support the warrantless searches.

"We are trying to get the guns and drugs out of public housing," Mayor Richard M. Daley said. "Public housing is owned by the people. They do not want guns, gangbangers and drugs in their buildings."

CHA chairman Vincent Lane said police don't have enough manpower or money to keep a constant presence. He said the housing authority's private police force is often scared or bribed by gang members.

At a hearing scheduled for Thursday, city officials planned to ask Andersen once again to lift the restraining order.

"I would hope somebody out there realizes that we have not ceded over Robert Taylor to anybody," Lane said. "We will do whatever is necessary to protect life and limb and to protect our property."

Some tenants hope the apartment searches will start sooner rather than later.

"When they swept the building twice last summer, there weren't anymore shootings," said Deron Williams, a father of two infants.

Evans, who lives in another of the broken-down high-rises, said more manpower is needed for the searches to work.

"We need the National Guard out here," she said. "We need help. The police can't do nothing about it. There's not enough of them."

State leaders say Fort Riley important to Kansas' future the resources to respond quickly to events in the world.

He said the United States thought it was prepared 50 years ago, but he said he recalled using broomsticks to train during World War II.

Dole served in the military during the war, was injured and received two purple hearts and a bronze star for his service.

"When we look at the world, there are still many powder kegs ready to be lit," Dole said. "Where is the world going to look for leadership? It is going to look to the U.S."

Finney said she would devote Kansas resources to save the base.

"Fort Riley is extremely important to this area and is vital to the future of Kansas," she said.

Finney said she would organize a task force consisting of representatives of state agencies in the next few weeks to support the base.

"You have served nobly in times of peace and war, and I want to let you know that you do not stand alone," she said.

Pridle said the fort was an economic power in the area. Its closing would have a large effect on the economy of the area.

Spending $511 million annually, the fort is the largest single employer in the state of Kansas.

Pridle said the community and the state need to work together to keep the base open and protect the local economy.

"We need to put our wagons together on the state level," he said.

"In the past during a crisis, the people of Kansas have shown they can work together."

Tobacco industry sued for nicotine addictions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — A group of high-profile lawyers took aim Wednesday at the nation's tobacco industry, suing on behalf of everybody ever addicted to nicotine.

Citing allegations that tobacco companies intentionally add nicotine to keep customers addicted, the federal lawsuit names the nation's major cigarette makers.

U.S. District Judge Frederick Heebe signed a temporary restraining order prohibiting the companies from destroying any records pertinent to the case. He scheduled a hearing for April 13.

"We will prove that the tobacco industry has conspired to catch you, hold you and kill you all without a moment of remorse or self-examination," said Melvin Belli, one of 26 lawyers who filed the lawsuit.

The tobacco industry denied that it manipulates nicotine levels or that tobacco products are either addictive or dangerous. The Food and Drug Administration is considering designating nicotine as a drug, which would allow it to regulate most tobacco products.

The lawsuit seeks more than $50,000 in damages, but Belli said in a statement the amount could total $5 billion. The lawyers involved have handled successful class action cases in the past, among them the $4-billion settlement over breast implants.

Philip Morris Co., which sued ABC-TV last week over similar claims it manipulates nicotine levels, said the lawsuit has no merit.

"Addiction claims have previously been made in many cases against cigarette companies, and the companies have prevailed in each of these cases," the company said.

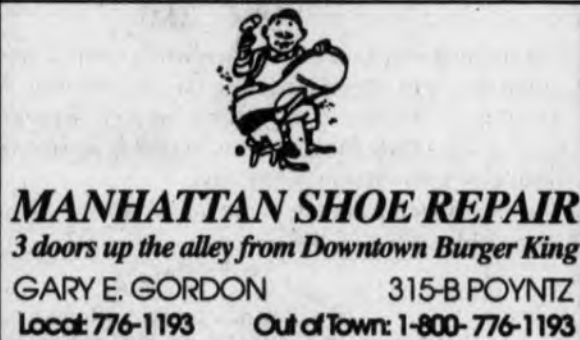

Maura Ellis, a representative for R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., also denied that the company manipulates nicotine in cigarettes.

The lawsuit, filed in New Orleans, accuses the tobacco companies of conspiracy and fraud. It was filed on behalf of three New Orleans smokers, all men. One died of cancer. All three started smoking as teen-agers and were unable to shake the habit.

The lawsuit accuses the tobacco companies of knowing that nicotine was addictive without disclosing it. It cites last week's testimony before a House subcommittee by the FDA commissioner, Dr. David Kessler. He said manufacturers intentionally suppressed evidence about the addictive qualities of cigarettes.

Coach Altman resigns, accepts Creighton position

Coach Dana Altman resigned Thursday evening from K-State and accepted the head basketball coaching job with Creighton University in Omaha, Neb.

Altman, who just completed his fourth season as coach of the Wildcats, made the move to Creighton the day after the Wildcats ended their season with a loss in the National Invitation Tournament.

"I wasn't sure that the commitment from Creighton University is what I was looking for," Altman said. "After spending the day here with everyone at the university that I've met, I believe that the commitment to the basketball program is there." The Cats lost 92-79 to Siena in the consolation game of the NIT in New York.

Altman, a native of Nebraska, had signed an extension of his contract just last year. He had four years remaining with K-State on his contract.

During his four years at K-State, Altman posted a 68-54 record.

Altman signed a five-year deal with Creighton but was unwilling to discuss the salary information.

The first job facing Altman at Creighton is improving the Bluejays' program.

"I'm not sure how long it's going to take," Altman said. "We will work as quickly as we can, as hard as we can, to bring it about as soon as possible."

During the press conference after the Siena game, Altman discussed the possibility of moving to Creighton.

"I'm from Nebraska, and my wife is from Nebraska," Altman said. "She's got two Plan adds more than Washburn

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Lawmakers will take up a proposal after the legislative session ends to allow Topeka's Washburn University and all state community colleges into the Board of Regents' system.

Legislators refused to pass a proposal to admit Washburn into the system this session. Their reluctance dooms the Partnership for Excellence, a plan to sweeten professors' salaries, because Gov. Joan Finney has repeatedly threatened to veto the partnership unless it includes the Washburn proposal.

The Board of Regents and officials from regents' schools tried desperately to convince the Legislature to pass the Washburn bill, arguing that the school has received state funding since 1961.

Opponents pointed out that three of six regents' schools are within 60 miles of Topeka: Emporia State University, University of Kansas and K-State.

The new proposal would let Washburn, community college and vo-tech school officials choose whether they want to enter the regents' system.

The proposal would provide an incentive for schools to join the regents' system, said Rep. Ed McKechnie, D-Pittsburg. Schools would get a funding increase of about 20 percent upon entering the system.

UNION GOVERNING BOARD

Lobbying begins for Union expansion

AMY ZIEGLER

The campaign is in full swing to rally support for the K-State Union enhancement project before a student referendum April 12-13.

Beth Trimmer, president of the Union Governing Board, said it's crucial to get the word out before students vote on the $25 fee necessary to fund the Union project.

"It's hard to get the ball rolling and get everyone involved," Trimmer said. "We're trying to talk to every student group possible and are doing anything and going anywhere where we can reach students and get ideas and input."

Trimmer stressed the importance of gaining publicity for the project by organizing presentations, speaking to students and exhibiting the architectural drawings.

She said to get the project done on time, all the supporters and organizers must do their part and contribute to the team effort.

"We're getting down to the wire. I don't really feel like we're pulling our weight and expect everyone to pitch in," she said.

Trimmer said two press conferences will be conducted April 6 and 7 to give students the opportunity to voice their concerns about the Union programming and enhancement project. The times and locations have not been announced.

Jack Sills, director of the K-State Union, said he is pleased with the K-State response.

"I think we have a lot of students who are showing a lot of interest and I feel good about that," Sills said.

Trimmer said the students are at the heart of the Union expansion project.

Debaters defend title in national tourney

MEREDITH REILLY
Collegian

The K-State debate team will begin competing in a national tournament today, and the individual-events forensics team is preparing for a national competition next week.

The debate team will defend its national title in the Cross Examination Debate Association National Debate Championships today through April 4 at Middle Tennessee State in Murfreesboro, Tenn.

David Devereaux, senior in speech communication, is one of the team members representing K-State.

"We spend a lot of time researching the topic and doing practice rounds,"

Devereaux said.

Team members spend at least 40 hours a week preparing for the event, which does not include class or travel time.

"Even those who aren't quite as involved still work about 20 hours a week," he said.

The team competes mostly in the Midwest during the semester, Sue Stanfield, director of debate and team coach, said.

"We don't travel as much in March. We stay home and get ready for the national tournament."

For the national tournament, team members have to research what arguments debaters from the east and west coast are using.

A Riley County rural firefighter directs a truckload of firefighters onto a portion of the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area where an intentional burn became out of control and consumed between 2,000 and 5,000 acres of grassland.

Konza fire gets out of hand

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Fire roared across the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area Thursday afternoon and early evening.

The fire swept quickly through heavy accumulations of fuel from last year's heavy rains.

Flames danced higher than six feet in some places, and the combustion sounded like rolling thunder.

Approximately 2,000 to 5,000 acres burned, Pat Collins, emergency preparedness coordinator for Riley County, said.

The fire was the result of a controlled burn that got out of control, Collins said. Neighboring farmers and Konza employees started the burn at 12:30 p.m.

Firefighters were called in at 3 p.m. and contained the fire at 8 p.m., Collins said. Engines and personnel from nine fire departments and many K-State employees, including professors, helped fight the fire.

At the time the controlled burn was started, weather conditions were well within safety standards. Winds were relatively calm, and there was no burning ban in effect, Collins said.

"It just one of those things that happens," Alan Knapp, associate professor of biology, said while powdery ash puffed into the air as he walked along charred ground.

"It just one of the hazards of working with nature."

The buffalo and deer seemed unconcerned about any hazards that they may have faced.

Several animals could be seen, through dense gray smoke, grazing contentedly.

"It's us humans that get all excited," Knapp said. Fire, just like the buffalo and the deer, is an integral part of the prairie ecosystem, Knapp said.

"If the Konza didn't burn, it would eventually become brushy forest land," he said. Fire has many uses.

Farmers and ranchers burn their fields to rejuvenate the grass to provide better feed for their animals, Knapp said. K-State scientists use fire just like any other experimental variable, he said.

"We vary the frequency of fire to see how the system responds," Knapp said.

Research plans call for some areas of the Konza to be burned annually and others to be burned less frequently, Knapp said. Some of these areas are side-by-side and provide a valuable research tool to compare burned and unburned grasslands.

While unplanned wildfires complicate research, it does not completely destroy it. Any areas that escape unburned can be used for comparison to the burned area.

Thursday's fire swept through an area that had been unburned for 15 years, Knapp said. This was one of the few areas that had survived a wildfire that burned most of the Konza in 1991.

"It will take two or three years for the litter to build up to a point where it will be like unburned prairie again,"

► COMMANDER ROBLES LEAVING FORT RILEY

FORT RILEY — The Army has named Brig. Gen. Randolph W. House as the next commander of Fort Riley.

House is deputy commander of the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth. Maj. Harold Allen of the Fort Leavenworth Public Affairs Office confirmed the appointment Thursday.

House said the date for the change of command has not been set but probably will be in late May or early June.

He will replace Maj. Gen. Josue Robles, the current Fort Riley commander, who recently said he would retire.

House, 49, is a native of Corpus Christi, Texas, and a graduate of Texas A&M University.

He served two tours in Vietnam and commanded the 2nd Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division, during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

► BILL WOULD CONSIDER ADVISORY COMMISSION

TOPEKA — The Senate might get a third chance to consider a bill that would create an African-American advisory commission.

The House resurrected the proposal on Thursday and sent it back to the upper chamber, which has rejected the proposal twice. The action came on a lopsided 110-12 vote.

House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said the House is trying to send the Senate a strong message.

"We're dissatisfied with the way senators dealt with the African-American commission issue," he said. "We want them to debate it on the floor. We want them to debate it and then pass it. It seems like they're being obstructionist."

Rep. Jim Garner, D-Coffeyville, won approval of an amendment creating the commission into another, minor bill during debate. Some House members were angry with the way the Senate dealt with the commission proposal, which the House passed earlier, 95-30.

Senators on Monday rejected an attempt to pull the bill out of the Senate Governmental Organization Committee, where the bill was expected to die. The Senate then rejected an attempt by Sen. U. L. "Flip" Gooch, D-Wichita, to amend the provision into another bill on the floor.

► NORIEGA CONVICTION SHOULD BE OVERTURNED

MIAMI — Manuel Noriega was illegally whisked out of Panama to face U.S. drug charges and should have been immune from prosecution because he was a head of state, his lawyer said in an appeal.

Noriega's newly declassified appeal, released Thursday, also claims his conviction should be overturned because the United States committed "shocking" war crimes when it invaded Panama.

The former Panamanian military leader was overthrown in the December 1989 invasion. He was brought to Miami and convicted on drug and racketeering charges. He is serving a 40-year sentence.

"The sole purpose of the invasion was the arrest of Gen. Noriega," defense lawyer Jon May said. "There was no genuine foreign policy objective."

The 90-page appeal also challenges the government's evidence about coup attempts against Noriega and the judge's refusal to allow Noriega to combat prosecution claims of his unexplained wealth.

The trial judge rejected the same arguments; Noriega was convicted in April 1992.

► ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS TARGET IN HEALTH DEBATE

MIAMI — As an emotional debate over immigration spills into the political arena, President Clinton was sued by one friend and labeled a "racist" by another in the span of a few days.

In Florida, California, Texas, a handful of other states and in Washington, illegal immigrants are frequent targets in the debate over health care, welfare reform, prison costs and education spending.

More broadly, the question is whether a country settled and populated by immigrants should close its doors to the newcomers.

The debate was perhaps inevitable, given state and federal budget constraints, and the skyrocketing cost of aid to illegal immigrants.

"Because of these costs we are unable to provide some of these same needed services to our legal residents," complains California Gov. Pete Wilson.

These points have been argued quietly for years but state officials like Wilson and Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles have been increasingly vocal about their opinions — despite the racial overtones.

Chiles chose his words carefully as he announced his lawsuit against Clinton and the federal government this month. No one can blame illegal immigrants for seeking the American dream, Chiles said, but by not policing the borders and forcing states to foot the bills.

► ARCHBISHOP UPSET BY AIDES' DEATHS

NEW YORK — For Archbishop Iakovos, leader of the Greek Orthodox Church in the Western Hemisphere for 35 years, the deaths of two top aides in a car crash has been a test of faith.

Two weeks after a joint funeral, the 83-year-old patriarch of 1.5 million faithful said, "I am still asking myself, 'Why?'"

"But I think of what is said in the Bible, about Moses turning the bitter water to sweet water," the white-bearded archbishop said in an interview Wednesday. "Sweetness comes many times from bitter herbs."

Aides say Iakovos was devastated by the deaths of the Rev. Dimitrios Frangos, 81, and the Rev. Germanos Stavropoulos, 51. They were killed March 17 when a woman allegedly high on a drug known as "angel dust" plowed her car into theirs at an intersection.

► 6TH DAY IN A ROW FOR DOW DECLINE

NEW YORK — Heavy selling weakened the stock market Thursday for the sixth straight day, dragging the Dow Jones average down more than 40 points by early afternoon and raising more anxiety about whether a 3 1/2-year-long rally is over.

The Dow Jones average of 30 big-name stocks, the best-known barometer of the market, rose 20 points in the first few minutes of trading then reversed into negative territory and fell about 70 points before it partly recovered. Broader market indicators also fell sharply.

The Dow average's fall triggered a so-called "circuit-breaker" rule on the New York Stock Exchange that limits high-volume computerized trades when the average falls or rises 50 points.

New planes at K-State-Salina will allow the campus' aeronautical department to train international pilots.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., visited the K-State-Salina campus Thursday to tour the aeronautical department.

Dole unveiled the new fleet of 12 white and purple Beechcraft planes. A K-State logo was displayed prominently on the tail section of each plane.

The K-State aeronautical department was given a $7.7 million grant from the Defense Department in 1993. The grant allowed the department to buy a fleet of Beechcraft airplanes, flight simulators and equipment for the avionics program.

Dole said he supported the program and was impressed with its quality. "This is a world-class operation. No place like it in the world. The Defense Department thinks it has a lot of potential."

The program has created about 140 jobs.

The Salina community has had a huge role in the success of the aeronautical program, Dole said.

"People in this area are determined to make this work," he said.

The program is the only flight-training program in the world certified by both the Civil Aviation Authority of the United Kingdom and the Federal Aviation Administration.

"This program has been given a double stamp of approval," Dole said.

The aeronautical department is working with British Aerospace to train international pilots. The first group of pilots completed their training this week ahead of schedule.

Ken Bernard, head of the aeronautical department, said there is an agreement between K-State-Salina, British Aerospace and the Presswood Flying College in Presswood, Scotland.

The K-State program was chosen after a worldwide search for a fair-weather training site.

They chose Salina for the quality of the program and its equipment, the fact that the weather in Salina is better than in Scotland, that there are certified flight instructors at Salina and the support of the community.

Jason Dougherty, sophomore in the professor pilot program, said it is great to have the new planes in Salina.

"It gives us a chance to fly a lot better aircraft."

The new simulators also save money on training, he said.

They allow students to experience flight problems such as testing a plane's fail system. It gives the student a chance to test responses to flight problems while still on the ground.

Native American culture showcased during April

PHILL SPIKER
Collegian

April is the month when K-State students can participate in a Native American pow wow and learn about Native American heritage.

The Native American Student Body at K-State has planned activities for April designed to inform Native Americans and others about the Indian culture.

The month's activities will be interesting and fun for everyone on campus, Laura Grabhorn, coordinator of multicultural student organizations, said.

The events will include three speakers, a pow wow and opportunities to see and try Native American crafts and foods.

"The theme of this is really just sharing the various aspects of Native American culture with people that might not be very familiar with it," Grabhorn said.

Grabhorn said the speakers, all of whom represent different tribes, will be speak about a broad range of topics, including the ways of life of the Omaha people, a new national museum and the myth about Native American education.

OPINION

APRIL 1, 1994

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Flood of '93 a worthy tradition

Those sandbags were not just filled with sand. They were filled with love for humankind — and property values.

After hours of argument and deliberation, half of the Collegian's editorial board has come out in favor of another flood this summer.

The Flood of '93 was great for the tourism trade in Manhattan. People came from miles around to look at our water and buy T-shirts saying "Surf the Little Apple!"

We got national exposure on CNN, and we're not even located on the Mississippi River.

The most important benefit of the flood was that it brought people together. Neighbor labored with neighbor to fight the rising water.

Those sandbags were not just filled with sand. They were filled with love for humankind — and property values.

The flood was a symbol of the great things people can do if they work together.

OK, they didn't exactly keep water out of everybody's rumpus room, but at least it gave them a feeling of being able to do something, unlike our other problems, i.e. crime, drugs, poverty, etc.

We could use these reminders every year, so let the flood times roll.

Floods fun, but let's move on

People can only make their cars or trucks float once, and mobile homes are meant to be mobile, not amphibious.

Like sand in the basement, those were the days of our tides.

The Flood of '93 was nothing if not entertaining. Granted, it was a good test of Tuttle Creek Spillway, and the sewage from Ogden was interesting. But it got really old really fast.

Next time, we should have an earthquake. We could learn earthquake drills instead of tornado drills. We could take tour groups out to Bramlage Coliseum to watch it sink into the ground.

The talk of tour dates for the flood of summer '94 has stalled in St. Louis and Des Moines, but it is alive and well here. There's talk of booking the flood for a return concert. Pink Floyd will open.

A flood at this point would be redundant. People can only make their cars or trucks float once, and mobile homes are meant to be mobile, not amphibious.

An earthquake, on the other hand, could turn the tide, so to speak, of the way people view Kansas. Instead of Tornado Alley or a flooded-out wasteland, an earthquake would bring us the recognition we deserve.

Here's to Bramlage Pothole. Long may she crumble.

Happy April Fool's Day from the Collegian Editorial Board

TOLES

Native Americans still unfairly at mercy of our government

April Fool's Day marks the beginning of Native American Heritage Month. Does anyone but me find that ironic?

Here we go with a month celebrating the beauty and history of a people who have been systematically slaughtered for more than 200 years, starting with a day devoted to whole-scale stupidity.

Perhaps ironic is not the word I should have used.

How about "funny"? There are some people who would find it so. I am sure G. Armstrong Custer, who set forth from our very own Fort Riley with his troops in 1876 toward Little Bighorn, would find it uproarious.

The maniacal little bastard is probably giggling in his grave right now.

Or maybe he and Andrew Jackson are having a drink. You know about Andy, don't you?

He was the great president who was responsible for the wholesale murder of thousands — displacing Native Americans from their ancestral lands and forcing them to march hundreds of miles with little or no supplies because they would not sell those lands to spreading pioneers. Yeah, I'm sure he's having a good old guffaw in whatever inferno he's frying in.

I suppose the people who would find this most funny are those who live today and still perpetuate the mistakes of their ancestors. Note the people who don't see why anyone should be offended by something as small as the "Indian Chop" or the use of the label "Redskins" and "Chiefs" to describe all-important football teams.

They are too ignorant to get the joke.

The government officials who disallow tribes the legal right to their sacred lands and deface them with highways and buildings most likely see the humor of it, though.

Those idiots who allowed the faces of four presidents to be carved into a mountain having great spiritual and cultural meaning to the Lakota people no doubt would have grinned.

Mount Rushmore was land that was not acquired legally by the U. S. government from them. Why did they want it?

So we may all be reminded of the accomplishments of just four men at the sacrifice of a people's holy land?

It seems to me the waste of a mighty big mountain for a very little reason.

How about the continuation of the reservation system in this country? That's a double-edged joke on the Native American people.

Reservations started out being holding places, established to contain Native Americans in disgusting conditions until they died from starvation and disease.

The party line now is that reservations are supposed to be self-contained systems of government, where they can preserve their customs and traditions without influence from "outsiders." They do as much as they may.

Yet, in the recent past, tribes have not been allowed to use the autonomy that is legally theirs as independent nations.

They have not been allowed to use the peyote that has been an important part of their religious ceremonies for centuries without the Supreme Court's permission, for example. They also have not been allowed to raise what revenues they would for their people, the way they want to, on the land that is theirs.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

April Fools are what our government have been making the Native American peoples out to be. What it has done to them, however, has been no joke.

Like many other minorities in this country, they have been stripped of their lands, their religious freedoms and their rights as the first people to populate this country.

Perhaps the worse shame is in the fact that the Native American nations accepted Europeans to this land in good faith.

They helped them survive and build the magnificence that stands as America today.

It is a magnificence built on the bones of a people who had a culturally rich and peaceful society while Europeans were still scratching their rat bites and painting themselves blue.

Ironic and funny are not words appropriate to the situation in that case.

Attempted genocide are the words that spring to my mind.

Erin Mansur-Smith is a senior in theater and pre-law.

Reservations started out being holding places established to contain Native Americans in disgusting conditions until they died from starvation and disease.

God, morality have no place in government or in lives of children

When I was reading a copy of the Declaration of Independence recently, I became extremely concerned about something that was mentioned in its call for freedom.

Thomas Jefferson mentions God, or words synonymous to that of God, four times in the document.

He uses such terms as "Creator" and "Supreme Judge of the World." There is also a mention of the term "Divine Providence," which sadly is related to the same subject.

Then, I realized how difficult it is to escape the mentioning of God in our government. It is printed on all denominations of our currency, and as I recall, it was chiseled on many of the buildings in our nation's capital.

The destructive force of religion has become such a great part of our society when it was previously thought many people were actually moving away from God.

A recent U.S. News and World Report poll showed that 93 percent of all American citizens believe in God or a universal spirit.

I myself believe and hope this number is not factual.

Basically, it dates back to the founding of our nation.

Many people came over here to express their religious freedom, which I have always believed as being freedom from religion.

After all, it is the First Amendment of the Constitution that states, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

This greatly disturbs me that people around me are allowed to practice their religion wherever they feel it is proper.

I remember back in high school when we were allowed to have a moment of silence at the beginning of the school day. I knew one thing. Most of those kids around me were praying to their respective God, and this worried me.

These young, impressionable minds were given an opportunity to pray to their God. Where was my freedom from religion?

Although I couldn't hear their words to God, I could feel them trying to force their beliefs on me.

I was appalled until the government finally took away this blatant opportunity for prayer in schools.

Schools are a place to learn things. Churches and religion in itself also teach us things, but let us take a look at some of those things religion teaches us.

The Islamic religion believes people should not drink alcohol, and they should give a certain part of their earnings to the poor.

The Judeo-Christian religion believes in the same type of donations to the impoverished, and among other things, Judeo-Christians believe their God wants them to be successful, prosperous and happy.

There are many branches and viewpoints of religion, all involving various morals and virtues that are seen to be positive by the respective religions.

It is quite shocking a nation would allow its citizens to follow in beliefs of this manner. After all, we can't see God. I have never talked to God. What has God done for me? Isn't God suppose to do for me whatever I pray for?

Children should not spend time learning morals and virtues when there are more important things to be taught to our children to make this a great nation. Things such as which type of birth control is more effective.

This way, children need not decide whether it is good or bad. They can just go ahead and do whatever they want and be assured they are safe.

Morals and virtues are dangerous things to teach our children. If they have morals, there is a set of guidelines that will help them determine in what manner they are going to act.

The good thing is many liberals have done a tremendous job of destroying any opportunity for morals to grow in our children's minds.

That way liberals can do what they do best, which is attempt to control people through the government. This is assured to solve all problems.

Before this can be done though, institutions such as religion need to be eliminated from the face of the nation so we can have freedom from religion.

Before I end my column, there is one more thing I think needs to be said — thank God it's April Fool's Day.

Arrests made in connection with carjacking deaths

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Two Japanese fathers whose sons were slain in a carjacking thanked police Thursday for tracking down the alleged killers, then suggested Americans should stop shooting people.

Late Wednesday, two reputed gang members were arrested in the slayings of Takuma Ito and Go Matsuura, which were widely publicized in Japan and reinforced the image of the United States as a land of gunslings.

The students, both 19, were gunned down Friday night outside a supermarket in San Pedro, a harbor city south of downtown, and their brand-new Honda was stolen. They died two days later.

Raymond Oscar Butler, 18, of Los Angeles, and Alberto Reygoza, 20, of Long Beach, were booked for investigation of murder and jailed without bail Wednesday, Police Chief Willie L. Williams said at a late-night news conference timed to allow its broadcast on Japanese prime-time news.

"This is the news we have been waiting for," a downcast Shuji Matsuura said at a news conference Thursday.

"We also understand it will take months for the final prosecution, which will be in your hands."

"We will quietly wait for your decision."

Both fathers urged an end to violent crime in the Los Angeles area.

"The violent crime by handguns has spread so deeply ... only American people can change the situation — not by anyone else," Matsuura, who spoke in English, said.

Through an interpreter, Akihiro Ito also called for an end to violence in the United States.

The families hope the arrests will "put our sons to rest somewhat," he said.

Japanese Consul General Seiichiro Noboru praised the arrests, saying they were "in all this sadness, the only warm, bright spot."

The suspects are reputed gang members who apparently chose the victims because of their car, a 1994 Honda Civic, Williams said

Wednesday night.

"It was a nice car ... and apparently the men decided to take the car and they were shot. It could have been you or I there."

The slayings prompted the Los Angeles police union to take down billboards it had posted depicting a carjacker aiming his gun at a woman motorist.

The billboards were part of the Police Protective League's campaign to negotiate a pay raise by showing how dangerous the city would be without the police force.

The union said it would take them down because city officials and the police must work together to restore Los Angeles' reputation and confidence.

ROYALS LOSE TO INDIANS

Jack Morris allowed three runs and six hits in seven innings as the Cleveland Indians completed the Florida portion of their spring schedule Thursday by beating the Kansas City Royals 7-3. Chris Haney, the losing pitcher for Kansas City, gave up seven runs and 11 hits in six innings. The Royals have three exhibition games left — all against the Florida Marlins.

Dana Altman gives the officials an idea what he thinks of their calls during K-State's loss to Nebraska.

DEREK SIMMONS

Emotions ranged from shock to disappointment and, for some players, betrayal when they heard K-State coach Dana Altman accepted the same position with Creighton Thursday night.

Altman's transition came a little more than 24 hours after his last game with the Wildcats.

"I think he should have come and talked with us about it first," Stanley Hamilton, a 6-foot-6 junior for the Wildcats, said.

"I'm happy for him, but I wish he would have talked to us man-to-man. I kind of feel like he did it behind our backs."

Hamilton said Altman hadn't confronted team members on his decision following K-State's 92-79 loss to Siena Wednesday in the consolation game of the National Invitation Tournament.

"He was being the same person around us," Hamilton said. "I kind of heard rumors. I wish we would have been able to hear it from him instead of someone else."

Altman becomes the 14th head coach in Creighton's 75-year history, replacing Rick Johnson who resigned March 2 after three seasons with the Bluejays.

"I thought when I signed I would have coach (Altman) around for the next three or four years," Kevin Lewis, a 6-foot-10 freshman, said.

"I'm a little disturbed about it, but I'm going to talk with Altman before I do anything."

"I would transfer if it comes down to it."

Lewis commented on Altman's situation upon arrival in Manhattan from New York, about two hours before officials named Altman coach of the Bluejays.

Deryl Cunningham, a senior, said he wasn't sure why Altman decided to leave.

"I'm not sure," Cunningham said. "I really couldn't tell you. If I could, I would."

"I feel really bad for the players that are left behind. I went through this at DePaul. The assistant coach that recruited me left and didn't tell me."

Cunningham transferred to K-State from DePaul as a sophomore. He said Altman didn't discuss his plans with the team.

"No, he didn't," he said. "I had no idea of anything going on. And I think that is bad. I think they deserve to know face-to-face."

Sophomore George Hill said he hopes assistant Ken Turner is in line for the available position with the Wildcats.

"I hope coach Turner gets it," Hill said.

"He's been a big part of this team, part of our family. I would like to see him offered it."

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said Altman called him from Omaha 30 minutes before the press conference.

"It all happened literally rapidly — I just talked to him at 6:30 tonight," Krause said. "I was just one of those things where he liked what he saw. I respect his decision and wish him the best."

Krause said he asked Altman about telling the players, and Altman said he would call them tonight with the news.

"He has a lot of respect and affection for the squad," Krause said.

One of K-State's recruits for next season, Ayome "Paco" May, from Lancaster, Texas, was amazed to hear about the coaching change.

"I'm really surprised," the senior from Lancaster High School said. "I don't know what to think. It really upsets me. They didn't bother calling me or anything."

May said he wasn't sure if he would consider transferring or not.

"It's just way to early to tell," May said. "I'll have to talk to my dad about it."

May had offers from New Orleans, Arizona, Texas Tech and Oklahoma State, among others.

However, for Hamilton Strickland, a junior with the Wildcats, changing schools may not be worth contemplating.

"I only have one year left," he said. "I'm just going to stick it out."

Altman's motivation methods left Strickland questioning his decision to leave K-State.

"This really caught me by surprise. He's (Altman) always telling us how he doesn't want us to quit. He just makes such a big deal about not quitting until you get the job done."

Brian Gavin, sophomore, said if there is any animosity, it's because Altman didn't tell the players.

"If there is any bitterness, I think that is why," he said.

"For him not to tell us himself, it seemed awfully out of character for him. A lot of us look up to him."

Dana Altman is leaving K-State after completing his fourth year with the Cats. Altman accepted a head coaching position with Creighton University Thursday night.

brothers and sisters who live in Omaha."

A native of Wilbur, Neb., Altman will be just 75 miles from his home. He said he thought it might be time to move beyond Manhattan.

"The fans have been fine," he said. "The administration's been great. But maybe it's time to look at something else."

"I love Kansas State. But Creighton says it's willing to make a great commitment to the program and to the coaching staff."

Creighton is a member of the Missouri Valley Conference. Creighton coach Rick Johnson was fired March 2 after posting a record for the most losses in a season. The Bluejays had a 7-22 record this season. Creighton had been shopping for a coach since Johnson was fired.

Creighton associate athletic director Bruce Rasmussen told the Associated Press on Tuesday that Altman was just one of the school's candidates.

"I've talked with Dana Altman, but I've also talked to 53 head coaches at some of the top schools in the country," Rasmussen said.

Before the announcement on Thursday, Altman said no official discussions had taken place.

"They're in a hurry to do something, so I need to touch base with them and see where they're at," Altman said. "But our season is over now, and I'm going to talk to them."

The talks must have been good.

The move by Altman came as a surprise to the players Altman had just finished coaching the prior evening.

The players arrived back in Manhattan at 5:30 p.m. Thursday and were unaware that Altman was traveling to Creighton for anything more than open-ended discussions.

The Wildcats' loss to Siena completed a 20-14 season.

This was the first season since 1988 that the Cats passed the 20-win mark. During the 1992-93 season, Altman led the Cats to a 7-7 conference season and a trip to the NCAA Tournament.

Finishing with such a performance, Coach Dana Altman was named Big Eight Coach of the Year by his peers.

Four years ago today, Lon Kruger resigned from K-State.

TENNIS

Meidell withdraws from K-State

Masha Meidell has left the team and K-State, citing personal reasons. She had played in the No. 1 position since Karina Kuregian had injured her back in February.

CRAIG PINKERTON
Collegian

There was some good news and some bad news for K-State's women's tennis team on Thursday.

First, the bad news. Coach Steve Bietau announced that Masha Meidell has left the team and withdrawn from school, citing personal reasons.

Meidell assumed the No. 1 position on the team when Karina Kuregian injured her back in February.

In that time, the sophomore accumulated a 5-4 record and was ranked 71st in the nation in the latest Rolex/ITA Rankings. The doubles team of Meidell and Kuregian was also ranked No. 26 in the country in that poll.

The loss of Meidell dropped the netters numbers to just four. Kuregian is out, possibly for the rest of the season, with a back injury. Alex Thome and Karen Nicholson are both out indefinitely due to illness.

Now, the good news. The Meidell

seven-match losing streak came to an end with a 6-1 victory against Missouri.

The win was the first for the netters since Feb. 26, when they blanked Creighton, 9-0.

K-State pushed its record to 4-11 on the season, 1-0 in conference action. The Tigers fell to 2-11.

The only loss for the Cats came from the No. 6 singles position. The Cats had to forfeit because they only had four players able to play.

Usually, the Cats would have to forfeit their No. 5 and No. 6 singles along with the No. 3 doubles positions due to the lack of available players, but Missouri has only five players on its roster so K-State only had to forfeit No. 6 singles.

Because neither team fielded a full squad, they played only seven of a possible nine matches.

Missouri, a team with no one on scholarship, didn't prove to be much of a match for the short-handed Cats.

"No one was really tested," Bietau said. "I think our players did a good job of focusing on tennis today. They just took care of business."

The netters won't get much time to enjoy the victory because they will head to Boulder to take on the Colorado Buffaloes for the second round of conference action on Sunday.

"Colorado is a very solid team," Bietau said. "They lost their No. 1 player who blew out her knee in a skiing accident earlier this year. That hurts, but depth is the strength of their team."

Last year, the Buffs took both matches from the Cats, 7-2 and 5-3.

CLUB SPORTS

Crew to cruise in Tuttle Creek regatta

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State Rowing Association will play host to the Big Eight Conference Regatta Saturday morning at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

The regatta will include teams from Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska and Oklahoma State.

"Our goal will be to row well and hopefully come out on top," Cindy Blaker, graduate student in history and women's team captain, said.

"The team is relatively young, and hopefully we will get more experience from this meet."

This will be the first competition for the crew after spending spring break in Waco, Texas, for spring training on the Brazos River.

Amy Bowman, freshman in landscape archi-ecture, said the training allowed the team to work on its technique.

"We practiced over and over," Bowman said. "We worked on power and conditioning during our two practices a day. We went over everything over and over."

The regatta at Tuttle Creek will mainly involve novice- and varsity-level teams.

Most of the races will be eight-person boats, Blaker said.

"We know the course and landmarks, so we could have an advantage," Blaker said.

"Tuttle is very windy, and that causes the lake to be choppy."

"We know how to adjust to that, and the other teams might not be able to adjust as well."

Cats use Huskers game to restart season

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State men's lacrosse team will use tomorrow's home game against Nebraska as a building block for the rest of the season.

Coach Curt Thurman said the game against the Huskers would be important.

"It's been two weeks since we've played," Thurman said. "We were scheduled to play against Missouri, but they didn't want to come up here to play us. So, we ended up with a forfeit victory, and we played a purple and white game."

"The game on Saturday will give us a chance to get back into the flow of things and get ready for league play."

The Cats play in the Great Plains Lacrosse League, which consists of 12 teams throughout the Midwest. Last season, a defeat by Wichita State cost K-State the league championship.

Two weeks ago, the Cats avenged that loss to the Shockers with a 10-9 victory in sudden-death overtime.

K-State fell behind early before rallying to score three goals in the final three minutes to tie things up. The Cats scored the tying goal with less than nine seconds remaining in the game.

They scored in the extra period to capture the victory.

"We didn't control the ball in the first quarter," Thurman said. "But we started picking it up towards the end of the first half."

K-State will play at 10:30 a.m. Saturday in Memorial Stadium and will travel to Lawrence April 10 to face the Jayhawks.

Suggestion: stay away from the Rocky Road

After a long, miserable winter, dairyman Scott Aldrich decided to whip up the perfect concoction to put his customers in a summer mood: vanilla ice cream with chili.

Aldrich's Beef & Ice Cream Parlor is serving up its annual April Fool's Day dessert today, a tradition that started 12 years ago with the truly awful flavor of beef gravy ice cream.

The idea started when Aldrich and some friends were talking about odd foods they'd eaten, such as rattlesnake meat and moose steaks. The subject turned to gravy, and someone suggested that Aldrich mix it with ice cream.

"That was definitely the worst flavor," Aldrich, owner of the dairy and restaurant in Fredonia, N.Y., 40 miles southwest of Buffalo, said.

"The gravy sort of congealed in the ice cream. The first was the worst. Why we kept going, I don't know."

Each April 1, Aldrich offers free samples of his vile flavor of the day. One year, Aldrich whipped up bacon-and-egg ice cream. Last year, it was ice cream and olives, both black and green. Another year, he made sauerkraut and vanilla.

His customers' favorite flavor was chocolate spaghetti — plain pasta with no tomato sauce.

This year, Aldrich brewed up 20 gallons of chili-flavored vanilla, enough to serve 1,000 people.

"What can I say? It's a cold, creamy bowl of chili," Aldrich said.

I'll just sit back here and enjoy the ride

A man in Detroit drove off in an ambulance Wednesday as two paramedics treated a patient in the back, careening through the city at speeds up to 65 mph.

Before the wild ride ended, the driver of the stolen ambulance hit at least five cars, including a state police cruiser.

The two paramedics radioed their dispatcher and then managed to jump out when the driver slowed at a railroad crossing. But their 65-year-old patient stayed aboard for the whole ride, authorities said.

"They tried to get the patient off the rig, but he wouldn't," fire department representative Rodney Parnell said. The patient had been found lying in the street, apparently intoxicated.

This could make for some funny-looking wills

A Los Angeles woman who wants to bear her dead lover's child won the right to three vials of his frozen sperm after a 2-1/2-year dispute with the man's grown children.

"I do not think it is appropriate to give the children veto power over their father's right to procreate half-siblings," Superior Court Judge Arnold Gold said Monday.

He granted Deborah Hecht a portion of the sperm William Kane stored before committing suicide in 1991.

Gold ruled that Kane's sperm was part of his estate — citing an appeals court ruling defining sperm as property — and granted Hecht 20 percent of it.

"Twenty percent is better than nothing," Hecht said. "Maybe I can do it on just three vials rather than 15."

Lay the bottle on the ground and put your hands over your head

Town leaders in Litchfield, N.H., hoped for nickels from heaven. They got grief in Massachusetts instead.

As a way to raise $30,000 for the planning of an office complex, the town recently began rounding up bottles and cans and redeeming them in the neighboring state for a nickel deposit.

The problem is it's illegal to collect on containers not actually purchased in Massachusetts, which has a $100-a-container fine for people who try to do it with 10 cases of containers or more.

Litchfield redeemed about 2,000 containers, or about 83 cases. That would amount to a fine of about $200,000, if Massachusetts decides to levy one.

Officials of Massachusetts' Office of Environmental Affairs referred calls Thursday to the state attorney general's office. The attorney general's office said it was checking into the matter.

To be safe, Litchfield has ended its recycling drive.

WEEKEND

High-tech War

Tom Clancy changes from selling insurance to selling national bestsellers

It begins with a sonar contact.

A few thousand meters to port, maybe a transient; it's hard to tell from such a distance. The captain orders six knots, not wanting to draw attention to his sub but needing to get closer and identify the contact. His ship slips through silent waters, approaching its unsuspecting prey.

Or perhaps a flight of stealth fighters approaching their target at low level. No radio contact is necessary, the planes have an exact schedule planned out long before the attack. The thousand-pound bombs sit in their bellies, waiting for the pilots to toggle their firing switches on the stick and send them to their targets below.

It's a love affair with technology. And one man has become the center point of attention in the genre of techno-thrillers, the most successful lover of technology writing today: Tom Clancy.

Beginning with "The Hunt for Red October," Tom Clancy has written an unbroken string of runaway bestsellers, including "Red Storm Rising," "Patriot Games," "The Cardinal of the Kremlin," "Clear and Present Danger," "The Sum of All Fears" and his current novel, "Without Remorse."

Two of his books, "The Hunt for Red October" and "Patriot Games," have leaped the boundary between printing press and celluloid to become highly successful motion pictures. A third movie, "Clear and Present Danger" starring Harrison Ford as the intrepid Jack Ryan, is due out later this year.

"Clear and Present Danger," centering around the U.S. government's attempt to bring down the South American drug cartels and the ensuing blunders (a standard of Clancy novels), was the best-selling novel of the 1980s, according to the New York Times bestseller list.

"I'd say next to Stephen King and John Grisham, he's the most consistently popular author we sell," Stephanie Callan, assistant manager for the Manhattan Waldenbooks store, said. Other people come and go, but he's always been a good seller, and his books are usually anticipated about three months in advance.

"People like him because everything he writes could happen. He gives people a strong sense of patriotism because America is always the good guy."

Clancy did not begin his career in the military or believing he would write a national bestseller. Selling insurance during the early '80s, the 47-year-old resident of Owings, Md., began drafting "Red October" during his spare time at the office and eventually sold it to the U.S. Naval Institute publishing company. The results were immediate.

"I asked myself for about the hundred-thousandth time, 'What are you going to be when you grow up?' and all of a sudden it hit me: 'You are grown up, and you're stuck! You're comfortable, but you're stuck in a boring job.' I didn't have anybody to blame but myself," Clancy said in an interview with Nation's Business. "I'd made my own trap."

With this in mind, Clancy set out to write a novel about a Soviet submarine that defects to the United States, based on a real-life incident of a Soviet frigate crew's attempt to defect to Sweden.

"I decided, by God, I always wanted to write a book," he said. "I've got the time. I'm my own boss. I'm going to do it. And I did."

Clancy's shot to the top of the New York Times list after a number of people in the military and then-President Ronald Reagan remarked on its compelling accuracy. It became a rarity in the publishing world, being a bestseller in hardback and paperback at the same time.

Clancy soon signed a three-book deal with G.P. Putnam's Sons that resulted in "Red Storm Rising," a depiction of a non-nuclear World War III that it is now used as a textbook at the Naval War College, and "Patriot Games," which became a bestseller three weeks before its official publication date.

He is now the prodigal son of the armed forces, who see him as their best representative on how life in the military really is.

But for all his success, Clancy has had his critics. At first, it was those same military types who questioned the sensitivity of the materials in his book. Where was he getting all this classified information? Clancy swears all his grist comes from public sources, though his success now has opened doorways to materials not accessible to the common Joe.

Other critics are quick to point out that things just go too well for a battlefield situation in Clancy's depiction.

"Clancy doesn't know a god-damned thing about fighting," retired Col. Carl Bernard said in an interview with Newsweek. "The major problem is that he's assumed that Audie Murphy is everywhere. In real combat, anything more complex than a can opener doesn't work and doesn't work a lot."

Writer Scott Shuger agrees with the idea of overperfection on Clancy's battlefields.

"The more complex war has become, the more ways there are for missions to go bad and the graver the consequences," he said. "The history of modern warfare is replete with counterexamples to Tom Clancy's vision. The problem is that history hasn't sold 20 million copies."

Characterization is also another weak spot, but Clancy writes books about technology, not people. Clancy said he has difficulty writing sex scenes because they make him uncomfortable.

"What do I know about sex? I'm a married man," Clancy said.

But critics have not stopped America's warfare darling. If he follows his pattern, a new novel rejoicing the wonders of technology will be out within a year, fast on the heels of "Without Remorse."

As for Clancy himself, the desire to continue writing far surpasses either self-doubt or criticism.

"In America, there ain't no excuse. You can go out and do anything you damn well please if you try hard enough."

Course aims to remove social barriers

JENNIFER KELLER
Collegian

Women will have the opportunity to learn basic outdoor skills through a program developed by the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks.

"Becoming an Outdoors-Woman" was designed to teach women these skills in a supportive, non-intimidating atmosphere.

The program's objective is to remove social, traditional and educational barriers that prevent women from participating in a wide variety of outdoor recreational activities.

"After a seminar that was held in Wisconsin about women breaking down the barriers, educators learned that women feel they aren't given the education or opportunity to participate in outdoor activities," Becky Johnson, program coordinator, said.

"Hopefully, with this program, women will become more comfortable taking part in these activities."

The program consists of three workshops planned for Sept. 30, Oct. 1 and 2, 1994, in the Rock Springs 4-H Center, south of Junction City.

Cheri Paillet, junior in speech pathology, said she wants to participate because she wants women and men to develop more common interests.

"I think it's a great idea because women would see how fun the things guys do are and want to go with them," Paillet said.

Carolyn Stiles, junior in secondary education, said she understands how men's and women's roles are becoming alike in today's society.

"With men taking on women's roles and women taking on men's roles, it's an excellent opportunity for women to get experience in what are typically thought of as men activities," Stiles said.

Although the focus of this program is to introduce women to outdoor activities, it is open to anyone 18 years or older.

BECOMING AN OUTDOORS-WOMAN

The Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks is sponsoring "Becoming an Outdoors-Woman" on Sept. 30, Oct. 1 and 2, 1994 at the Rock Springs 4-H Center, south of Junction City.

- The program's goal is to remove social, traditional and educational barriers that prevent women from participating in a wide variety of outdoor recreational activities.
- The workshops will include design, hunting and firearms safety, deer and turkey ecology, canoeing, bow hunting, basic fishing, birdwatching, game calling, plant identification, camping, use of map and compass, emergency first aid and more.
- Registration is limited to 100 participants, and anyone interested should contact: Becky Johnson, Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks, P.O. Box 1525, Emporia, KS 66801

DEAR CASSIE

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Kruger's brow drives fans nuts

Dear Cassandra,

I would like to begin by saying I don't consider myself to be mean-spirited. I've just got a pet peeve that has been driving me crazy.

It all began when I was watching the NCAA Sweet 16 last weekend. The question came back that used to haunt me a few years ago. My question is, "What the hell is that thing between Lon Kruger's eyes?" I know it's not just me because it drives my friends nuts as well.

I mean, what the hell is it? A piece of carpet, a third brow, a broken-up uni-brow, a mole? Please answer before this weekend so I can actually enjoy the game instead of just wondering.

Signed,
Just curious

Dear Curious,

For readers who don't know, Lon Kruger is the men's basketball coach for the Florida Gators. Kruger is a former K-State basketball player and head coach. Kruger's team is now in the NCAA Final Four.

I had to throw this one to the people at the Collegian sports desk, who are an authority on sports and eye-brow trivia — the two areas they mop up on in Trivial Pursuit. The consensus was the thing on his brow is a uni-brow.

They also said it is dangerous to entirely shave off one's eyebrows because it is possible that they may never grow back. (Don't get them started.)

'Mellow Gold' explores wide range of styles

ANDREW TOMS
Collegian

Shades of Bob Dylan and Tom Waits — Beck, a 23-year-old folk singer from the Los Angeles area, has released his first album, "Mellow Gold."

Innovative production and off-color lyrics define this release, making it hard to decide if you like it. If you enjoy the folk-rap, MTV hit "Loser," you may be disappointed with the rest of the album.

Not simply another folk-singer, Beck pushes near the limit of musical styles. He often records his vocals distorted and uses percussion that sounds like things found in a garage banging together — similar to Tom Waits. The album also has the same rugged, uncontrolled feeling found on older Bob Dylan albums.

Beck's music is centered on his acoustic guitar, with occasional journeys into pop, rap and punk.

It is impossible to categorize this record. It voyages into Ween-styled rock and Beastie Boys-style raps and beats.

Beck brings his jaded world-view to scene with seemingly meaningless lyrics such as these from "Beercan":

"I quit my job blowin' leaves, telephone bills up my sleeves and throwin' frisbees at the sun ... now I'm runnin' like a flaming pig."

Beck is the slacker's Dylan, often lampooning the lifestyle of the modern middle-class white punk with dreams of running naked through mini-malls and quitting dead-end dishwashing jobs.

Beck captures a generation's sound, bridging musical gaps between fans of rock, punk and rap.

Senate increases budget

her motivation to run for office, but she could not survive on the salary Senate was proposing.

"I love K-State, but I can't fucking run if the money is not there," she said.

The budget for the Office of Student Activities and Services stands to increase by about 21 percent from this year's budget.

After five hours of debate, Senate approved a total allocation for the OSAS of $130,887.93.

For fiscal year 1995, there will be $267,290 allocated from student fees to Senate to cover its budget and campus organization funding.

Bryndon Meinhardt, agriculture senator, said Senate should not increase its own budget when it has cut funding to student groups.

"We cut every other group, and then we increase our budget 21 percent. One thing we think we can do is cut salaries," Meinhardt said.

"If the money tree starts to grow again outside the Union, we can go out, pick it and pay our people better."

STUDENT SENATE ALLOCATIONS

These allocations were made Thursday night. Student Senate didn't finish the allocations.

- Touchstone allocation — $1,044.65 for annual publication
- UFM — $13,000 for postage, printing, honorariums and salaries
- Women's Union — $500 for an honorarium
- Young Democrats — $830.18 ($117.78 for membership drive and $712.40 for Political Awareness Week)

UGB hopes to get students to polls

"The project is for and by the students. It's totally important that we try to keep the students involved," Trimmer said.

Through their press conferences, news releases and proposals, the Union Governing Board hopes to get people out to the polls to vote.

Trimmer said they typically have a low turnout rate for voting, but she has the vision to turn around the trend and get more participation this year.

"It's very important to get students out to vote. The worst thing students could do is to not vote, because the whole reason for having the referendum is to get their input," she said.

Trimmer strongly believes that the passage of the Union enhancement project will create revenue and will determine the future of Union programming.

"We have come to a point where we either start putting more money into student activities or cut them, and if we do that, we'll lose the vision of what we're here for," she said.

New proposal creates two branches of supervision

McKechie said he expects lawmakers to like the new proposal because it includes community colleges, which were left out of the Washburn bill.

The new proposal would create two branches of supervision of the state's community colleges: local governing boards and the regents.

Local boards would retain the power to:

- Recommend a chief administrative officer for their school.
- Decide employees' salaries.
- Decide curriculum for students.

—Set student tuition, with a required range of $28-to-$40 per hour for Kansas residents.

The proposal would eliminate state and county out-district tuition. Instead, each county would have to impose a property tax levy of 1.5 mills. Tax levies in counties with regents' schools would be frozen at 25 mills.

In addition, the proposal would phase out some degree programs at Washburn, although its law school would remain intact.

We accept news tips.

Watch for our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

Working it Out

Wildcat Workout presents:

Exercise your way through our obstacle course for an ultimate aerobic adventure. Regular afternoon exercise sessions will be combined on Friday, April 15, at 4:20 p.m. for this special event.

Pool Action:

Swimmers are anticipating and preparing for summer fun. Swimming and water exercise are great ways to stay in shape.

- This Month: The pools will be closed Saturday, April 23, for superchlorination.
- Looking Ahead: May 6, 13 & 14 the pools will be closed for Swim Meets.

OUTDOOR RENTAL OPEN

The Outdoor Rental Center is open for your canoeing and camping needs. We have a full line of tents, canoes, sleeping bags, backpacks, stoves, lanterns, etc. Our rates are very reasonable. Think about your next camping trip and give us a call at 532-6894 for your equipment needs!

CONSTRUCTION UPDATE

North side--foundations being poured in preparation for masons to lay blocks.
South side--mechanical and electrical building cooling towers, new boiler hookups, etc.
Inside--Electrical laying out for new supply line, fire alarm equipment, etc.
Gym addition on West side--block walls are going up.

You Asked It!

Q: I would like to start a swimming exercise program. How many laps equal a mile and how do I share a lane without running into another swimmer?

A: Both the 6-lane and 8-lane pools in the KSU Natatorium are 25 yards long. One length is 25 yards and a lap is 50 yards. Therefore, 72 lengths or 36 laps equal one mile.

Lap swimming etiquette when sharing a lane is to enter the water and wait at the deck's edge until all swimmers in the lane pass by you and know you are present.

Additionally, swimming in a single file, counter clockwise fashion helps swimmers avoid collisions and maximizes how many swimmers can utilize a lane. Stay to the right except when using the center of the lane to pass a slower swimmer or waiting at the wall to be passed on the turn.

Rec Check

Rec Check provides program and facility information 24 hours a day by dialing 532-6000. Call Rec Check for Rec Complex and Pool hours, exercise sessions, Intramural deadlines and more!

Quick & Easy Strength Training Program

Are you interested in building up your strength but don't have much time or know what lifts you should perform to get a "complete" workout? Say no more. We have some suggestions for you. You can potentially work most major muscle groups either with free weights or machines in a 20 minute time period. Listed below are examples of a quick and easy strength training program using either free weights or machines. Please note the order of the lifts. It is important to work the large muscle groups first when lifting.

	FREE WEIGHTS	MACHINES
CHEST	Flat dumbbell or barbell press	Chest press
BACK	Dumbbell bent rowing	Lat pull down
SHOULDERS	Dumbbell press	Shoulder press
TRICEPS	Dumbbell kickbacks	Tricep extension
BICEPS	Standing dumbbell or barbell curl	Arm curl
LEGS	Dumbbell or barbell squats	Leg press

Perform one set of each lift with 10-12 repetitions per set. The last repetition should be a struggle. If it isn't, increase the weight. Now you are well on your way to starting a strength training routine.

If you are not sure how to perform any of these lifts, or want more information about this routine or other routines, please call 532-6950. Corey Long, our Fitness Consultant, will arrange a time to meet with you and provide assistance.

FREE Blood Pressure Check

My Favorite Workout!

Dave Mitchell, Laboratory Educational Technician for the Dean Of Architecture & Design, swims at the Ahearn Natatorium three times a week.

His workout consists of lap swimming for twenty minutes followed by using the deep water jogging vest in the diving well. He completes his workout by stretching for ten minutes.

Dave started swimming here at K-State about five to six years ago for relaxation. He noticed that his blood pressure was much lower after swimming, compared to several different forms of exercise.

"I always feel better after swimming. It relaxes me and provides a good workout," Dave said.

Besides being a regular pool user, Dave also does step aerobics and bikes twice a week.

PFE eliminated from tuition bill

The House passed a bill Thursday that will increase tuition at 5 percent.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
STAFF REPORTS

Topeka — The House passed Thursday, 78-46, a bill that would increase tuition at K-State 5 percent in the fall.

The bill appropriated $447 million for the six state universities for the fiscal year starting July 1.

The Partnership for Excellence, which would have increased tuition in order to increase faculty salaries at the state schools, was not a part of the bill.

The PFE was eliminated from the House bill in committee and no attempts were made to add the plan back in during House debate Thursday.

The vote came after Rep. Betty

Jo Charlton, D-Lawrence, proposed a successful amendment which added $2.3 million to the bill to increase grant money to help low-income students pay tuition.

Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said she thought the House version of the bill was fairer to students.

"This bill is fair to students," Hochhauser said. "The extra money for financial aid could be used to increase faculty salaries."

The regents scholarship program was funded in part through tuition last semester.

Hochhauser said even with the increase in funding, only about 24 percent of the students eligible for the regents scholarship program will be able to receive aid.

Charlton said tuition at state universities has increased 90 percent over the past decade. She said fewer and fewer students can afford to attend college as tuition rates increase.

Rep. Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha, chairwoman of the House Appropriations Committee, said her opposition was the same "same song, same verse — no money."

Democrats said the financial aid amendment broke an impasse over the bill that developed Wednesday, when the House failed to advance the bill to final action on a 48-73 vote.

"That brought Democrats aboard," House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said. "It didn't bring the religious right."

Some conservative members of the House voted against advancing the budget bill Wednesday because they were angered by the House action on a proposed constitutional amendment designed to protect parents' rights to raise their children.

The proposed parental rights amendment was sent back to the House Judiciary Committee, where it is expected to die.

Hochhauser said she didn't vote to advance the regents budget bill Wednesday because she thought there wasn't enough state general fund money in the bill.

"We successfully put $2.3 million more in the budget," she said. "That's why we did it. We held out for more money."

Parking reviews to change

Editor's note: At press time Thursday night, the Student Senate meeting was not finished. This story contains information on what happened in the early hours of the morning in that meeting.

Student Senate approved legislation late Thursday night that will change the way parking tickets are reviewed.

The group that reviews parking tickets was changed to a year-long committee that would meet on a regular basis.

The committee will be comprised of students and faculty. Students will review student tickets, and faculty will review faculty tickets.

Now, student and faculty tickets are reviewed by two separate committees.

Currently, the committee meets irregularly, and students can't be present when their tickets are reviewed, Jason Hamilton, junior in English and parking committee chairman, said. The tickets are also reviewed by only one person.

The bill would allow students to be at the meetings when their tickets are reviewed.

Under the bill, two committee members would review each ticket. If both members agree the ticket was unfairly issued, the ticket would be overturned.

If the two members disagree, the ticket would be reviewed by the entire committee.

Aaron Otto, Senate intern, said the changes were made to increase the efficiency of the committee.

The changes in the committee required changes in the Student Governing Association Constitution. The changes will be sent to college councils and the Kansas Board of Regents before they will go into affect.

The Senate did first readings on several bills Thursday but postponed new and old business until after its appropriation meeting Tuesday.

Virtually entertaining

Alex Johnson, a student in the geographic information systems program at K-State-Salina, plays a Virtual Reality game against Mike McGee, junior at Salina South High School (back), Friday evening at the K-State-Salina campus. The games, called "Virtuality," were brought in by K-State-Salina Student Government Association and were free for all K-State-Salina students and their guests. The two were playing "Dactyl Nightmare," a game consisting of two players trying to shoot each other in an arena-type area.

Communities worry about possible closing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNCTION CITY — Military downsizing has thrown the future of Fort Riley into question, and nearby communities are wondering about their own economic futures.

"Everybody who works here or who has a business here should be worried," said Robert Tankersley, whose rent-to-own store has catered to soldiers in this military town in central Kansas since 1962.

Fort Riley — and its $511 million annual payroll — could get squeezed out by the dual forces of government austerity and changing military needs.

"The closing of Fort Riley would be devastating," said

Roger Maughmer, the mayor of Manhattan. "We're not going to just stand by and let a mistake like that happen."

When the U.S. Army ranked the military value of its 11 divisional posts in the United States last year, Fort Riley was eighth. The two bases at the bottom were shut down.

Next year, the Army must rate its bases again and suggest the closing of at least two more.

"There ain't much you can do," Tankersley said. "If the big boys are going to shut it down, they're going to shut it down. So we have to look to our people in Congress to protect us on this."

Last week, a small parade of politicians and several of their Washington aides rolled west on Interstate 70 to the fort for a series of meetings and forums as part of an ongoing rescue mission.

"It's important for those of us who represent Kansas in the Congress to be actively involved in maintaining the Army personnel" at near 515,000, said Rep. Jim Slattery, a Democrat running for Kansas governor. "The most persuasive argument is the right argument. And the right argument is simply keeping the military at that level."

Slattery was echoed by fellow Democratic Rep. Dan Glickman of Wichita, Republican Sens. Nancy Kassebaum and Bob Dole of Kansas, and Democratic Kansas Gov. Joan Finney — all of whom have talked of a localized economic catastrophe if the post closed, and of a national security peril if the Army were to shrink much more.

"If we are going to waste a little money," Senate Minority Leader Dole said at a dinner of base supporters, "we should do it protecting liberty, freedom and (the) future of America."

Typical political arguments for keeping Fort Riley viable have begun with the history of the 1st Infantry Division: first in combat with the Germans in World War I; first ashore at Omaha Beach on D-Day; first to breach Iraqi defenses in the Persian Gulf war.

Then there is talk of the unique value of Fort Riley to today's Army: an absence of competition from urban sprawl; a central and secure location.

Finally, speakers have concluded that the fate of the post would turn on broader questions of how much could be cut from the military. Administration plans to reduce Army personnel by 15,000 by 1997 would almost certainly doom the fort.

Some students upset about algebra calculator expenses

SARAH HAPPEL
Collegian

For many students, paying $60-80 for a textbook is hardly even questioned, but paying that much for a calculator is.

Matt Mercer, junior in animal science, said he is unhappy with the math department for requiring him to buy an $80 calculator for College Algebra.

"I can see buying it if you're a math major, but I'm not," he said.

Tom Muenzenberger, director of undergraduate studies in mathematics, said being a math major had nothing to do with it.

"Learning to use a calculator is a valuable service. We feel we'd be doing students a disservice if we didn't introduce them to this technology," he said.

"And I would urge all students in every major to keep their calculators because they will need them later in life."

Mercer said he was willing to accept the fact he paid for an expensive calculator until he got to class and discovered his instructor did not understand how to use it any better than the students.

"My instructor spent 45 minutes on a problem before he even figured out how to use it," Mercer said.

"They have a book on how to use it, but I've got 16 hours of class, and I work. I don't have time to sit down and read a book on how to use my calculator."

The guide book that comes with the calculator has 16 chapters, two appendices and about 250 pages.

Chris Hawver, junior in animal science, said he is also unhappy with the situation.

"It's a lot more complicated calculator than I've ever used, and there's no class instructions on how to use it. There's only so much you can learn from a book. A lot of people are mad about this," Hawver said.

However, Muenzenberger said the department plans to have a more intense calculator-training session for graduate teaching assistants at the beginning of next semester.

"It's the first time we've used them, the professors and graduate students, so that doesn't help, but we're getting better," Brent Smith, professor of mathematics, said.

There are two different versions of the calculator. The T-1 82 costs $80. The T-1 81 costs about $65. The math department negotiated with Texas

► HARRASSMENT COMPLAINT FILED AGAINST STATE REP

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A janitor in the Statehouse has filed a sexual harassment complaint alleging state Rep. Rex Crowell, R-Manhattan, made unwanted advances and once rubbed her back, according to the Kansas City Star.

Crowell, 50, has denied the allegations. He said he did not even know the woman, who worked at the statehouse in Topeka, according to the Star.

The complaint was filed March 22 with the Kansas Human Rights Commission by Andrea Gilchrist. She is a student at Washburn University.

Gilchrist said in the complaint that the lawmaker's actions forced her to work in a hostile, intimidating or offensive environment.

She details only one incident in the complaint but says others occurred from March 1992 to Sept. 9, 1993.

A Human Rights Commission official said Gilchrist did not file the complaint within a six-month period after the September incident.

As a result, the commission has no jurisdiction and will forward the complaint to the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in Kansas City, Mo.

An EEOC official declined to comment.

► KURALT SAYS FAREWELL TO CBS AFTER 37 YEARS

NEW YORK — Charles Kuralt, who led a loyal "Sunday Morning" congregation for 15 years, has stepped down from the pulpit.

The broadcast veteran called it a day at the close of this week's edition of the 90-minute news and features program, which he has anchored since its inception in 1979.

"Time for us to part, you and I," said Kuralt, who only three weeks ago announced his retirement from CBS News after 37 years.

"I aim to do some traveling and reading and writing," he told his audience, "and to watch this program the civilized way for a change — in my bathrobe, while having breakfast."

► INVESTIGATORS FIND NO HISTORY OF KILLER'S GUN

LOS ANGELES — The history of the $50 handgun used to assassinate Mexican presidential candidate Luis Donaldo Colosio cannot be tracked by the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

"It's like looking for a needle in a haystack. There could be a million explanations for what happened to that gun," said ATF representative Ed Gleba.

The bureau closed its investigation last week after it was unable to trace the history of the Brazilian-made .38-caliber Taurus.

The weapon was first sold for $50 to a security company executive in 1977 at the Bob Chow Gun Shop in San Francisco.

In 1980, the security company and its assets were sold to Texas-based Stanley Smith Security.

From 1980 to March 23, when Colosio was killed in Tijuana, there are no records of where the weapon traveled. Mexican authorities are holding Mario Aburto Martinez in the killing.

► MURDERER WANTS PART OF GIRLFRIEND'S ESTATE

SAN ANGELO, Texas — Frederick Frank Ebnal murdered his girlfriend with a shotgun. Now he wants part of her estate.

Ebnal, who is serving a 48-year prison sentence, filed a lawsuit against the three children of the murder victim, Peggy Jones.

He claims he was Jones' common-law husband and should be entitled to a portion of her estate.

Jones did not leave a will.

Terry Sterling, a lawyer for Jones' children, who are adults, said Friday that the lawsuit is frivolous.

Also named in the lawsuit are Sterling and the former First City Bank, where Jones had an account.

Ebnal was convicted of the January 1992 murder of Jones, who died of a short-range shotgun blast to her face.

► FORMER NAZI GUARD ORDERED OUT OF U.S.

MILWAUKEE — A man already stripped of his U.S. citizenship for trying to hide his past as a Nazi guard has been ordered to leave the country.

Anton Tittjung, 69, of Greenfield has until April 29 to choose a country to which he will be deported, according to an order Friday by U.S. Immigration Judge G. MacKenzie Rast in Chicago.

If Tittjung doesn't choose a country, he will be deported to Croatia, where he was born.

Tittjung was stripped of his citizenship in December 1990 after a federal judge in Milwaukee ruled he had lied about his background to gain entry to the United States in 1952. He became a citizen in 1974.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefits now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

Dancers get a boost

JODI WOLTERS

Science and art are working together to make Springdance 1994 a reality.

This year, the K-State dance program is working with architecture students for Springdance.

"For this Springdance, we wanted to do something different. We always like to collaborate," Vera Orlock, assistant professor of dance, said.

The dance program has called on the architecture students to build objects with which the performers will dance.

"This year, it is going to be done in two parts," Robert Arens, assistant professor of architecture, said. "My students and myself are involved in the second part. Each choreographer is choreographing a dance around these objects that my students are constructing."

The dancers interact with these objects, creating a kind of ritual.

"To start off, I distilled from ritual the four basic elements: water, air, fire and earth," Arens said. "We designed three objects: one for earth, one for water and one for air, and the dancers represent fire."

The project, not only a collaboration of the dance program and an architecture studio class, is also an important learning experience for the architecture students.

"The students' involvement is really critical," Arens said. "It is being built by a architecture design studio consisting of 12 students. The nice thing about this exercise is you are building a real object instead of a representation of something."

The studio class completed the project in two weeks.

"We had scale models and some drawings, and from there we just built it full-scale," Flint Sackett, senior in architecture, said.

"It has been a real learning experience. We were assigned to work on the details of the project. It was learning in that we used real material and tools."

Arens said the materials the architecture students used were all donated by businesses.

"Also critical was the donation of materials by some area businesses," he said.

The dance program faculty said it is important for the department to interact with other departments on campus.

"Our objective is to reach out and do interdisciplinary events instead of staying in our own environment," Achmed Valk, director of dance, said.

All K-State colleges will sponsor activities at Saturday's Open House

SARAH HAPPEL

Imagine a place where people of all ages see magic shows, pet animals, receive free food, watch parades and eat chocolate-covered grasshoppers.

K-State is the place where all these events will be taking place 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Saturday, April 9, for K-State's All-University Open House.

"Open house is K-State's way to show off," Sharon Roberts, senior in dietetics and open house chairwoman, said.

"Every college on campus has an open house where they get exhibits and displays together to show off K-State."

"It gives the students on campus a chance to get involved and show some leadership within their colleges," she said.

Different colleges have different ways of showing off.

The College of Human Ecology has a fat-bucks buffet where it sells food and ice carvings.

The College of Veterinary Medicine provides a petting zoo.

A parade is sponsored by the College of Engineering.

The College of Business sponsors representatives and speakers.

The College of Arts and Sciences, which includes the chemistry department, will demonstrate a magic show.

The College of Agriculture will give away free donuts, and the entomology department will sell chocolate-covered, edible grasshoppers.

The College of Architecture will build sand castles and will have an egg-drop competition.

Simulated volcanoes and earthquakes along with other hands-on activities will be sponsored by the College of Education.

"It's kind of like a carnival there's so much going on," Roberts said.

On the day of the event, there will also be someone available to answer questions about the activities.

Paula Ansary, junior in marketing and assistant coordinator for open house, is responsible for posting volunteers throughout campus to help visitors when they get lost.

"I coordinate a group of 'lost volunteers' who are basically tour guides. They watch for people who look confused or lost," Ansary said.

"They are from various groups on campus and help people find their way. We have campus tours, but most people prefer to wander through campus themselves."

Ansary said she has about 75 volunteers so far.

Colored chalk paw prints will also be scattered throughout campus. They are color-coordinated by colleges to help visitors find buildings.

By the Collegian Editorial Board

World should get tough on N. Korea

More steps should be taken to get North Korea talking and opening its doors to international inspectors.

North Korea has been playing the "tough guy" routine for too long, and the United Nations and United States shouldn't take it any more.

The North Korean government has been giving the United Nations and the United States the silent treatment on its nuclear capabilities and any nuclear weapons.

"I know they're lying when they say they're not developing a nuclear program," William Perry, secretary of defense, said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press."

More steps should be taken to get North Korea talking and opening its doors to international inspectors.

The Washington Post reported Saturday that North Korea is about six months from doubling its capacity to produce plutonium for atomic weapons.

In six months, Perry said if the situation doesn't change, the United States would move out of the diplomatic mode and into the mode of putting pressures on North Korea, including economic sanctions.

Why wait six months? If North Korea wants to brush off the world powers, why can't the world powers return the favor with trade sanctions to get North Korea to comply with international law?

This is not a call of arms to invade North Korea in hopes of finding its plutonium and taking it away like matches from a little kid.

This is a call for the United Nations and United States to become more proactive, instead of standing by and letting North Korea call the shots.

If we think North Korea is uncooperative now, we should wait until they have a nuclear weapon on the table to bargain with.

THE BAD GUYS BAN SEX

Nobody thought "penis" was a dirty word in my junior high. "Penis" was a nerdy way to say it.

Truly cool junior-high kids had a vast vocabulary for referring to sexual things, but "penis" and "mammary gland" were just uncool.

After all, that was the way they made you talk about it in sex-ed class, so there was no way it could be cool.

Things have changed since my junior-high days, though. Now, words like "vagina" and even "breast" are provocative and dangerous.

The state of Texas wants to remove such provocative terms from the new textbooks for their public schools. And that's not all they want to remove.

Texas wants to pull any "provocative sexual diagrams."

There won't be any information about birth control and protection against socially transmitted diseases, either.

No more will there be any in-class discussion of drug use or homosexuality in Texas.

Texas is also yanking the 1-800 numbers for teen-suicide hotlines from their newer, more pure textbooks.

And while it has been noted by many that the state is like a "whole 'nother country," this type of thinking isn't restricted to Texas.

Municipal schools in big cities around the country are adopting the "Sex Respect" sex-ed curriculum.

"Sex Respect" was created by right-wing fundamentalists and is propaganda-like in its rabid anti-sex message.

It contains no mention of any kind of birth control and offers information that state courts have ruled to be "blatantly false."

Recently, I discovered that similar thinking is going on at my own former junior high, right here in Manhattan.

The discussion over whether "penis" should be in the health curriculum has even devolved into personal attacks against my old health teacher.

The educators and community leaders around the country that are pushing for these changes (hereafter indulgently referred to as the "Bad Guys") are concerned that the curriculum that has been used is somehow dangerous.

The Bad Guys fear that information about sex will cause people to have sex, and that people presented with all the options will exercise those options.

The Bad Guys are afraid that the public schools have been infected with a "liberal social agenda" that is leading our country into a morass of sexual disease and sinful living.

Their response is to have a whole new approach to education. Rather than being presented with all the facts of sex, children will be "taught" the CORRECT WAY OF LIFE.

Perhaps John Hart would call this a more "truthcentric" education.

The Bad Guys have at least one thing right. The "liberal social agenda" has insinuated itself into education in this country.

The evil agenda to which they are referring is this: to solve problems by educating people, in the true sense of the word "educating."

The Bad Guys are the same people who years ago attacked education in general as being full of "secular humanism."

They claimed this was its own religion, of sorts, and should suffer the same restrictions in the schools as, say, Christianity.

My fellow columnist John Hart may be one of the Bad Guys.

He recently accused higher education of being infected with "relativism" and argued that we should be learning objective truth, not every truth of each individual culture.

The Bad Guys say there can be no type of education that does not instill some sort of values in the student. So, they say, in the absence of values-free education, we should teach the right values and the right truth.

For John, the objective truth is the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

For the folks in Texas, the truth that they want taught is that abstinence is the only solution. They think any further information would be detrimental.

The Bad Guys may be right about education. Maybe there is no way to teach somebody without imparting some sort of value system.

If so, then we have a cultural war on our hands. On one side, we have the Bad Guys, who preach a "truth" that is founded on ignorance and superstition.

On the other side, there's me, and whoever else doesn't think that education should be propaganda and dogma.

The Bad Guys aren't all right-wingers. The only defining characteristic of the Bad Guys is that they don't want you to know the facts.

They want to figure out what is right for you ahead of time and teach you the "true path."

And some of the Bad Guys are winning. It started with the high-school drug education texts. When D.A.R.E. took over drug education, it started spewing lies in order to brainwash kids, making blatant falsifications like, "LSD will make your head explode."

Now it is the next easy target: sex education.

This is not something that we can let go on very long. We have to fight for an enlightened, educated culture in which everybody knows the ramifications of what they do.

So, I hope somebody responds to this column. People need to start talking about this a lot, or the Bad Guys will win before we even notice.

And I really hope the Good Guys win. If I'm still writing columns in 20 years, I hope college kids know what the hell "penis" means.

Don't judge a hare by its color

The Easter Bunny is Caucasian, by popular demand.

My wife has two real caged rabbits: Yin, a black rex rabbit, and her albino sister, Yang. Their personalities uncannily match the ancient Asian descriptions of yin and yang: Yin is passive, calm, wise and poised while Yang is aggressive, hyper, hot-tempered and clumsy.

It's odd to western minds that darkness is associated with wisdom, sobriety and elegance in Asia. We live in a culture in which the darker something is the more evil, the dirtier, the more mysterious, the more undesirable it is.

This was really clear as I was shopping Saturday night at a Wal-Mart in search of a black stuffed toy bunny to give my wife for Easter. Over the years she has received many white toy rabbits. She now wants a toy likeness of Yin, and I endeavored to find one.

I found green bunnies, yellow bunnies and lots of white bunnies in all manners of cute attire. I settled on a purple one because I wasn't about to buy another white toy rabbit. All about me I saw a crayon box of different peoples doing last minute Easter searches. I thought about the shoppers with olive, tan, yellow, reddish, brown and black skin who would bring one of these smiling Easter bunnies home to their children.

I thought about these children waking with faces aglow at the sight of what the Easter Bunny had brought. With eyes like saucers, they see their reflection in the mirror while getting ready for Sunday school, but don't notice, at least consciously, the disparity between their own skin colors and that of their snow white Easter bunnies. They'll learn later on that the darker their colors are, the less our society values them.

I'm reminded of the paper sack tests that stipulated that in order to attend certain black churches, a person's skin could be no darker than a grocery sack. There is still a good deal of discrimination and controversy within the black community over shades of black skin color.

A friend of mine was born in Africa and raised in the Bronx where classmates teased her about being "too black." This, coming from people wearing the red, green and yellow colors of Pan-Africanism, seemed hypocritical to her.

This intraracism was learned from white racism. Whites and many blacks tend to trust full lips, dark eyes, curly hair and dark skin less than fair skin, blue or brown eyes and blondish hair. The swarthier or darker a person is, the more contemptible, the less trustworthy, the more dangerous a person seems or is portrayed. Observe media depictions of blacks, and you will usually find more favorable treatment of those who are of lighter skin.

Light-skinned blacks have been more accepted by white society than darker blacks.

Former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Colin Powell, Bryant Gumble, Michael Jackson (the whiter he got, the richer he got) and other blacks have gone very far thanks to hard work, talent, persistence, and lighter skin. Notable exceptions are some black sports figures. Thankfully, sports is an arena in which ability counts more than race.

Imagine how white America would react if a very dark-skinned black male replaced Bryant Gumble on NBC's "Today Show." Imagine them watching a proud man with large lips, sleek ebony skin and a brilliant mind making small talk with Katie Couric while the nation's coffee brewed. Some whites would be upset while others would think the new guy was missing something that Brian had, but just what they wouldn't know (charisma? charm? credibility?)...

I hope there are exceptions to the generalizations I've made about whites (starting with myself), but there is no denying the traits of our society. The two races who earn the most money in America are whites and Asians; the races with the lightest skin colors. The race with the highest imprisonment rate is that of African descent.

But I digress. This wasn't about how whites' trust for people decreases as skin grows darker. This was a column about the Easter Bunny.

I have yet to find a black toy rabbit. With so many colors in this world, Americans have so far, decided the Easter Bunny can be many of them, but not black. Nature continues to produce rabbits of that maligned color unabated. I wonder when our perceptions of colors, skins and ourselves will catch up.

Steffany Carrel only wants to serve students

Dear Editor,

We wanted to write a letter on behalf of Steffany Carrel. Steffany was quoted in Friday's Collegian speaking in opposition to a proposed reduction in the student body president's salary.

Outwardly, this is an obvious conflict of interest as Steffany is running for student body president herself.

Steffany acknowledged this conflict in her debate. However, she was speaking not only for herself but for those students who come from similar financial circumstances. Keeping in mind the number of hours that the student body president puts in, it is clear that he or she cannot hold another job.

And, honestly, it is important that we pay him or her enough to eat so the president can do his or her job in office. The proposed reduction in the student body president's salary would have brought it to $250 per month, before taxes. That is hardly rent for most students.

When the senator who proposed the reduction was asked if he thought this would eliminate some students from running or participating, he replied, "I don't care." Steffany was telling us that she cares — that she understands.

Let us assure you — Steffany is not doing this for any sort of monetary gain. Her only motivation is to serve the students. We hope that we have cleared up any confusion as to Steffany's comments. Thank you.

FRENCH, PART DEUX

The French owe a lot to English, Americans

Dear Editor,

I am writing in regards to the letter submitted by Anne-Catherine Biehler and A. Rakoto in which they expressed outrage and dismay at Jared Savage's column, which they felt "savaged" the French language and culture. I'm not certain how they arrived at such a conclusion; however, their letter compelled me to add my own thoughts on what appears to be yet another example of French xenophobia and elitism.

I must admit that I've read many columns other than Mr. Savage's that were more effective at getting their point across with clear and concise thoughts, but his certainly touched a sensitive nerve. I must admit that many Americans have frightful accents and small vocabularies.

However, there're a few of us with vocabularies greater than 1,000 words and who know precisely how to use such a wonderful expressive tool as the English language.

It's no small wonder that Americans and Englishmen have had a profound effect on world literature. This is due not only to their creativity, but also to the quality of the language itself — a quality the French language is lacking.

Getting back to the point, I believe there are really two reasons for this sudden French backlash to English. The first is that they possess a grotesquely oversized inferiority complex. This, I believe, comes from having had to endure the embarrassment of watching France collapse in 1940 to Hitler's armies, thus forcing them to call upon both the English and Americans to rescue them from the Nazi hordes.

Need I remind you that there would be precious little of your l'Academie Française had it not been for Britain and the United States. It's a pity that General de Gaulle didn't have the skill or the army to save France himself, even though he was allowed to enter Paris first for the sake of French self-respect.

Secondly, I believe that this hatred of English stems from numerous French armies having suffered defeats at the hands of too many capable Englishmen, notably Marlborough, Wellington, Nelson and Henry V.

I am convinced that the names of Blenheim, Waterloo, Trafalgar and Agincourt still conjure up bitter memories for countless French, thus leaving a bitter taste in their mouths when forced to say "cheeseburger" or "le jazz cool."

In regard to the American and the French revolutions, the differences are obvious. The most important of these is the fact the Americans never let their own cause become marred by a bloody free-for-all led by the reprehensible and monstrous Danton, Marat and Robespierre. You won't find any Reign of Terror on this side of the Atlantic. The closest we've ever come to power-hungry militant emperors was Ronald Reagan, and he was elected.

The absurdity of the aforementioned letter is that the French believe they can actually forbid the usage of certain words. There are ulterior motives for seeking a pure language, compensating for their own broken pride.

The message here is that English speakers around the world are secure enough in their own language to readily accept foreign words and phrases that enrich their language. Perhaps one day the French will be secure enough in themselves to accept a word like "cheeseburger." Until that day, how do you say "cheeseburger" in French? "Le burger de boeuf avec fromage"?

Study abroad offers cultural trips

ROBYN NASH
Collegian

Many K-State students get to experience another culture and learn about different countries' traditions through various study-abroad programs offered on campus.

The study abroad office offers eight exchange programs, Barry Michie, director of study abroad, said.

The largest program is the International Studies Exchange Program, which links students to more than 100 universities across the world.

Students who are accepted into the program are responsible for paying in-state fees, even if they are from out of state, and a housing and dining contract that covers the entire nine months they are away, including breaks.

Students are also responsible for a $25 enrollment fee, which keeps them enrolled in K-State even though they are not attending classes on campus.

This way they can still get their financial-aid packets and will not have any difficulty enrolling when they return, Michie said.

Anoland de Leon, senior in French and political science, attended the Université de Franche-Comté in France during the 1992-93 school year through the ISEP program.

"I wanted to work on my accent. I wanted to improve my communications skills," de Leon said.

"You have to be a motivated person who can take chances because it can be very frustrating at times, especially at the beginning."

"You have to be flexible and accept the fact that there is an entire world out there that is not the United States," de Leon said.

Another program, which is new this year, is the ABEU (Association of Big Eight Universities)-Utrecht Program.

This program is supported with funds from FIPSE, the Fund for the Improvement of Post Secondary Education, which comes from the U.S. Department of Education.

Those funds have enabled the office to give scholarships to six students for $500 each semester they are away.

The exchange will begin in fall, and students can attend 20 universities in several countries including Sweden, Norway, Denmark, the Netherlands, Greece and Italy.

Randy Cook, graduate student in geography, was awarded one of the scholarships. He said he wants to go to Bologna, Italy.

"I'm a geography student, so I'm interested in the world, and I really need to travel. I haven't got to do much lately," Cook said.

"I'm going to have a little trouble at first, I think, but my mom is Italian, so I'll be able to bone up on it a little. And I studied it in college."

However, some students will not be completely immersed in the country's language at the beginning.

"There are a number of these that have English language instruction, particularly the Netherlands," Michie said.

"In Greece, all the instruction in classes is in modern Greek — however, for English-speaking students, they will arrange one-on-one tutorials in any classes they want to take because they really want exchange students."

The Utrecht program is set up like the ISEP with the exception of housing.

Other exchange programs offered through study abroad are bilateral agreements between K-State and the other institutions. These sites range from Prague, Czech Republic, to Lorraine, France.

The benefits for students who participate in these programs are both immediate and long range, Michie said.

"I think what it does is allow the students to see the world and, also, themselves in an entirely different light and perspective," Michie said.

"It broadens your perspective and viewpoint because it gives you something to bounce off of."

De Leon said she learned to look at things differently while she was in France.

"I learned a lot about being American. It made me appreciate the United States and the way they do things, although you appreciate the other countries as well," she said.

Many students who participate are involved in fields like engineering, business and architecture, Michie said.

"It gives students insights on how these types of business operate outside of the United States, which can be a tremendous leg up," he said.

Next year, Michie said, he will schedule a greater number of information sessions to inform students of the opportunities.

There will also be peer advisers, students who have participated in the programs before, to help students make their decision.

"Quite often, students like to talk to other students rather than somebody who went as a student 36 years ago," Michie said.

Cook said he would recommend the program.

"I think it's a good opportunity in college. It's kind of hard to do later in life."

Prisoner close to release dies during police pursuit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Robert Stewart was a model prisoner who could have been free in seven months after serving 14 years for murder.

Instead, he escaped from prison, stole a car, shot a police officer and died Sunday in a wreck during a police chase in southern New Hampshire.

Stewart walked out of a pre-release program March 26 at the minimum security state prison in Lancaster.

"A guy who is 61 years old, has served 14-plus years and has a parole hearing coming up in a matter of months is one of the last people who walks away," Department of Corrections spokesman Tony Carnevale said.

Stewart did have a history of escapes, but Carnevale said none were from a state prison.

Police spotted Stewart Saturday night arguing with a woman in the parking lot of a restaurant in Leominster, about 10 miles from the prison. When an officer approached him, he jumped into a stolen Jeep and sped away.

Stewart drove to nearby Shirley, where police Sgt. James Mickel pulled him over. As Mickel approached the Jeep, Stewart shot him in the chest.

It was unclear whether Mickel knew Stewart was an escapee. Police sent out a radio bulletin about Stewart, but Mickel might have pulled him over because the Jeep was missing a headlight, Officer William Wright said.

Mickel, 45, was in fair condition at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester. Doctors removed bullet fragments that were within an inch of his heart and he was expected to recover.

After the shooting, Stewart drove about 40 miles northwest to Keene, N.H., where an officer spotted the missing headlight early Sunday morning.

Cpl. Jack Zeller said he was ready to pull Stewart over when he heard a radio bulletin.

Zeller followed Stewart and then gave chase with help from other officers.

Stewart died after he intentionally rammed a state police cruiser in Swanzey, N.H., just outside Keene, police said. The Jeep rolled over several times.

The corrections department was investigating the escape and whether the woman Stewart was seen arguing with, his former girlfriend Kathryn Peterson, was involved.

Altman's departure nadir of tough season

The search list of possible Altman replacements include: Washburn's Bob Chipman, K-State's Ken Turner, Tulsa's Tubby Smith, Tim Jankovich of North Texas, Rick Majerus of Utah and Jim Molinari of Bradley.

DEREK SIMMONS

Collegian

K-State's basketball season was a mixed bag of highs and lows.

From upsetting then-No. 1 Kansas in Lawrence to losing coach Dana Altman to Creighton less than 24 hours after the season ended.

The 1993-94 campaign started so good, too.

K-State was coming off an NCAA Tournament appearance with the No. 6 seed and a 19-11 record. Altman was voted the Big Eight Conference coach of the year by his fellow coaches.

After stumbling in the first game, the Wildcats went on to win 10 straight non-conference games, before losing the conference opener to Missouri, 63-43.

But Wildcat booster Dan Lykins said he began to sense early that Altman might be thinking about moving on.

"We talked at the LaSalle game in January, and Coach said then he was very disappointed with the negativity of some of the big-money boosters," Lykins said. "He felt a lot of them never wanted him there from day one."

The Wildcats beat LaSalle, 67-63, on the road to mark their 10th straight win early in the season.

K-State opened Big Eight play with losses to Missouri and Oklahoma State, but won its first league game and improved to 12-3 by downing then-No. 1 Kansas, 68-64, in Lawrence. The Cats followed the win against the Jayhawks with a 71-65 victory against Colorado at home.

Things then began to crumble. K-State won just four of its remaining 13 games to finish the regular season 17-11 and a lackluster 4-10 in the league.

In the final league game, a 73-52 loss to Kansas in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament, the Wildcats scored only 13 points in the first half.

K-State seemed to find salvation in the National Invitation Tournament, beating Mississippi

Altman

State, Gonzaga and Fresno State on its way to New York. Jones scored a school and conference record 62 points against Fresno State as the Cats qualified for the NIT final four for the first time.

But Vanderbilt ended K-State's run, downing the Wildcats 82-76 in the semifinals. Siena beat the Cats 92-79 in the consolation game, giving K-State a 20-14 record.

The conclusion of the 1993-94 season also meant the end of the Dana Altman era at K-State.

Altman resigned the day after the Siena game and accepted the head coaching position at Creighton in Omaha, Neb.

Who will be the replacement?

Candidates include Washburn's Bob Chipman, K-State assistant Ken Turner, Tulsa's Tubby Smith, Tim Jankovich of North Texas, Rick Majerus of Utah and Jim Molinari of Bradley.

Chipman, Jankovich and Molinari all played at K-State.

"I want the job really bad," said Turner, who has been an assistant at K-State for four years. "If Kansas State would give me the opportunity, I think I could do something with it. They wouldn't

TAR HEELS WIN AT THE BUZZER

RICHMOND, Va. — Down by two points with less than a second to go, the North Carolina women needed, if not a miracle, then at least a clever play. And with a screen, a pass and a shot, the Tar Heels pulled one off. North Carolina inbounded with seven-tenths of a second left and Charlotte Smith swished a three-point shot at the buzzer, giving the Tar Heels a 60-59 victory over Louisiana Tech on Sunday and the NCAA women's basketball championship.

SPORTS DIGEST

► NO. 1 HOGS ADVANCE TO NCAA CHAMPIONSHIP

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Arkansas survived Coach Nolan Richardson's worst nightmare — Corey Beck, the heart and soul of the Razorbacks, in foul trouble.

With 17:38 left, Beck shoved to get position under the basket. Foul No. 4.

Beck sat down with Arkansas ahead 46-45. Ray Owses' two free throws put Arizona ahead for the first time since early in the first half.

Days ago, somebody asked Richardson what scared him most about the Arizona game. Foul trouble, he said.

"We will go as far in the NCAA as Corey Beck can carry us," Richardson said often.

Arkansas beat Arizona Saturday 91-82 to reach the NCAA championship game against Duke, which beat Florida 70-65.

► FLORIDA'S BEST SEASON ENDS ONE GAME EARLY

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The team that skeptics said shouldn't have been in the Final Four showed that it did, indeed, belong.

Too bad for Florida the best season in its history did not end with an appearance in the national championship game. But the Gators did everything else they could to prevent Duke from getting a shot at its third title in four years.

Few people gave the first-time participants in the Final Four a chance to defeat Duke, which rallied from a 13-point deficit in the second half Saturday night to beat Florida 70-65 in the semifinals.

Cats rout Huskers 14-1 during non-league play

JEREMY CRABTREE

Collegian

The K-State lacrosse team made Saturday's wait worthwhile.

After waiting for more than a half hour for Nebraska on Saturday, the Wildcats then dismantled the Cornhuskers 14-1.

"Everyone finally got settled down in the second period," Curt Thurman, lacrosse coach, said. "We then played our game and our kind of ball.

"I think that we were tense a little bit before the game."

After taking a 2-0 lead after the first period, the Cats opened the game up with four goals in the second period.

"We didn't play like we should have in the first quarter," Capt. Chris Irrig, Fort Riley, said. "Then we went back into the game, and played K-State lacrosse."

The second-period goals, along with seven more goals in the second half, buried the Huskers for good.

Irrig said it was tough to get psyched up for Nebraska because it was a conference game.

"We tried to go into the game thinking that this is Wichita State," Irrig said. "Nebraska isn't in our league, and Wichita State is the second best in our league. So, we told them to get up just like this was Wichita State."

The majority of the Cats' scoring came from three different people, as the Cats recorded a trio of hat tricks.

Stu Robson, second-year student in veterinary medicine, finished with three goals: one in the first period, another in the third and the final in the fourth.

Irrig then added a hat trick of his own, scoring three straight goals in the second period to help put the game out of reach for the Huskers.

Tondo Waldron also collected a triple of his own. He scored three goals in a row during the second period.

Since the game was a blowout the entire second half, Thurman said, the Cats got an opportunity to play a lot of people.

"We got to run a lot of people in today," Thurman said. "That gave a lot of experience to the younger guys."

Irrig agreed. "This allowed us to give the young guys some experience," Irrig said.

"We've got a bunch of young guys that haven't played a whole lot."

"Today's game let them play and get some needed experience."

The lacrosse team will play Kansas City on Saturday and then will play Sunday against Kansas.

K-State and Butler County Community College had a dual of sorts Saturday.

Due to the rain and cold temperatures, only Barton County Community College and Cloud County Community College participated in the KSU Invitational at R.V. Christian track.

The weather forced all sprinting and jumping events indoors at Ahearn Field House.

"We didn't want to take the chance of someone being injured this early in the season," Coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Better weather was enjoyed Friday for those competing in the first half of the KSU Decathlon.

Adam Milner, Brian Ginter and Scott Merrill competed for the Cats, however it was Matt Jeffery, competing unattached, who took first place.

Jeffery took the event with 5,967 points.

Cats return with 1 win against Cyclones

BRIAN ANDERSON

The K-State baseball team dropped two of three games to Iowa State at the Cap Timm Field Saturday and Sunday.

The losses tie the Cats with Nebraska for last place in the Big Eight.

The Wildcats (11-21, 2-7 in the conference) lost 11-7 on Sunday, and 8-4 in the first game of a double-header on Saturday. K-State took the second game, 18-4.

During Sunday's game, second baseman Mark Elsinger went 4-for-5 — three of the hits were doubles — with six RBI, including the game-winning RBI, to help Iowa State (9-15, 3-6 in the league) win, 8-4.

The Cats evened the score in the fifth inning. With consecutive walks to Todd Fereday and Chris Hess, Tim Decker's single to the right field corner scored both base runners.

During Saturday's second game, the Wildcats defeated the Cyclones 18-4.

Fereday went 3-for-5 with two home runs and eight runs batted in as K-State exploded for 18 runs in the second game of the doubleheader.

The biggest inning for the Cats was the third when they scored seven times.

Fereday hit his first grand slam home run to bring in Miller, Scott Poepard, and Hess.

In the first game of the double-header on Saturday, a pair of home runs from Miller — a solo shot in the second and a three-run blast in third — couldn't help K-State win.

The Cats committed four errors that led to five Cyclone unearned runs in the 8-4 loss to Iowa State.

K-State returns to Manhattan to take on the Creighton Bluejays at 2 p.m. Tuesday.

The game will be played at Frank Myers Field.

Seniors to guide team in Wichita

BRIAN SIEGRIST

Collegian

The K-State men's golf team will look for senior leadership to improve scores when they open play today in the 7th Annual Diet Pepsi/Shocker Classic at Wichita's Tallgrass Country Club.

Seniors Will Siebert, Sean Robertson and Chad Judd will team with sophomore Troy Halterman and freshman Chad Buckridge as the Cats tee off at 9 a.m. to play 36 holes.

They will compete against a 16-team field which includes Big Eight schools Nebraska, Missouri and Iowa State, and several of K-State's regional opponents.

The Wildcats tied for second as a team in last year's tourney.

The Cats will be looking to improve on last week's 12th-place finish at Southwest Missouri State by putting two seniors, Robertson and Siebert, into a previous-underclassman dominated lineup for the first time this season.

"We figured that it is time that somebody gets it done," K-State Coach Mark Elliot said. "We figured we'd give the seniors a shot to see what they could do."

CHEERLEADING SQUAD

Cheerleaders compete in national competition

The K-State cheerleading squad will travel to San Diego April 7-11 for a national competition.

MEREDITH REILLY
Collegian

The K-State cheerleading squad has been selected to compete against 14 other universities from across the United States.

The national competition will be at San Diego's Sea World April 7-11.

"We've been preparing all year," Marcus West, senior in criminology, said.

In order to participate, the squad sent in a videotape to the Universal Cheerleading Association that showed clips of crowd participation, a chant, and a cheer and a skills sequence, which are stunts such as tumbling and pyramids.

Three squads were selected from each of four regions in the nation based on a videotape.

"Everything we do all year goes on the videotape we send in," West said.

The videotape showed clips from the Copper Bowl, which demonstrated how the crowd responded and participated in the squad's chants. The squad's use of signs during chants was also shown.

Most of the squads in the United States belong to the association that sponsors the competition.

"UCA has about 80 percent or a little less of the market," Heath Perry, cheerleading coach, said.

"We're going against the best squads in the country,"

Some of the other 14 universities competing are defending national champions Ohio State University, the University of Kentucky and North Carolina State.

K-State's squad will perform a two-minute, 15-second routine. Amy Parish, sophomore in pre-medicine, said.

The routine includes a 30-second cheer, stunt sequences, pyramids, basket tosses, tumbling and diamond heads.

She said the squad is judged on the difficulty, sharpness and visuality of their routine, along with transitions and crowd participation.

"The competition will be fairly difficult," Parish said.

"The national champions from last year are in our region."

The competition will be taped by ESPN. It will air at an undetermined time this summer.

Melinda Carter, junior in elementary education, said she thinks her squad will do well.

"None of us have competed nationally," Carter said.

"But ability wise, we have all the potential in the world."

Jon Yeomans, junior in public relations, said how the squad places depends on its routine.

"If we hit everything sharp, we have a good chance," Yeomans said.

Newspaper, yearbook win awards

K-State is the nation's only university to receive two Crown Awards from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association for 1992-93, the most prestigious honors publications can receive.

The 1993 Royal Purple won a Gold Crown, and the Collegian won a Silver Crown.

Both awards were announced March 17 at the opening ceremony of the Spring National College Media Convention in New York City.

"It's wonderful for K-State. It's such a credit to the students that we have," Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications and Collegian adviser, said.

"For the students, it makes all the long hours pay off. I don't think the Royal Purple and Collegian give themselves enough credit."

Vanderbilt University and the University of Michigan joined the Royal Purple as Gold Crown yearbook winners.

"This award is about as good as you can get. It's comparable to the debate team's championship," Linda Puntney, assistant director of Student Publications and Royal Purple adviser, said.

Puntney said she believes the success of the Royal Purple is built on tradition.

"We have a fine journalism tradition at K-State, and the commitment and desire happens to result in those national awards," Puntney said.

"This is my fifth year at K-State, and each year the staffs get better and better."

Newspapers from Northwestern University in Illinois, the University of Pennsylvania and the University of Texas won Gold Crown Awards.

Newspapers from Amarillo

College in Texas, Oberlin College in Ohio and El Camino College in California received Silver Crown Awards along with the Collegian.

Last semester, the Collegian and Royal Purple won Pacemaker Awards, top honors from Associated Collegiate Press.

No other university had a yearbook and newspaper win both awards from ACP and CSPA during the 1992-93 academic year.

"(1992-93) was an exceptional year, and we were blessed with exceptional people running the paper," Johnson said.

"I think it's important for our readers to know they are getting two of the best publications in the country," Johnson said.

Fort Riley woman dies, others hurt

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JUNCTION CITY

A Fort Riley woman killed in an accident that left 10 people injured was among two people who died in weekend traffic accidents in Kansas.

Teresa Clark, 28, died Saturday night when the car she was riding in with five other people was forced off U.S. 77 near Junction City.

The car went down an embankment and struck a culvert.

A passing motorist stopped his van to offer assistance and the vehicle was hit from behind.

It was shoved about 300 feet into a ditch and through a fence.

It went on to strike pedestrians, including people in the car from the first accident and two other people who had apparently stopped at the scene.

A central Kansas man was killed earlier Saturday night when his car left the road near Halstead and overturned.

Authorities had not released the name of the man Sunday afternoon.

Slaying witnesses tell of 2nd gunman

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — There may have been a second gunman at the Hebron mosque massacre who used elaborate methods to cover his tracks, judges on the commission of inquiry suggested Sunday.

Muslim witnesses have said the shooting came from more than one point in the mosque, but Sunday was the first time the judges indicated they were seriously considering the theory.

Commission president Judge Meir Shamgar told army investigator Brig. Gen. David Agmon of a "thesis" the judges had that a second man opened fire on the worshippers from the far side of Ibrahim mosque.

Judge Abdel-Rahman Zoabi said the judges pressed Agmon on gaps in his investigation of the Feb. 25 massacre of at least 30 Muslim worshippers.

The judges noted that Agmon's report used ballistic and trajectory findings to place killer Baruch Goldstein at three different positions in the mosque, the main room in the Tomb of the Patriarchs.

Judge Eliezer Goldberg asked Agmon how Goldstein could have entered through the main entrance, shot several rounds, and traveled 25 yards without being attacked — unless there was an accomplice.

Agmon, who described the possibility of an accomplice as "possible, but not probable," said he believed Goldstein protected himself by shooting until he had returned to his point of entry, when he was set upon while switching clips.

Worshippers beat Goldstein to death. A Gilon assault rifle and seven clips were found next to Goldstein's body in the Ibrahim mosque after the attack.

The judges also raised earlier testimony from two soldiers guarding the site, who said they saw Goldstein enter the Tomb with an M-16 assault rifle, and said they saw a second mystery settler carrying a Gilon.

Agmon noted that Goldstein's assigned weapon, as a reserves major in the army's medical corps, was the Gilon found in the mosque. But he acknowledged that many witnesses had seen Goldstein carrying an M-16 in the weeks prior to the massacre.

The shells recovered at the site were all from the Gilon, Agmon said. But Zoabi suggested that the second gunman might have switched guns with Goldstein, and used a special sack to retain the shells from the M-16.

Agmon countered that a shell-retaining sack would have been cumbersome. But the extremist Kach movement, with which Goldstein was associated, has advertised specially made sacks to avoid police detection.

Sunday opened the fifth week of hearings. Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin is expected to testify behind closed doors on Wednesday. Israeli news reports said Rabin was considering allowing news coverage of some of his appearance.

Goldstein's widow, Miriam, was scheduled to testify Sunday, but refused to show.

Earlier Sunday, the mayor of the Jewish settlement next to the occupied town of Hebron warned that if troops did not stop Palestinian stonings of Israelis, another settler may attempt a similar massacre.

Rodney King civil suit opens in L.A.

The image of the Rodney King who once asked "Can't we all get along" may be tarnished by his civil damage trial.

Civil damage trial will provide glimpse into King's personality

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Rodney King's beating made him famous and his plea — "Can't we all get along?" — became a mantra of peace in a riot-torn city.

Now a civil damage trial is providing a closeup of the man on the videotape, an ex-convict with learning disabilities and a tendency to minimize his past failings.

Will this view of the real Rodney King undermine his chances of recovering millions for his injuries? More importantly, will it change history's perspective on the notorious police brutality case?

"Rodney King has never been a hero. He's a victim, not a hero," said Loyola University Law School professor Laurie Levenson.

But this case has significance no matter who Rodney King is. It will always be the case that changed things in Los Angeles.

King, who is black, was beaten by four white police officers following a car chase in March 1991. The beating was videotaped by an onlooker. The four policemen were acquitted of state charges in 1992. Those verdicts ignited three days of riots.

Two of the policemen, Sgt. Stacey C. Koon and Officer Laurence Powell, were convicted last year in federal court of violating King's civil rights. They are serving 30-month prison terms.

Except for King's notoriety, his case is similar to many others with the problem of a less-than-perfect plaintiff seeking millions for police-inflicted injuries.

The city tried to settle for $1.25 million; King's lawyers wanted $9.6 million. Experts suggest a jury award will fall somewhere in between.

"Police brutality cases are always difficult, because when people come in contact with the police, they've done something wrong, and it's difficult to gain the sympathy of a jury," Levenson said.

Unlike the first two trials, police behavior is not at issue in this federal trial. The City of Los Angeles, which is being sued by King, removed the question by conceding liability for the beating.

Jurors are being asked to set a figure to compensate King for his actual damages including medical bills, lack of employment income, emotional trauma, pain and suffering and psychological damage.

In a second phase, they will be asked to set punitive damages against the officers and other defendants. Punitive damages are intended to punish the wrongdoers and prevent a recurrence.

The soft-spoken King, who turned 29 on Saturday, testified that he is a ruined man, plagued by memory and concentration problems, headaches and blurred vision.

He said he wears a bulletproof vest and lives behind shuttered blinds with bodyguards dogging his every move.

Skinheads have threatened to kill him. "I feel like I'm a walking target," he said.

A high-powered team of medical experts is outlining the extent of King's injuries. So furious was the pummeling that doctors testified he suffers permanent brain damage and it was pure luck that he survived at all.

New kidnapping laws may help

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Although it's difficult to document, the State Department says the odds of bringing a kidnapped child home from abroad are improving.

In December, President Clinton signed a law making it a federal felony to kidnap a child to another country.

But it's too early to assess the impact that will have, said Howard Davidson, director of the American Bar Association.

"It's very easy to pass a law to say certain things will become federal crimes without providing the resources to investigators and U.S. attorneys and federal courts to fulfill the intent of the law," he said.

Mahmoudy said, "Every deterrent we have is helpful."

Perhaps the biggest advance came in 1988, when the United States signed a treaty with 30 other nations, agreeing to return kidnapped children to their home countries.

Courts in the home country then will resolve any remaining custody disputes.

The Hague treaty has been proven successful in returning children to the United States from the nations that have ratified it.

But almost half of the 806 abductions reported to the State Department in 1993 were not covered by the Hague treaty.

Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and Syria — among the nations least cooperative in returning children to the United States — have not signed.

"The State Department isn't doing a whole heck of a lot to give the parents in non-Hague countries any hope," said Frederick Rooney, a Bethlehem, Pa., attorney who does pro bono work for women whose children are in the Middle East.

There is another treaty in which nations agree to work together on children's issues, including international kidnapping.

Federal spending increases with entitlements in '93

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Uncle Sam spent an average of $4,599 for every American last year, handing out money for grants and benefits; to buy goods and services; and to pay government salaries.

That was up more than $200 per person from the year before.

Overall, the federal government spent $1.25 trillion last fiscal year, according to new Census Bureau reports on federal spending.

Entitlement programs and grants for Medicaid, family support payments and housing accounted for 60 percent of domestic spending, U.S. Census analyst Robert McArthur, said.

Grants, benefits and subsidies were up 7.6 percent to $892.6 billion, while purchasing rose 1 percent to $201.4 billion. Pay for federal workers rose 2.8 percent to $166.2 billion.

Alaska, where military salaries give the economy a big boost, remained the top recipient of federal dollars, receiving $7,697 per resident in 1993, according to the reports.

Nine of the top 10 states, and all of the bottom 10, were unchanged from 1992, which surprised McArthur.

Population migrations to the South and West, decreasing military spending and a more emphasis on social programs may be reasons, he said.

Second in spending per resident was New Mexico at $6,929, up one spot from 1992 due to Department of Energy procurement in the state.

Virginia, home to major naval facilities as well as federal agencies in the Washington suburbs, climbed from fourth to third, receiving $6,824 per resident last year.

Maryland, second in 1992, dropped to fourth with federal spending of $6,803 per person in 1993. Hawaii was next, at $6,017.

Rounding out the top 10 were North Dakota, Massachusetts, Missouri, Maine and Rhode Island.

Missouri was a newcomer, up from 11th place, while Mississippi dropped out of the top 10.

The bottom 10, same as 1992, were: Illinois, Delaware, Vermont, Utah, Minnesota, North Carolina, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin and New Hampshire.

Other findings in the three-volume federal spending studies:

■ The Department of Health and Human Services spent the most on federal grants — $23.7 billion — followed by $22.2 billion from the Transportation Department.

■ The Postal Service had the biggest federal payroll at $39.9 billion, although it is self-supporting and doesn't receive tax money.

Among taxpayer-supported agencies, the biggest payroll was $26.7 billion in the Navy, followed by the Army's $24.9 billion.

■ Health and Human Services topped the list for direct payments to individuals.

Its Social Security Administration paid out $319.9 billion and the Health Care Financing Administration distributed $154.7 billion.

Roommate won't pay for stolen item

Dear Cassandra,
 I'm having roommate difficulties. I found out that a brand-new item of clothing that was missing for six months from my closet was taken by one of my roommates. Apparently she had "borrowed" it when I was gone and was afraid to give it back when I noticed it missing. So, instead, she took it back to her home town and planned to never return it. On top of it all, she let me believe that my other roommate or one of her friends stole it. Now because the item is no longer new and out of style, rather than having it back I asked her to pay for the cost. She and her parents refused. Money doesn't come my way easily, and I feel that it might teach her a lesson to pay for it. What should I do? I'm tempted to use blackmail.
 Signed,
 Getting desperate
 Dear Desperate,
 I'm afraid it sounds as if the relationship between you and your roommate is already severed. Here's what you do. First, make sure to lock your room to prevent her from doing this again. This will send a message that you don't trust her anymore.
 Second, I would recommend suing her. I'm not a law authority, so I don't know your chances of winning, but theft is against the law. Talk with the student attorney in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the Union for more information.

Phish hoists sound into mainstream

ANDREW TOMS
 Collegian

Phish, a neo-hippie band from Vermont, recently released its fifth album, "Hoist."

Phish has been playing together for years, and the band has a following similar to that of the Grateful Dead — people following them around the country and trading bootlegs of live shows.

Thousands also keep tabs on Phish via the "Phish-Net," a computer network that keeps fans informed of concerts and other news about them.

Phish combines elements of rock, jazz and classical music to produce an eclectic sound.

"Hoist" marks the first attempt to bring Phish's underground sound into the mainstream, a new direction for the band. Some fans have been offended by this jump into the mainstream, but the changes seem minor, and this is perhaps the greatest Phish album to date.

"Hoist" opens with "Julius," a meticulously crafted tune with a poignant bridge:

"And what's the return on the faith I've provided? I think I know now, but I haven't decided."

The first single from the album is "Down With Disease," which may provide insight on the band's decision to pursue more commercial success:

"Waiting for for the time when I can finally say, that this has all been wonderful, but now I'm on my way."

The music on Hoist is more restrained than on "Junta" or "Lawn Boy," but it's still classic Phish, with Trey Anastasio's guitar riding the themes Page McConnell pounds and tickles on the piano and organ into an incredible, upbeat orchestration.

Phish is well on the way to heightened success. The band's first video is out on MTV, and with this more-accessible release, Phish will find themselves in a greater objective environment, a change that should make them into an even stronger band.

CLASSIC CALVIN

Starting today, the Collegian will be running classic "Calvin and Hobbes" cartoons from the past. The cartoon's creator, Bill Watterson, is taking a vacation for the rest of 1994.

John McMeel, president of Universal Press Syndicate, said Watterson needs a break from the pressures of a daily deadline.

Watterson will use his time off to pursue a longtime interest in watercolor painting, Lee Salem, Universal's editorial director, said.

Stock market not out of woods

The market took a sharp drop last week. Some experts are worried, while others think it will rebound.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The worst may not be over for the U.S. stock market, pummeled last week by a barrage of economic and political news that investors have increasingly viewed as omens of rising inflation and uncertainty.

Many professionals don't rule out a renewed selling assault Monday when the market reopens from a three-day Easter weekend. But others say the respite gave investors an opportunity to rethink the impulse of dumping stocks. Some forecasters are even expecting stocks to rebound somewhat.

"I think it's hard to know," said Marc Chandler, research director at Ezra Zask Associates, a money management firm in Norfolk, Conn. "We've seen some indiscriminate selling. That's created some buying opportunities."

Sellers overran the market last week, depressing the Dow Jones industrial average by nearly 139 points, or 4 percent, from the week before.

The best-known barometer of U.S. stock prices, which now stands at 3,635.96, is off more than 8 percent from its all-time high of 3,978.36 reached Jan. 31.

Broader measurements of stock values also tumbled last week, a possible sign that a 3 1/2-year-old Wall Street rally is undergoing or has undergone what strategists call a correction, or a pullback to more realistic levels.

A key reason for the drop has been the Federal Reserve's moves to raise short-term interest rates Feb. 4 and March 23, reversing a five-year strategy of keeping rates low to stimulate the economy.

The Fed has said interest rates must be raised to thwart inflation, a step that ought to reassure investors.

But the Fed aroused the opposite reaction by creating uncertainty over when interest rates will stop rising.

That means strong economic news has been viewed with increased apprehension in the financial markets.

Last week, for example, stocks and bonds tumbled on a report of rising consumer confidence.

The market's behavior was complicated by the Good Friday holiday, when the Labor Department said job creation surged in March, another possible warning of higher inflation.

Investors had to delay their reaction until Monday.

Further complicating the picture is the Monday release of another potential market-moving piece of information, a monthly assessment of the manufacturing economy by the National Association of Purchasing Management, a trade group.

If its report shows unexpectedly strong March growth or much higher prices paid by factories for raw materials, the market could fall.

Against the backdrop of fear over higher interest rates and inflation, political concerns have crept into Wall Street's collective thinking as possible reasons to sell.

KC schools looking to diversify staff

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — School districts on both sides of the state line in the Kansas City area are scouring colleges and other school districts for minority teachers to recruit.

"We have a real effort here, but it doesn't do a lot of good," said Karen Swift, personnel director at the Hickman Mills School District.

The district in south Kansas City is relatively diverse racially.

The more homogeneous Park Hill School District north of the Missouri River has been recruiting, too.

After several frustrated attempts to find minority teachers in the region, the district recently sent an administrator, a parent and a teacher in search of black candidates in the South.

"It would be nice if we had a cross-section of teachers that represented our community, but frankly, we don't," said Brian Davis, Park Hill's assistant superintendent of personnel services.

But while minority teachers may be scarce, those already in the classroom feel free to share their heritage and multicultural issues with students.

"Part of becoming a good teacher is learning to reach kids any way you can," said Hispanic teacher Frank Madrigal, an industrial technology teacher at Wyandotte High School in Kansas City, Kan.

The percentage of racially and ethnically diverse Americans over age 18 stands at 26 percent, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. But in the age 5-and-younger population, 38 percent are racial minorities.

The number of minority teachers, however, stands at not much more than 9 percent in most area districts.

The shortage has existed since career opportunities opened up with the civil rights movement of the 1960s.

At the University of Kansas and the University of Missouri, few education majors count themselves as Asian, Latino, African American, or American Indian.

The number of minority education majors is woefully low, said Jerry Bailey, associate dean of the school of education at Kansas.

Most minority education majors grow up in diverse urban areas and sometimes they don't adapt to a town the size of Columbia, said Sharon Huntze, associate dean for undergraduate studies at Missouri's school of education.

Feelings of isolation have caused several education majors to transfer, Huntze said. Missouri is seeking ways to retain minorities in its teacher-education program.

For students of diverse backgrounds, an instructor with the same roots can make all the difference.

Fewer Hispanic students in Texas and California were placed in remedial classes when they were taught by Hispanic instructors, according to a study by the Tomas Rivera Center, a public-policy institute.

Perry says U.S. isn't ready for war with Korea

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The United States is willing to risk provoking war to stop North Korea's program to develop nuclear weapons, but "we're not on the brink of crisis," Defense Secretary William Perry said Sunday.

"We do not want and will not provoke a war over this or any other issue in Korea," Perry said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press." "But we will take a very firm stand and strong actions. It's conceivable where those actions might provoke the North Koreans into unleashing a war, and that is a risk that we're taking."

Perry said the CIA believes that North Korea already has as many as two nuclear bombs and is continuing to develop atomic weapons.

"I know they're lying when they say they're not developing a nuclear program," Perry said. "I do not know they're lying in saying they could very well conceive that having a nuclear-free peninsula would be to their advantage."

The United States and the United Nations have been pressing North Korea to allow international inspectors to examine its nuclear sites. North Korea has given no public indication that it is willing to do so.

In the meantime, the United States and South Korea have postponed deciding on whether to resume joint military exercises — although Perry said both sides were discussing a schedule Sunday.

The Washington Post reported Saturday that North Korea is about six months from doubling its capacity to produce plutonium for atomic weapons.

The United States' primary concern is to stop any further nuclear development in North Korea, but not necessarily to try to take away any nuclear weapons they now have, Perry said.

"At such time as we succeed at that, then we can be concerned about rolling back the program they have," he said.

Until then, the United States will continue to employ "imaginative and aggressive diplomatic actions," Perry said.

"We don't have to have results this week or next week."

"The problems we're concerned about will take a year or two to unfold, so we can be firm, but we can be patient, too," he said.

However, Perry said if the situation doesn't change in six months, the United States would move out of the diplomatic mode and into the mode of putting pressures on North Korea, including economic sanctions.

Asked whether he would rule out a pre-emptive military strike against North Korea under any circumstances, Perry said, "I would not rule anything out or anything in."

But he was careful to say that he thinks war is unlikely.

The North Koreans have a range of options they could take short of war, including terrorism or military harassing actions, Perry said.

Research says American teens are at risk, aren't getting answers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Some 700 million teen-agers around the world are struggling with increasingly complex questions about sex, but a new report says most are not getting the help they need to find answers.

Evolving cultural standards, the spread of AIDS, changing laws on abortion, a worldwide trend to delay marriage and economic changes are all affecting the way young people deal with burgeoning sexuality.

In a report released Sunday, Population Action International — a non-profit family planning advocacy group — concluded that millions, if not hundreds of millions, of teens are at risk.

Around the world, adults are reluctant to admit that their children are having sex, but studies in several countries show that most adolescents, no matter what their culture, are sexually active before age 20.

And the age at which sexual activity begins is decreasing as overall health improves, according to international studies. By 2000, a billion teen-agers will be facing sexual challenges and desires.

"The school systems in most countries have largely failed to meet the sexual health education needs of youth and children," said the Population Action report, "Youth at Risk."

Adolescents are less likely to use contraceptives than adults, particularly in developing countries, and many young people have little knowledge of reproductive physiology, the report found.

Approaches to sex are often affected by culture, but social forces are changing attitudes, the report said, citing the effect of urbanization, changing family structures and mass media.

"Government support for adolescent programs has been constrained by societal discomfort in acknowledging adolescent sexual activity and by the misconception that access to sexuality education or contraception promotes sexual activity among youth," the report said.

It cited World Health Organization studies in several countries to show that children with a good sex education are more likely to delay their first intercourse.

The best approach, the report concluded, is to encourage a delay in sexual activity while providing birth control counseling and contraceptives.

But the report said most family planning programs do little to reach adolescents; laws and practices often restrict youngsters' access to contraception and abortion services.

Budget bill goes to Senate

Another amendment also successfully passed which added $1.9 million to the budget to pay for new buildings at the universities.

Some of this money could be used for the Throckmorton science building being built on the K-State campus, Hochhauser said.

In addition, Rep. Carlos Mayans, R-Wichita, proposed an amendment, which passed 61-50, so no money could be used for the beef curriculum in the K-State's extension program.

He said some of the material in the curriculum included questions about sex, abortion and animal rights.

"If you want tax dollars going for that kind of situation, vote against my amendment," he said.

Some House members appeared perplexed.

"I think we need a lot more of an explanation," said Rep. George Teagarden, D-La Cygne. "I understand possibly this has been deleted from the curriculum."

The budget bill now goes to Senate, which passed its version of the bill earlier but will consider concurring with the House amendments. The Senate is likely to vote to put the bill into a conference committee, where House and Senate negotiators will work out differences.

The Senate bill appropriates less money to the regents than the House bill does.

Math staff says calculators are beneficial to students

Instruments to get the price for both versions that low, Scott Sowers, graduate student in mathematics, said.

"Most of my students have the $65 one. Even with a required calculator, it's not the most expensive class to take," Sowers said.

An average calculator does not have the same advantages as the required calculator for the course, Sowers said.

"This calculator graphs functions, and it gives you a better idea what is going on because you can see it visually, not just algebraically," Sowers said.

Smith said the calculator will help students in their future occupations.

"We have to be competitive. We have to know how to use these so we can design things quicker and better. Otherwise we'll lose our jobs," Smith said.

"I know it puts stress on students at first, but in the long-run, you'll be more productive."

Poll shows public skepticism about IRS, government wastes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — About two in three Americans believe the Internal Revenue Service abuses its power, but only 6 percent fear an audit this year, according to a new poll.

The poll was taken by Gallup for CNBC, a cable TV business and financial network, which is reporting the results this week.

CNBC said the poll found a link between skepticism about the IRS and a belief that government wastes a significant portion of tax dollars.

The belief that the IRS mostly or sometimes abuses its power was held by 64 percent of all those polled, and by 77 percent of those who think the government wastes more than 50 cents of every federal tax dollar.

The average response was that government wastes 47 cents of every federal tax dollar, 38 cents of every state tax dollar and 36 cents of every local tax dollar.

Seven in 10 are willing to pay higher federal taxes for either crime prevention or an improved educational system. Support for tax increases for programs drops only modestly among those who feel most taxes are wasted.

Woolworth's chief officers step down

Woolworth has announced its chairman and chief financial officer are stepping down until a probe into possible wrongdoings is concluded.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Woolworth Corp. said Sunday its chairman and chief financial officer were temporarily stepping down, less than a week after the store chain reported an internal probe into accounting irregularities.

William K. Lavin, chairman and chief executive officer, and Charles T. Young, senior vice president and chief financial officer, will step down until the conclusion of an investigation by a special committee appointed by the company's board, Woolworth said in a released statement.

John W. Adams, chairman of the company's audit committee and a board member since 1981, will be interim chairman and chief executive officer, the company said.

Lavin and Young deny any wrongdoing and said they stepped aside to allow Woolworth to conduct business as usual while the special committee looks into the accounting irregularities, the statement said.

The nature of the accounting irregularities has not been disclosed, and the company has refused to comment further.

Woolworth representative Frances Trachter said Sunday the investigation should last from six to eight weeks.

He would not comment on the accounting irregularities.

Woolworth announced Wednesday that it would publish restated figures for its latest fiscal year, which ended Jan. 29, and might have to restate results for the previous fiscal year as well.

The restatements were not expected to affect full-year results for either fiscal year, Woolworth said.

Woolworth, one of the best-known names in American retailing, is famous for the dime stores that once were downtown fixtures across America.

Woolworth has recently closed many of those stores while moving into specialty retailing, or small shops that concentrate on one type of product.

Woolworth lost $495 million in fiscal 1993, or $3.76 a share, compared with earnings of $280 million, or $2.14 a share, in fiscal 1992.

The company took a $480 million after-tax charge in the third quarter to cover a restructuring that included the closing and reformatting of nearly 1,000 stores.

Consumer pioneer dies of cancer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Betty Furness, who went from starring in B movies and TV ads for refrigerators to working as a consumer advocate and reporter, has died at age 78.

Furness died Saturday at Sloan-Kettering Memorial Hospital, where she was being treated for stomach cancer, said her husband, Leslie Midgley.

She was a Hollywood actress in the 1930s, and in the 1950s she became the well-known pitchwoman for Westinghouse appliances, telling millions of TV viewers "You can be sure if it's Westinghouse."

In the late '60s and early '70s, she worked as a consumer advocate, including a stint as President Johnson's special assistant for consumer affairs.

In 1976, Furness began a 16-year career as a consumer affairs reporter for the "Today" show. Her topics included fetal alcohol syndrome, car safety and secret court settlements in product liability lawsuits.

"She pioneered consumer TV news reporting, and she pursued it with intelligence, inquisitiveness and irrepressibility," fellow advocate Ralph Nader said when NBC let her go in 1992.

When Furness was picked by Johnson in 1967, consumer groups feared her association with Westinghouse would make her pro-industry. But she won over critics with her energetic advocacy on hidden interest rates, credit regulation and federal meat inspection.

After Johnson left office, Furness was appointed executive director of the New York State Consumer Protection Board and then commissioner of the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs.

Furness, born in New York City, appeared in 35 movies, most of them low-budget B films.

"They were appalling," she once said, "except for two — 'Swing Time' with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, and the first 'Magnificent Obsession' with Robert Taylor and Irene Dunne."

She was spotted by Westinghouse when she took a small part in a 1949 drama on CBS-TV.

She became a star from ads during the first televised Republican and Democratic conventions in 1952. A front-page cartoon in the Indianapolis News during the GOP convention had a character asking, "Who's winning, Pop? Taft? Ike? Or Betty Furness?"

"I'd been opening refrigerator doors for three years but when I did it during the conventions I was famous overnight," she recalled.

Baker considering run for the White House in '96

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Former Secretary of State James Baker is "thinking long and hard" about a run for the presidency in 1996.

"While I haven't decided I'm going to run, I haven't decided I'm not going to run," Baker said in Sunday's Houston Post. "I have to decide if that's what I want to do with a good portion of the rest of my life."

Baker, who turns 64 this month, served in key positions in the Ford, Reagan and Bush administrations, including a stint as Secretary of State under Bush.

He then spent a year out of the spotlight after moving back to his native Houston.

He recently has begun to criticize President Clinton on foreign policy, crime, health care and the economy.

He also has started traveling the country to help Republican candidates raise money.

Unlike two other likely Republican presidential candidates, senators Phil Gramm of Texas and Bob Dole of Kansas, Baker has no national political organization or campaign funds ready.

Assassination still unsolved

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY — At least seven people were involved in the assassination of the man who was likely to have become Mexico's next president, the attorney general's office said Monday.

The suspects include three men who had been hired to guard presidential candidate Luis Donaldo Colosio at the March 23 Tijuana rally where he was assassinated, as well as the head of the local security detail.

There was no word on possible motives for the slaying, officials said. Five of the seven are in custody, the attorney general's office said in a statement.

The man who confessed to firing the fatal shots, Mario Aburto Martinez, told police he went to the rally alone, but also said he belonged to an unspecified political group that has thousands of members.

Colosio, as the candidate of the long-incumbent Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI, was seen as a shoo-in for the Aug. 21 election.

Special prosecutor Miguel Montes Garcia said Aburto remains the man accused of firing the shots.

Of the other suspects in custody:

— Montes said Tranquillino Sanchez interfered with Gen. Domiro Garcia Reyes, one of the soldiers assigned to guard Colosio, "easing the access of Mario Aburto Martinez to a point close and alongside Colosio."

— Another guard, Vicente Mayoral Valenzuela, "opened a path toward the victim" for Aburto, Montes said.

— Mayoral Valenzuela's son, Rodolfo Mayoral Esquer, shoved and interfered with another army security man, Col. Federico Antonio Reynaldos del Pozo, "managing to distract him and thereby diminish the security measures."

— Rodolfo Rivalpalacio, who headed the local security detail, was accused of hiring the other three men, who have been widely identified as former policemen employed on a temporary basis to provide security for Colosio's appearance.

Two other men who have not been identified and who remain at large were also involved, Montes said. One threw himself to the ground in front of Cowboys dancing with each other, swimsuit-clad females tossing beach balls, and an archery exhibition.

No, it's not the end of the world, it was "Linguae Umbra," or "Tongue Shadow," an interactive performance by master of arts student Jack Sciacca.

The performance was part of Sciacca's master's thesis exhibition, currently on display in the K-State Union Art Gallery.

Sciacca said the performance was a ritual based on the Catholic mass, as well as the sexual rites of animals Sciacca has observed.

"Finding my spirituality has come from all of the things I've experienced, both consciously and unconsciously," Sciacca said.

Sciacca is an avid hunter, and has hunted elk, antelope, turkey and deer, all with a bow.

The exhibit in the K-State

Union Art Gallery includes the antlers of the animals Sciacca hunts.

The performance included Sciacca playing the accordion and harmonica, as well as videotaped scenes of wildlife and home movies.

Throughout the presentation, the audience was encouraged to get involved. Beach balls were tossed around the room, and the audience was also asked to repeat liturgy, similar to a church service.

The audience was also served a received a wax tongue, served by Sciacca's daughter.

Reaction to the performance was positive.

"It's interesting, a little strange, but interesting," Heather Klein, sophomore undecided, said. "It's kind of a take on the (Catholic) mass, but done in a very abstract way."

"The communion skit was good," Jeff Loetel, junior in physics, said. "It meant that he was in communion with the animals."

Sciacca's artwork will be on display in the Union Art Gallery through April 22.

► SOLDIERS SUSPECTED IN MURDER OF PRIVATE

Two Fort Riley soldiers are being held in connection with the death of Pfc. Michael Regehr.

Mark Meseke, media relations officer at Fort Riley, said the two suspects are soldiers at the base.

"We can't release their names until they are charged," Meseke said. "But we can say that the two subjects are white males between the ages of 19 and 22."

"They weren't in the same unit as Regehr."

Regehr's body was discovered by individuals conducting post clean-up near the base's water-treatment plant March 11.

The Criminal Investigation Division reported the 24-year-old Regehr died of blunt and sharp-force injuries received earlier that morning.

Meseke said the two suspects will be charged later this week.

"We're waiting on some more forensic evidence to come in, and then they will be charged."

After being charged, the next step will be an Article-32 hearing, Meseke said.

"It's just like a grand jury," Meseke said. "We will determine if there is enough evidence. If there is enough evidence, then the suspects will be referred to a court martial."

► TEENAGER MIGHT FACE MURDER CHARGES

JUNCTION CITY — Authorities are considering charges of second-degree murder against a 14-year-old boy suspected in the stabbing death of another 14-year-old boy during a dispute over a moped.

Police on Saturday identified the dead youth as William A. Wilcox of Junction City. He died about 4 p.m. Friday at Geary County Community Hospital, Lt. Russell Blodgett said.

The suspect, whose name has not been released, was being held this weekend in the North Central Regional Juvenile Detention Center on suspicion of voluntary manslaughter.

He will be formally charged today, Blodgett said. A charge of second-degree murder would make it possible to try him as an adult, Geary County Attorney Chris Biggs said.

Wilcox was stabbed at about 2:50 p.m. Friday at a neighborhood intersection after he and the other boy allegedly argued about who would ride the moped, police said. The boys knew each other.

► FALL EDITOR NAMED BY PUBLICATIONS BOARD

On Monday, the Board of Student Publications hired the editor of the Collegian for the fall semester.

Stephanie Fuqua, senior in print journalism, was chosen for the position.

Fuqua, a native of Wichita, currently works as a Collegian graphic artist and has been an employee of the paper for five semesters.

Health-care forum promotes discussion of reform issue

Concerns about current health-care issues and plans for reform were the focus of an open forum Monday afternoon in the K-State Union Courtyard.

The forum, sponsored by Students for Peace and Justice, was designed to educate K-State students and Manhattan residents about the future of health care both locally and nationally.

"The most important thing we want people to learn is that all people have the right to health care," John Pruner, senior in history and member of the Students for Peace and Justice steering committee, said.

"It shouldn't be just for the rich or the well-off, but for everybody," he said.

Jocelyn Viterna, junior in sociology/pre-law and member of Students for Peace and Justice, said the goal of the forum was education at all levels.

"We're not here to promote any political ideology. We just want to help students at K-State learn about issues they'll be faced with in the future — issues as members of the world and, specifically today, as Kansans," she said.

Dr. Bill Roy, chairman of the Kansas Commission on the Future of Health Care, joined a panel of health-care advocates to discuss possibilities of reform.

The financing of future health care in Kansas could be coming from a new direction, a health-care committee chairman said Monday in Forum Hall to a group of K-State students and community members.

Dr. Bill Roy, chairman of the state's committee on health care reform, said the financing of health care can come from three sources.

"Money for health care comes from taxes, employer mandate or individual mandate or from any combination of the three," Roy said.

Roy was part of a commission of 11 members who examined Kansas health-care reform through 58 public meetings.

"We used our knowledge on the matter and the input of many people across the state and from other states to develop a plan that decreases the current expense of health care and makes the health-care system more efficient," Roy said.

The plan moves health care to an individually mandated system in which individuals get coverage from one insurance purchaser, Health Care Purchaser for All Kansas.

This purchaser works through health service networks, which buy the insurance to indirectly sell to individuals.

To keep them from paying for something they do not need,

STUDENTS SKIP CLASSES TO PROTEST PRINCIPAL

WEDOWEE, Ala.—Dozens of black students boycotted classes Monday to protest the reinstatement of a white principal who threatened to cancel the high school from it blacks and whites dated each other.

Joining the boycott was student ReVonda Bowen, who filed a civil rights lawsuit against Principal Hulond Humphries for allegedly telling her she was "a mistake" because her father is white and her mother is black.

The boycott was launched by civil rights groups as the 680-student Randolph County High School, which is about 38 percent black, reopened after a week-long spring break. Humphries also returned after being suspended March 14.

The school board voted 4-2 on Thursday to reinstate him.

One white member resigned in protest.

Humphries, 55, who has been principal for 25 years, declined comment, but he told one newspaper reporter, "I'd like for you to leave town."

At a Feb. 24 assembly, he said mixed-race couples would not be allowed at the prom and that it would be canceled if they showed up.

Humphries withdrew the threat the next day and has said his comments were misunderstood.

FORMER MARINE WHO INSPIRED MOVIE FOUND DEAD

MEDFIELD, Mass.—An ex-Marine whose court-martial case was the true story behind the movie "A Few Good Men" was found shot to death three months after he disappeared.

David V. Cox, 27, was reported missing by his girlfriend on Jan. 4. He left behind an uncashed paycheck and the keys to his truck.

His decomposed corpse was found Saturday about a mile from the nearest road after a canoe spotted a white sneaker on a remote riverbank.

Cox had been shot once in the back of the neck and three times in the torso, Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt said.

"A Few Good Men," starring Jack

Nicholson, Tom Cruise and Demi Moore, was based on an attack in which Cox and several other Marines were accused of beating another Marine to death.

Seven Marines accepted plea bargains, but Cox and two others opted for courts-martial. Cox was acquitted and later received an honorable discharge.

Cox had considered suing film-making company Castle Rock Entertainment, his lawyer, Neil Kane, said shortly after he disappeared.

Police had no suspects. Delahunt said the motive also was unknown, but he didn't think the film had any connection to Cox's death.

NASA PREPARES NEW RADAR FOR NEXT MISSION

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla.—The countdown began Monday for a space shuttle mission that will use fancy new radar to probe the home planet.

"We're really pumped up about our mission," astronaut Linda Godwin, the payload commander, said upon arrival at Kennedy Space Center.

Endeavour is due to blast off Thursday with the most sophisticated radar equipment ever built for environmental monitoring from space.

NASA is aiming for an 8:07 a.m. liftoff, but it could move up the launch an hour to take advantage of better weather. As it is, a 60-percent chance of acceptable conditions was forecast.

The $366-million radar instruments aboard Endeavour will scan rocks in Death Valley, forests in North Carolina and Michigan, waterways in Oklahoma and environmentally sensitive sites elsewhere in the world so scientists can learn more about changes in Earth's ecology, geology and hydrology.

In addition, an $8-million air pollution monitor will measure the distribution of carbon monoxide in the atmosphere.

"It's really a flight that will allow us to look into Earth's past, present and future," astronaut Thomas Jones said.

FOREIGNER CRIME INCREASES IN JAPAN

TOKYO—Crimes committed by foreigners in Japan jumped 71 percent to a record high in 1993, police said Monday.

Foreigners accounted for 2.4 percent of overall arrests in Japan last year, although they make up only 0.8 percent of Japan's total population of 124.7 million, the National Police Agency said in an annual report.

Overall, the report said, crime in Japan increased 13.7 percent in 1993.

Meanwhile, it said, the number of foreigners staying illegally in Japan declined for the first time because of the nation's economic slump.

As of Nov. 1, their number was estimated at 297,000, down 0.7 percent from May 1993, the report said.

Japan does not allow foreigners to enter the country as unskilled laborers.

DOW SKIDS AFTER SELLING SPREE

NEW YORK—Stocks tumbled Monday in a renewed selling spree that initially depressed the Dow Jones Industrial average more than 60 points.

However, the market began showing signs of recovery by early afternoon.

Traders said sell orders flooded in after a three-day Easter respite from the heavy sell-offs of last week.

This boost was induced by a fear of rising interest rates.

"Given all that's gone beforehand, it's not surprising," Larry Wachtel, a stock strategist at Prudential Securities in New York, said.

The Dow average of 30 big-name industrial stocks plummeted 61.32 points to 3,574.64 within 15 minutes after the opening bell on the New York Stock Exchange.

STUDENTS GAIN FIRST-HAND EXPERIENCE IN FIGHTING FIRES

"Obviously, with something of this nature, if your peers can't depend on you or have to question what you're doing, then there's something wrong."

Chances are when the Manhattan Fire Department's fire trucks make their way to a fire with deafening sirens and persistent horns, a K-State student is on board.

As part of a state-sponsored work-study program, six students are working for the Manhattan Fire Department.

After completing a rigorous application process, students attend a four-week training academy before becoming a student fire-fighter.

The application process consists of interviews, background checks, physical agility tests, physician physicals and drug screens, Steve Burnett, assistant director of emergency services for the Manhattan Fire Department, said.

Besides completing the application process, students must be at least 18 years old and attend K-State or Manhattan Christian College full time to be considered for the job.

Burnett said the fire department started the program about nine years ago because it was a benefit to both the fire department and students. The department increased the number of people available to respond to emergencies, and students can take advantage of the work-study opportunity.

Student firefighters go through the same training academy that full-time firefighters go through.

They learn basic fire behavior, personal safety, how to set up the ladders and hoses, first-aid, CPR and how to protect themselves against hepatitis and AIDS, Burnett said.

Gene Bellner, senior in chemical engineering and student fire-fighter for two years, said he learned more than just firefighting skills.

"Responsibility is a big thing," Bellner said. "Obviously, with something of this nature, if your peers can't depend on you or have to question what you're doing, then there's something wrong."

"I also think professionalism is important. Granted, I work part time, but when I go in, I go in with a professional attitude and do the best I can. I make mistakes — everyone does. But what you do with those mistakes is what counts."

Student firefighters work part time during the school year and full time during the summer. During the school year, they often dispatch but assume the duties of a full-time firefighter during the summer.

Students are also on call 24 hours a day in case they are needed, but Bellner said he is rarely called in to fight a fire.

When he has responded to fire calls, Bellner said he just follows officers' orders.

"The officers have been working there for years, and they're better trained," Bellner said. "If I show up to the fire on a truck, my duties may include hooking the hose up to the hydrant and turning on the hydrant when they ask and going to the fire and assisting in manning the hose line."

Bellner said he helped fight the fire at Seven Dolors Grade School, 306 S. Juliette Ave., about two years ago.

"I manned a hose line for awhile, but then I helped salvage the gymnasium," he said. "We were trying to keep the water out of the gym, so I was squeezing the water out of the hallways."

Topeka to welcome health-issue lobbyists

Founder of Children's Defense Fund among health-reform visitors

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Marian Wright Edelman, founder and president of the Children's Defense Fund, is the latest national figure coming to Kansas to talk about Clinton administration reform efforts.

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., announced Monday that Edelman will visit Topeka on Friday to promote comprehensive health coverage for children. He said an estimated 80,000 of Kansas' 715,000 children have no health care insurance coverage.

"As we discuss the need for health-care reform, we need to focus on children," Slattery said. "We must strive to make sure that every child in Kansas has access to health care. I am pleased that Marian is coming to Topeka to help draw attention to this most important issue."

President Clinton is scheduled to visit Topeka Thursday afternoon for a health care town meeting focusing on small businesses.

In addition, Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala toured the University of Kansas Medical Center last Tuesday, visited Onaga Community Hospital on Wednesday and conducted a health-care town meeting in Winfield Wednesday night.

And, Bruce Reed, Clinton's chief advisor on welfare reform, held public meetings in Wichita and Topeka last Tuesday.

Edelman and Slattery are scheduled to tour the neonatal intensive care unit at Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center at 9 a.m. Friday, meet with hospital administrators and health-care providers, then hold a news conference at 9:45 a.m.

Edelman is a native of South Carolina, 1960 graduate of Spelman College and 1963 graduate of Yale Law School. She was the first black woman admitted to the Mississippi bar, and founded the Children's Defense Fund in 1973.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Parents responsible for truancy

Our society will never improve until we dramatically reduce the number of children who are truant and drop out of school

Officials in West Virginia are heading in the right direction in their attempt to reduce truancy — they are going after the parents who allow their children to roam free during school hours.

With one of the strictest truancy laws in the country, officers assess fines of up to $100 a day to parents of chronic truants. And if that doesn't work, the parents can be sent to jail for up to 20 days.

The laws are working — the drop-out rate for West Virginian students has declined nearly 5 percent in the last 10 years.

While some may think the laws are too tough, they appropriately assign the blame where it should be — on the parents.

If parents of 12- and 13-year-olds cannot make sure they are going to school, then they obviously do not care or need help in parenting.

This truancy law gives authorities the opportunity to help the parents or at least show them they are obligated to meet the educational needs of their children.

Our society will never improve until we dramatically reduce the number of children who are truant and drop out. And no child will value education if the message he gets from his parents is, "We don't care enough about education to send you to school."

It could be argued parents cannot possibly control their children all of the time, but that does not mean parents are void of the responsibility of enforcing school attendance.

If they are unable to handle the responsibility alone, there are social services to assist them.

They had the children, and in doing so accepted the responsibilities that go along with those decisions.

In this country, seeing your children off to school is one of those responsibilities — one that should not be abused.

Believers in afterlife forget what is now

"And the priests looked down into the pit of injustice, and they turned their faces away and said 'Ours is not as the kingdom of this world ...' and instead of bread the poor were given a picture of the bleeding, scourged and nailed-up Christ. ..."

—Marat-Sade

I love this quote. To me, this exactly describes some people I know. Some I have met here at K-State; some I know in western Kansas. They go to church every Sunday and sometimes on Wednesday, just so everyone knows how devoted to God they are.

Then they go home and beat their children or talk about the evil people who are too lazy to work.

Then there are the people who preach hate disguised as something out of some Holy Book.

Fred Phelps comes to mind. Some people get so caught up in the "afterlife" and actually getting there that they forget they are here. It doesn't matter that people are dying in the streets of Washington, D.C., or any other city in the world.

What does matter is the necessity that they believe in God. All their suffering will be rewarded when they die of malnutrition or of a wasting disease for which we can't find a cure.

And on Judgment Day, all the believers will be rewarded with eternal life.

Oh yeah, we're all waiting on that judgment day. That's when all the suffering in the world will be eradicated. That's when all the wrongs will be righted, when all the witches who were burned in the name of God will be avenged.

What if it never happens? What if you die, and that's it? The witches who were burned will never be avenged, the Crusades will never be rectified, the Inquisitions will never be righted.

The starving will die holding a picture of Jesus instead of having the food and medicine they needed.

Victims of AIDS will die as they are told God doesn't love them, that they are sinners, that they can never be saved.

What is this we can hold over the heads of people, making them hate themselves, making them think they are unworthy? What kind of religious book, written by men, says people will go to hell for daring to love who they want?

Why would God punish someone for loving when hate is so much more prevalent in this world?

It's easier to push away than pull close. If there is a God, then we are all his (or her) children.

All of us. And boy, are we the bad seed.

While we're waiting for God to pull the proverbial plug, we're letting people die of diseases that we've had cures for for years.

While we're waiting, people are dying of malnutrition, children are being beaten, women are being raped, the murder rate is rising, and the poverty rate is increasing exponentially.

It's kind of like the story about the guy caught in the flood. He let a boat, helicopter and plane go while he sat on the roof of his house. Finally, he drowned.

He was waiting for God to save him. See any similarity here?

Why are we waiting? We created these problems. We created poverty, homelessness and hunger. We can cure them. It's time to stop putting the blame on everyone else and help ourselves.

Some churches are already doing this, and I commend them. They see the need for homes, food and water, along with the dogma of religion. Some, though, are so intent on bringing the word of God to people that they forget it's hard to hear over the sound of an empty stomach or a screaming, dying child.

If you want to go to a foreign country and build some churches in an area that has no running water and no toilets, in which the people go to the bathroom in the same water they drink out of, then that's fine.

Bring God to these people who have nothing else. Then they can die knowing that although they suffered in life, they will be rewarded in the afterlife.

Maybe heaven will make up for all the people who looked but didn't see. Or even worse, saw and didn't care.

EVENTS

India Fest '94 offers diverse view of culture, cuisine

Dear Editor,

The name India evokes images of an exotic and mystic land. It is a land rich in heritage and full of history. It is also a land of variety.

The snow-covered Himalayas in the north, the sunny palm-fringed coasts of the south, the hot deserts of the west and the tropical jungles of the east all provide but a glimpse of the variety India has to offer.

Culturally, too, India presents a diversity unparalleled elsewhere. There are people who believe in different religions, are from different ethnic backgrounds, follow different customs and traditions and speak different languages.

Each state in India is proud to have its own culture, language and cuisine. Yet, the underlying sense of unity among these various cultures has helped India to survive and prosper as the world's largest democracy.

The India Fest '94, being organized by the India Student Association on April 9 at Manhattan Middle School, provides a rare and unique opportunity to see and experience the essence of India.

The evening consists of a sumptuous Indian dinner, an exciting cultural extravaganza and an informative exhibition.

There is a general misconception that Indian food is just hot and spicy. But the food, like the culture, offers a variety. From the delicate and enchanting taste of gulab jamuns and rasgulaas to the spicy and delicious chicken curry, an assortment of dishes drawn from all over India awaits you.

The cultural program provides a kaleidoscopic view of the rich and diverse culture that India is so famous for.

The ISA has attempted to bring you cultural presentations drawn from various parts of India. From the lush and fertile plains of Punjab comes the bhangra — a harvest dance known for its vigor and vibrancy. From Gujarat, we present dandia — a festive religious dance performed in tribute to Lord Shiva.

There is also a fashion show that will expose you to apparel from the different states of India.

Marriage is a sacred ceremony in India, governed by age-old traditions and performed according to customs set over many centuries. On this evening we will present an enactment of an Indian marriage in its traditional splendor — the holy fire, the festive garments, the traditional music will all be there.

The other attraction of the evening is the cultural exhibition presenting handicrafts, costumes, artifacts and traditional utensils from India.

Knowing and understanding a different culture enriches our minds and warms our hearts. It is something that one has to experience and understand.

This Saturday we bring you India in all its rich diversity. Make sure you don't miss it.

RODEO

Goats well taken care of; safeguards protect animals

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to the letter sent by Sally Jardine concerning the rodeo event of goat tying.

First of all, we would like to commend Ms. Jardine for her concern of the animals used in this event.

We empathize with those concerns and would encourage her or anyone else to contact us if they have additional concerns.

The sport of rodeo originated as a result of culture and tradition, and as an effort to keep our Western heritage alive. Specifically, the goat-tying event evolved to simulate the tying of calves for the purposes of doctoring and branding.

This event gives women an equal chance to express their skills since most women are physically unable to handle the 250- to 400-pound calves that the men do in the calf-roping event.

Numerous rules and regulations are in place and strictly adhered to in order to ensure the welfare of the goat.

The goats are inspected, and goats that are too small, sick, injured or blind are not used in competition. Also, in case of an accident, a veterinarian is on call at all times.

During a goat-tying run, many safeguards and competitive practices help to ensure the safety of the goat.

Any horse that runs over or touches the rope, with or without contact of the goat, will cause the contestant to be penalized 10 seconds.

Except in rare instances, this eliminates the danger of a goat being hurt by a horse since this will basically disqualify the competitor.

The throwing and tying of the goats is monitored carefully by judges, and the rule stating that any abuse, mistreatment or roughness will result in a monetary fine and disqualification of the contestant is strictly enforced.

Other general rules are in place for humane and competitive reasons. The same goat shall not be tied more than three times in a row.

Also, a minimum of three goats will be used in a performance. Therefore, the goats are used very few times considering that usually no more than 10 to 15 women compete in any one performance. We had five goats at each performance at the KSU Rodeo.

After the event, the goats are returned to pens with ample grain, hay, water and space. No behavioral abnormalities or weight loss have been observed as a result of this event.

Attorney general candidate Marvin Barkis speaks to supporters Monday night at the Manhattan Public Library about the goals he'd like to achieve if elected. Barkis said he believes that society is responsible for Kansas' crime problem.

Candidate pledges leadership

AMY L. MATTOCKS

Democrat Marvin Barkis from Louisburg pledged to bring leadership to the fight against crime in Kansas and called for more community involvement.

Barkis, former Kansas Speaker of the House, announced his candidacy for attorney general during a speech at 7 p.m. Monday at the Manhattan Public Library.

"We have a mess here in Kansas, and I need your help to clean it up," he said. "Together, we can and we will get the monsters off the streets, and together we will stop creating the monsters."

Barkis is basing his platform on better leadership, more community policing and crime prevention along with crime punishment.

"As attorney general, I will bring leadership to the fight against crime," he said. "This year, more than 200 crime bills were introduced in the legislature, yet there is no coherent approach, no systematic plan."

"I will bring all those in our criminal justice system together to develop a comprehensive, rational plan that we can then take to the legislature."

Barkis also said he would make the criminal justice system work again and that he would not cut the budget of the Kansas Bureau of Investigations, or KBI.

"The KBI is out of money to perform tests which are vital to criminal investigations, such as rape," he said. "Without those tests, the system is bogged down."

Barkis said larger cities need to go out and meet the people, to be seen in the community. He compared community policing in the larger cities to the small town police departments.

"Community policing gets police out of the police stations and the police cars and out into the community. Instead of waiting for crimes to occur, community policing programs seek to prevent crime," he said.

Martha Miller, Manhattan resident, said she was impressed with Barkis' involvement in the community.

"Whenever we had a problem he would be there," she said. "When he went back to Topeka, he knew what was going on and knew what to do to help fix it."

"If you commit the crime, you will do the time," Barkis said. "I will develop violent crimes units to focus on putting violent criminals and habitual criminals behind bars."

Barkis also said he would implement programs and units to prevent crimes. Special Unit for Family Safety would focus on the enforcement of domestic violence laws, including battery and harassment.

Student Conflict Resolution would be implemented in the schools.

A SCORE program is one where high school and middle school student peer leaders are trained in mediation and then, with supervision of a trained mediator, they work to resolve school disputes before they explode into acts of violence, Barkis said.

"This has been used in schools in the East very effectively," he said.

Barkis also wants to ban the sale of guns at public auctions.

"I supported the Brady Bill," he said. "I think that a felon who has served his time should never have another gun in his hand."

"I also believe that we've got to stop selling confiscated guns at public auction. It's ridiculous to put guns back on the streets at a time when we ought to get them off the streets."

Marriage, money can mix

LORI DAVIS
Collegian

Financial sacrifices and balancing budgets are a part of almost any college student's life when money is scarce.

However, when a student is married, money may have to be spread even thinner.

There are many issues and considerations married students have to make, Ann Coulson, assistant professor of human development and family studies, said.

Money issues, she said, are varied depending on the couples.

One issue couples need to consider is how they view money individually.

"The way we spend money means different things to us," Coulson said. "We all have different values."

Another issue married students might face, she said, is how being in school hinders the amount they could contribute to family finances.

This is especially a consideration for couples in which one partner is in school and the other is working full time.

Couples needed to talk about how they feel about sharing finances, Coulson said.

Communication is the key in dealing with money matters, she said.

Couples need to have discussions and decide together how they will spend money, she said.

No one specific method for money management will work for every couple, Coulson said.

What works for one couple may not work for another, she said.

Being realistic and honest in terms of money are two key elements also needed in their discussions, Coulson said.

Amanda Robb, second-year student in veterinary medicine, and Jeff Gardner, senior in elementary education, are an engaged couple who said they plan to concentrate on communication when they are dealing with finances.

"I think probably the most important thing is communication," Robb said. "I know a lot of couples have a hard time deciding together."

The couple plan to marry this summer. Gardner will graduate in May, but Robb will have two more years of vet school.

The couple have been planning how they will finance the last two years of Robb's education.

Evaluating spending now is one way they have begun to plan ahead.

"It will definitely be the major force in keeping our purchases low," Gardner said. "We have tried to curb our purchases."

Since Robb will still be in school, Gardner said, there will be additional pressure for him to find a job after graduating.

In addition to being self-employed as a marketing consultant, he said he is looking for a full-time job in the education field if possible.

Saving, working and budgeting are techniques Anthony and Elizabeth Feitel use.

"It's hard now, but it'll get better," Anthony said.

Aside from school expenses, the Feitels have four children under the age of 6.

With a family to consider, Anthony, senior in electrical engineering, industrial psychology and physical science, said both he and his wife could quit school and get regular jobs.

However, both of them said they felt the children were young enough to not be affected by the financial sacrifices, he said.

He said that in the end, an education will pay off when he and his wife find better jobs.

Planning and cutting expenses are crucial in their finances, Anthony said.

"You're planning not just for the next month, but the whole semester," he said.

When buying clothes for the children, they tried to purchase clothes that could be worn for a long time, he said.

The Feitels said there are many rules they follow to cut expenses.

Using coupons and buying the cheapest brand of products, unless the name brand is on sale, is one way they cut expenses, Elizabeth, sophomore in early childhood education, said.

They also try to encourage their children to save money, she said.

They teach their children to shut off lights and appliances not being used, Elizabeth said.

Even though money is crucial, putting it in perspective is another piece of advice Elizabeth had.

"Don't let money rule your life," she said.

Fighting about money is not going to do any good either, Elizabeth said.

Violence precedes South Africa's first multiracial elections

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — As the four-day death toll in Natal Province surpassed 40, an ANC official complained Monday that isolated areas had not received the peacekeeping troops promised under an emergency decree.

The state of emergency was declared Thursday for Natal, scene of most of the fighting between the African National Congress and the Zulu-based Inkatha Freedom Party.

But there was no sign it was achieving the aim of quelling unrest before South Africa's first all-race election April 26-28.

That fueled speculation that a summit this week — including President F.W. de Klerk, ANC leader Nelson Mandela, Zulu King Goodwill Zwelithini and Inkatha leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi — may consider delaying the vote in Natal to gain more time to resolve Zulu autonomy demands.

International mediators were expected to arrive this week to begin hearings on the dispute, ANC spokesman Carl Niehaus said Monday.

In a statement in New York, former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger confirmed that he and former British Foreign Minister Lord Carrington had been asked to participate.

However, Kissinger said he was still waiting for particulars about the proposed mediation and the outcome of Friday's summit.

Political violence has killed at least 41 people since Thursday in Natal, which includes the KwaZulu homeland.

But reports from KwaZulu police, South African police and independent peace monitors indicate the total could exceed 60.

The reports described isolated killings in far-flung regions that could not be immediately verified.

Natal and KwaZulu have vast rural areas where factional fighting mainly erupts.

Much of the fighting pits Zulu supporters of the ANC against rivals from the Zulu nationalist Inkatha Freedom Party, led by Buthelezi.

The worst Easter weekend incident occurred Saturday night, when attackers who identified themselves as policemen killed nine members of a family of ANC supporters outside Port Shepstone, south of Durban.

Local ANC officials said Monday the South African troops deployed in Natal under the state of emergency were protecting industrial areas while ignoring rural areas.

On Thursday, de Klerk promised a "fairly large" deployment of army troops under the emergency. But at a news conference Saturday, military officials said only an extra 500 were being sent into the province for a total of 1,200 troops.

The ANC, the nation's leading black group, is favored to win the election and head the first post-apartheid government. It has pledged to eliminate black homelands, including KwaZulu, created under apartheid.

ORIOLES START SEASON WITH WIN

BALTIMORE — Using something old and something new, the Baltimore Orioles opened a season of optimism Monday.

The Kansas City Royals, on the other hand, started their year in typical fashion — with a loss.

Mike Mussina began his fourth season with the Orioles by rebounding from a dreadful spring training, and newcomers Rafael Palmeiro and Lee Smith contributed in a big way to the Orioles' 6-3 victory.

Kevin Peterson, senior in recreation and parks administration, skates toward the goal as opponents try to stop him during practice Thursday evening at Cico Park.

You saw it on ESPN last summer. It's almost as popular as surfing in California, and leagues have popped up in Kansas City and Wichita.

The sport that is becoming the new craze throughout the country is not soccer, but roller hockey.

Yes, roller hockey. In fact, the rage has also spread here to K-State, as a K-State student is helping form a roller-hockey league this summer.

Kevin Peterson, junior in parks and recreation, said he felt the league would be another way to promote the developing sport in Manhattan.

"I was in California for six years," Peterson said. "When I was there, the sport grew phenomenally. Then I got into it, and it is a great sport."

Peterson is looking for players and coaches to participate this summer.

"We want to have six teams," Peterson said.

"Four teams will be the minimum. There will be 10 players per team, and this is for both men and women.

"This is for people of all different skills. There will be five or six players from the K-State hockey team in the league. They will be split up among the teams so no one has too much of an advantage."

There are several eligibility requirements to play in the summer league.

First, players must provide their own equipment, such as a stick, helmet, in-line skates, and elbow and knee pads, to participate.

Additionally, there will be a $10 entry fee that will go to buy the goal and goalie pads, Peterson said.

"Everyone will get to play at least one quarter," Peterson said. "Another thing that should make the league more attractive is that there will be no checking allowed."

Jake Kisel, senior in secondary education and K-State hockey team member, said the league will give people another excuse to get out on their skates.

"A lot of people have rollerblades," Kisel said.

"This way they can get a suntan and be on their rollerblades at the same time."

Hockey has gotten to be really popular, and there are some avid players around.

"I'm sure that people around Manhattan will jump right into this with both feet."

Kisel said it will be a change of pace from playing ice hockey.

"There is a huge difference," Kisel said.

"The skating is different. It is harder to turn on ice than on your rollerblades. That makes it a different ballgame."

Games will be played on the tennis courts between Goodnow and Marlatt halls.

These dimensions are relatively small, Kisel said, and that will cut down on the scoring.

"This will be a defenseman's dream," Kisel said.

"Everything will be close together. On a larger rink, people are more spread out, and that causes more scoring."

The league will play a regular schedule.

At the end of the season, a round-robin tournament will determine the champion.

"We will come up with some kind of award for the winner," Peterson said.

If you are interested in participating in the roller hockey league, contact Peterson at 537-4636.

Weather causes cancellation of 4 races

JEREMY CRABTREE

Collegian

Because of rainy weather on Saturday, only three races of the Big Eight Conference Regatta at Tuttle Creek Reservoir were able to be conducted, and the other four had to be canceled.

Kansas took home the trophy with first-place finishes in all three races.

In the women's four-person varsity race, Kansas

A took first place, K-State second and Kansas B third.

Then in the men's four-person varsity race, Kansas B took the title.

K-State came in second place again, and Kansas A finished third.

The women's eight-person novice race ended up with Kansas A and B taking first and second places. K-State took third.

INTRAMURAL SPORTS

Deadlines approaching for remaining K-State intramural sports seasons

WESS HUDELSON

Collegian

The intramural season winds down this month, and entry deadlines are fast approaching.

"The month of April is really when we start to close things out," Bryan Skinner, associate director of Recreational Services, said.

Designs for the intramural T-shirt competition are due Thursday.

Skinner said $75 would be awarded for the winning design.

The basketball free-throw entries will be accepted April 11-14.

The contest is Sunday, April 17, at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

However, the biggest event of the month and arguably the year is the intramural track meet.

"We do get some really good athletes," Skinner said. "There are some good times on our records."

Last season, 527 athletes participated in the meet, Skinner said.

The competitors are divided into four different divisions: fraternity, women, independent and residence halls.

Entries for the track meet will be accepted April 11-14.

The three-day event takes place April 21-23 at R.V. Christian Track.

"We have all the events you would see in a usual track meet," Skinner said.

Faculty and staff members aren't left out of intramural action, either.

On April 29, the Faculty/Staff Golf Tournament will be at Fort Riley's Custer Hill golf course. Entries for this event will be accepted until April 27.

The softball competition has already begun, and the intramural office will post the top 10 teams in the different divisions each week.

The softball playoffs will begin sometime during the last week of April, Skinner said.

"At this time, I can't set a specific date when the playoffs will begin because the weather is so unpredictable this time of year," Skinner said.

Several softball games are scheduled for today at the the Rec Complex.

If the weather does not allow the games to be played, they will have to be rescheduled for the end of the month, Skinner said.

NCAA TOURNAMENT

Hogs get respect with win

The Razorbacks, which were ranked No. 1 for nine weeks during the regular season, defeated Duke, 76-72, in the NCAA Tournament championship game.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — This ought to get Arkansas and coach Nolan Richardson some respect.

All along, that was Arkansas' rallying cry.

The 76-72 win against Duke in the championship game of the NCAA Tournament should help give the Razorbacks all the respect they believe they deserve.

Somehow, Richardson convinced the Razorbacks they'd gotten no respect, despite being ranked No. 1 in the country for nine weeks, the Southeastern Conference regular-season champion and the No. 1 seed in the Midwest Regional of the NCAA tournament.

Scotty Thurman's three-pointer with 50.7 seconds left nestled through the net as the shot clock buzzer sounded, giving Arkansas a 73-70 lead on the way to a 76-72 victory over Duke.

"Time was running down," Thurman said. "Somebody had to step up and do it."

Thurman had spoken a week earlier of Arkansas' quest.

"We've still got something to prove," Thurman said after Arkansas beat Michigan in the finals of the Midwest Regional.

"We want to play the last game of the season — and win it."

Richardson had said prior to the title game that a Razorbacks run like the 12-0 spurt that put away Arizona in Saturday's semifinal is "poetry in motion."

Arkansas did it Monday night just in the nick of time, overcoming a 48-38 Duke lead with a 16-4 spurt.

But it wasn't until Thurman nailed the big three-pointer that Arkansas had its title.

New sitcom evokes laughs without usual stereotypes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Meet Ralph Farquhar and Michael Weithorn, a couple of nifty TV writers.

These guys decided to create a fresh, non-stereotypical series about an inner-city black family. They shopped it. They refused to soften it. They sold it.

It's airing. Watch the debut of "South Central" at 7 p.m. tonight on Fox Broadcasting Co. and discover their work: an honest, heartfelt show that draws laughs without stooping to a mockery of black culture.

"South Central," with the gift-to-TV Tina Lifford as a single mother of three in Los Angeles, also refuses to blink at the tough issues that confront urban dwellers — so, prepare for raw emotion as well.

"We wanted to do a show that did justice to black folks who happen to live in America. It (television) just seemed to call out for it," Farquhar said.

The time also seemed right for a black-oriented show created by an African American, he said. Farquhar is black; his partner is white.

They developed their idea before South Central Los Angeles gained a bleak fame during the 1992 riots. Other cities would have worked as a setting, but Los Angeles had a clear symbolic advantage.

"The title 'South Central' now carries a very strong emotional connotation for people," Weithorn said. "They remember what they saw on TV, on the news. They bring to the show a knowledge of the world we're talking about."

"Against that background, we see one family struggling to do the best it can," he said.

Given sitcoms' increasing tendency to tackle issues, viewers may not flinch at the drama of "South Central." But can the majority see themselves or their lives in an often-serious depiction of a black family?

Farquhar said yes — a mother's struggle to protect and provide for her children is not a black-white issue.

Reader might be addicted to soup

Dear Cassie,

I have a problem. I love broccoli-cheese soup. In fact, I could eat it every day. Here's my problem: The Union has the best broccoli-cheese soup but only serves it every few weeks. I was wondering if you could pass along the word to the Union folks that serving this soup more often would benefit them greatly. I know I would buy food there more often.

Signed,
 Campbell soup champion

Dear Champion,

Normally I give the advice people are seeking. But I don't think your problem is getting soup every day at the Union. No, your problem is realizing you have an addiction. See if these symptoms are similar to what you are experiencing.

— You start the day off with a cup of soup, just to get going.

— You have soup by yourself.

— When you look in the mirror at night, you realize you spent most of the day with soup on your face. But you don't even care.

— Strange dreams

— Your shopping cart is so full of soup cans that it is often difficult to push. (That's not normal.)

— Inability to concentrate in class or on school work. (OK, so that is normal, but put it in context.)

If these symptoms seem familiar, then you have a broccoli-cheese soup addiction. Talk with your friends about this problem and seek professional help.

Virus eludes French test

The HIV-1, group O strain has only been found in patients from Cameroon.

Blood test fails to detect rare AIDS strain

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A rare strain of the AIDS virus wasn't detected by a blood test used in France, U.S. health authorities said Monday.

They said the strain is found almost exclusively in patients from Cameroon and poses little risk elsewhere.

No cases of the virus, known as HIV-1, group O, have been reported in the United States, authorities said.

The AIDS tests used in the United States weren't designed to detect this virus.

If the virus is reported in the United States, however, the tests can be modified to detect it, said Donald McLearn, a spokesman for the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

Eleven cases of infection with the virus have been reported in France, and "almost all involve patients from Cameroon," according to a report last week in Science magazine.

On March 14, French health authorities recalled a single brand of AIDS test that was unable to detect the virus.

They ordered an "urgent re-evaluation" of other tests used there, Science magazine reported.

The group-O strain of HIV-1 has been known for about four years, said Gerald Myers, director of the AIDS virus genetic database in Los Alamos, N.M., and an authority of the "family tree" of the human immunodeficiency virus.

The group-O virus differs from both HIV-1 and HIV-2 and resembles the chimpanzee AIDS virus, Myers said.

He said there is little risk the virus could pose an important threat to public health outside of Cameroon.

"So far as I'm aware, there is only one of many, many diagnostic kits that is failing to pick it up," Myers said in a telephone interview.

Dr. Harold Jaffe of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention agreed that the rare virus was "not likely to be an important problem in the United States."

There are few Cameroon residents in the United States, Jaffe explained, and they cannot donate blood because of the prevalence of malaria in the African country.

Even in Cameroon, the strain is responsible for fewer than 10 percent of AIDS virus infections, Jaffe said.

Biosphere break-in damages stability, atmosphere of dome

Two former occupants are accused of the deed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORACLE, Ariz. — Managers of Biosphere 2 Monday accused two people who once lived inside the self-contained environmental experiment of breaking in and damaging seals that exclude outside air, officials said.

The break-in came two days after the Biosphere's main backer, Texas billionaire Edward P. Bass, got a federal judge to oust the project's top managers over allegations of financial and scientific mismanagement.

Managers of the $150 million ecological project in the desert 35 miles northeast of Tucson refused to release details of the break-in.

But they told a Pinal County sheriff's detective that seals had been broken and the project had been "contaminated" with outside air, sheriff's spokeswoman Belia Fessenden said.

Seven people are living inside the three-acre glass dome, sealed from the outside world in an attempt to operate a self-sustaining environment by recycling air, water and wastes.

Biosphere officials told the detectives that former Biosphere crew members Abigail Alling and Mark Van Thillo called to take responsibility, Fessenden said.

"From what I understand, they entered the secured area, broke seals, opened doors," Fessenden said.

Also damaged, she said, were "glass valves" known as lungs that are designed to keep air pressure stable inside the dome.

While it wasn't proven the pair was responsible, Fessenden said it is clear the damage was done from inside the dome.

Sheriff's detectives were looking for Alling and Van Thillo, she said.

Biosphere officials refused to elaborate on a brief news release that said there had been an early-morning "act of sabotage intended to terminate the atmospheric integrity" of the dome.

It said there had been no significant damage to the technical systems or the structure or injury to the crew.

Four of the original crew of eight have left the project, but as of last week, officials said Alling and Van Thillo remained on the payroll.

A federal judge in Texas named a receiver to run the project for Bass, but Fessenden didn't know which faction in management the detective was dealing with.

Alling and Van Thillo were among a crew of four men and four women who emerged from the dome Sept. 26, 1993, after a two-year stay punctuated by controversy over the management's belated acknowledgement of several setbacks.

Bass, who has had ties to some of the project's top managers since their days on a theater-oriented New Mexico commune in the 1970s, got a federal court order barring Margaret Augustine, president and chief executive officer of Space Biospheres Ventures, from the project.

Also barred were John Allen, a vice president, and three others.

The project continued to operate and to run tours over the weekend.

The seven people inside the dome are there for stays of varying lengths, none over a year, under a new policy recommended by a panel of outside scientific advisers that clashed with Augustine and Allen.

The current plan calls for allowing scientists in for short stays to do research.

NATIVE AMERICAN HISTORY MONTH

Tribal elder brings spiritual perspective to history month

ALIE BRESADOLA

Collegian

Speaking in a room overflowing with people, Omaha Tribal elder Elmer Blackbird gave the first guest speech for Native American History Month Monday in Union 213.

"I'm real honored to be part of the Native American History Month here at Kansas State University," he said.

"Since the invitation, I have been anxiously awaiting this day."

Blackbird is from Walthill, Neb., and is a spiritual leader of the Omaha Tribe of Nebraska reservation.

The religious customs, traditions and values of the Omaha tribe were the topic of Blackbird's speech.

"So many people misunderstand Native Americans and their religion," he said.

"As Omaha people, we are a living culture. We have our own language, own ancestral origin, own extended family plan and, more importantly, our own way of worship — ceremonial way of life," he said.

The sacred songs, prayers and ceremonies are all to give guidance, protection during difficulties, and to keep the people in harmony, he said.

"Our people have high regard to God's creation — we are sensitive, appreciative people," he said.

One of the ways the Omaha people once showed appreciation to God was to form their village in a circle with the entrance facing the east, he said. It faced the east to honor the beginning of each new day.

But that is in the past. "With the coming of the white people, the Omaha signed a treaty in 1854 with the U.S. government to give up their land," Blackbird said.

This has broken up the village system, and then the Omaha started losing their traditions and values.

However, these traditions are now coming back.

Instead of the village being in a circle to honor God, they conduct their worship services in a circle, with the church entrance facing the east.

"Our church is a real humble church — we don't have a real beautiful cathedral," he said.

In the warm months, the Omaha tribes have their services in tee-pees.

The congregation sits on the earth, and the altar in the middle is also made of earth. The service begins at sundown, and ends at sunrise.

Each part of the tee-pee represents something sacred to the tribe. The flaps at the top represent a mother's welcoming arms. The 13 poles that construct the tee-pee represent the 12 disciples of God, and the 13th represents Jesus, he said.

Actually, they don't practice their religion with this church. Not entirely, anyway.

Blackbird also spoke about a tradition that does not have Constitutional protection — the use of Peyote.

Peyote, an illegal herb, has been a way of worship since the 1800s. However, it is an important part of their ceremonies, he said.

"For the true believers of the Native American church, we feel this way of worship and use of peyote ... is consecrated with power to build body, mind and spirit," he said.

"We believe this holy herb is the flesh of God."

The Food and Drug Administration denies the Omaha tribe the use of this herb.

"We are the first Americans, yet we can't enjoy some of the same freedoms you people enjoy," Blackbird said.

There is legislation in U.S. Congress to decide if the Omaha tribe can use Peyote in its services. It is called the Native American Free Exercise Religion Act, and it is waiting to be presented to the House of Representatives.

"We're fighting for freedom of religion," Blackbird said. "We want freedom of religion," Blackbird said.

"Our people have high regard to God's creation. We are sensitive, appreciative people."

Heroin-use epidemic threatens U.S.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A government report warned Monday of a possible U.S. heroin epidemic in the 1990s and said traffickers from Colombia and elsewhere in Latin America are poised to cash in.

"In the past five years, there has been a steady increase in the flow and purity of heroin to the U.S., suggesting that the taste for the drug is growing," the State Department report said.

It said this was a logical consequence of more than a decade of cocaine abuse since it is normal for a depressant drug such as heroin to succeed a stimulant such as cocaine.

The implications are serious, the report said, because heroin can hold its prey for decades while the staying power of cocaine is usually limited to five years.

Economics also are contributing to the revival of heroin.

"While at U.S. street prices, cocaine and heroin are competitive, at the wholesale level heroin has a strong advantage," the report said.

"With the likelihood that heroin will be to the 1990s what cocaine was to the 1980s, Latin American trafficking organizations are poised to cash in on a heroin epidemic," the report said.

Colombia was cited as a country where cocaine traffickers are diversifying into opium and heroin.

Incipient poppy cultivation also is under way in Peru and Ecuador.

It added that heroin brokers in Southeast and Southwest Asia collaborate with Nigerian drug enterprises to emulate the marketing success of the Medellín and Cali cocaine cartels.

On Friday, President Clinton added Nigeria to the list of countries he said are not cooperating in U.S. anti-drug efforts.

The other countries, held over from last year, are Burma, Iran and Syria.

Countries on the list are prohibited from receiving U.S. backing in their requests for assistance from international lending institutions. There are other economic penalties as well.

Massacre probe continues; testimony backs theory

Police suspect a second gunman was involved in the Palestinian mosque shooting.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM— A police ballistics expert testified Monday that one shell found at the site of the Hebron mosque massacre was fired by a rifle whose owner has not been tracked down, reinforcing the theory of a second gunman.

During questioning of a Palestinian hospital director, it also emerged that fragments from three types of bullets were extracted from victims of the Feb. 25 shootings.

Justices asked to examine 10 fragments extracted from the wounded at Hebron's Ahli Hospital that hadn't been turned over to police.

Hearings of the massacre probe are expected to wind up on Wednesday, when Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin testifies behind closed doors.

The directors of Ahli and Muqassas Hospital in Jerusalem alleged that victims received slow or inadequate care because soldiers delayed ambulances at roadblocks, fired at visitors in a hospital yard and because Arab hospitals in general receive inferior equipment to Israeli establishments.

Justice Eliezer Goldberg, of the five-member panel, reacted by accusing Palestinians of rejecting Israeli offers of medical assistance for political reasons.

Inspector Lior Nadivi of the national police said they hadn't determined which weapon fired one of 115 bullet casings collected by forensic experts after the rampage by gunman Baruch Goldstein in which 30 Palestinians were killed and dozens wounded.

Tests showed that 109 were fired by the automatic rifle used by Goldstein. Another five were fired by soldiers' rifles, Nadivi added.

But one shell didn't match any of more than 15 Galil rifles issued soldiers serving near the site on that day, Nadivi said.

"I still don't know from which gun it was fired," he said. "I know it wasn't fired by any of the guns that I checked."

Palestinian witnesses have testified there was more than one gunman, and the panel suggested during Sunday's session that the apparent trajectories of some bullets had led them to consider whether there was a second assailant.

Army investigator Brig. Gen. David Agmon described the possibility of an accomplice as "possible, but not probable" in Sunday's session.

He believed Goldstein tried to protect himself by moving around and shooting until he returned to his point of entry.

Monday's testimony from a second police forensics expert, Baruch Segal, also suggested the possibility of a second gunman.

Israel, PLO agree to deploy police

Palestinian officers will assess need for a police force

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — The Palestine Liberation Organization and Israel agreed Monday to station approximately 9,000 Palestinian police in the Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho, the PLO's chief delegate said.

But negotiators bogged down over other details of the deployment that will mark the first step toward Palestinian self-rule in the occupied lands, and the problems looked set to delay the arrival of the police force.

Both sides agreed last week to accelerate talks on deploying Palestinian police in the occupied territories even before Israeli troops withdraw.

Negotiators had said the first police units might arrive as early as this week.

The PLO's chief delegate, Nabil Shaath, refused to give the exact figure that police agreed upon, saying negotiators were "waiting for authorization."

But when asked if 9,000 was the agreed figure, he said "approximately."

The Palestinians originally demanded 10,000 police for Gaza and Jericho, while Israel argued for 8,500.

Shaath said a delegation of Palestinian officers would visit the territories in the next two days to assess the needs of the police force.

But he said other issues surrounding the deployment needed more negotiation.

"We are in the process of negotiating the exact schedule, the nature of the force going down, their timing, their weapons, everything," Shaath said. "We have not reached an agreement. We will try to reach one."

Still, both Shaath and chief Israeli negotiator Maj. Gen. Amnon Shahak said they expected the negotiations to succeed.

The negotiations on the police force are occurring as part of talks on implementing an agreement for limited Palestinian autonomy in the occupied territories.

The overall talks resumed last Thursday after being suspended since a Jewish settler massacred 30 worshippers at a Hebron mosque on Feb. 25.

Among the disagreements concerning the police was a dispute over how advance units of Palestinian police would arrive in Gaza and Jericho, Israel television and Egypt's Middle East News Agency reported.

The reports said Israel wanted the Palestinians to come in buses, with their weapons arriving separately, while the PLO insisted the police go on military trucks carrying their guns.

Diplomats from Norway, Denmark and Italy, the three nations expected to supply 160 observers in Hebron, met Monday with the PLO and Israeli negotiators.

Hans Lehne, the Norwegian representative, said he saw no problems in forming the force, but noted details have to be worked out before official approval is given by the three parliaments. No date for deployment has been decided, he said.

Speaker concerned by universal care, supports plan designed for Kansans

"Kansans shouldn't have to take a one-size-fits-all health-coverage plan," Roy said.

The result of Roy's beliefs is the Kansas Specific Health Care Plan, which he said will cut administrative costs while providing structured competition among insurance providers.

"The plan is designed specifically for Kansans," Roy said.

Eleven Kansans selected by the Legislature, including Roy, produced the plan over a period of 27 months.

The forum's panel also included state Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, who talked about the progress of reform bills in the Legislature.

"I wish I could come and say the legislature has made great strides or even reacted to health reform," she said.

"If there's going to be any action taken to follow up with the proposals, it will have to be done by executive order."

Panelist Mark Brown-Barnett, president and CEO of the Saint Mary Hospital, said money and access are the two crisis issues with health care.

"Traditionally, health care has been considered a privilege," Brown-Barnett said. "We're seeing a change in society as health care is becoming a right. With that, health care becomes a justice issue."

The forum also gave audience members a chance to voice their own concerns and opinions about health-care reform.

"In this country, the availability for health-care coverage is tied to employment," Mary Greene, senior in English, said. "With companies going bankrupt all the time, people are falling through the cracks."

"Because there are so many interest groups, my worst fear is that the Clinton plan will be disjointed. Why not just have one efficient system that covers everybody?"

Greene said one of the reasons she takes classes is because of the health care K-State provides.

"It's a creative way of giving myself health-care benefits," Greene said.

Forum's focus on health issues offers different viewpoints a second, third or even fourth time," Roy said. Individuals would pay a fee for each service. This way, the user is able to make a choice in the benefits he or she needs.

"With everyone in the same boat, paying to the same purchaser and getting only what they need, it is a more effective system," Roy said.

One K-State student said he understood the importance of finding a solution to the increasing costs of health care.

"I know how expensive insurance and health care are because so many people can't afford insurance, and the plan of paying for only what you use makes a lot of sense," Arlen Flax, senior in park resource management, said.

An advantage of the individual mandate is people realize the costs of health care because they are paying for it and not their employers, Roy said.

Another advantage is the people buy what they need and not unnecessary benefits, he said.

Also, having individuals paying for their own health care and not having insurance companies in the middle eliminates administrative costs.

"The cheapest health care is when it's done right the first time and not when you have to do something," Roy said.

Colosio, apparently trying to block the candidate's path, Montes said. The other, who was wearing glasses, also took "clear actions to block" Colosio's movement and ducked down just before Aburto fired.

He said the allegations are based largely on a study of photographs, buttressed by testimony.

Colosio's murder was the most serious political assassination in Mexico since the 1928 murder of President-elect Alvaro Obregon.

Students, dogs escape fire

TODD STOVER
Sophomore in public relations

Collegian

Five K-State students got a rude awakening early Tuesday morning when a fire in their house forced them outside in 30-degree weather.

Todd Stover, sophomore in public relations, was asleep in the house he rents at 1830 Elaine Drive when his roommate pounded on his door and said the house was on fire.

"I opened my door, and this big wall of smoke attacked me," Stover said.

The roommate, Dustin Baxter, senior in computer science, said he was sleeping, and at about 1:40 a.m., he smelled smoke. He said he thought it was his fan and got up to check.

When he walked into the living room, the whole front window was orange, Baxter said.

Baxter woke up Stover and two of his other roommates. Everyone, including the dog, Kimball, got out of the house safely.

Stover said he and the others had to leave by the back door because fire blocked the front door.

"Flames were shooting out above the front door and onto the ceiling," he said.

They alerted another student, Jim Thompson, senior in advertising, who lives in the basement apartment. He and his dog, Baxter, also got out safely.

The other occupants in the house were Will Schwab, freshman in economics, and Travis Harder, junior in political science. Another roommate, Kris Dekker, sophomore in civil engineering, was not home at the time of the fire.

Fire Marshall Don Francis said the fire was caused by an electrical short in the outside porchlight.

The five occupants stood in the freezing night air, most of them clad in shorts, some with bare feet, and watched as firefighters doused their house with water and poked holes in the structure.

Baxter said he was worried about the loss of his computer equipment. They did not have renter's insurance, he said.

Stover said he was going to stay at a friend's house for the night, but he did not know what he was going to do in the future or what might be salvaged from the fire.

"Everything I own is in that house," he said. "Until they let us go inside, I have no idea what's left."

Thompson also seemed uncertain about where he was going to go.

"What can you do if your house burns down?" he said. "There's nothing you can do, except move."

Francis estimated the damage to the structure to be $25,000. The damage to the contents was about $3,100, he said.

Despite their loss, the students managed to keep a sense of humor.

"I just hope the beer in the fridge is still good," Baxter said.

Thompson showed his housemates a chain letter he had not answered.

"I only had it for a day and a half," he said. "I didn't know the house would burn down."

Skoog vetoes Senate budget

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Student Body President Ed Skoog vetoed the Student Senate allocations for next year's minutes after they were approved by Senate Tuesday night.

Skoog vetoed the bill, which allocated $186,945 to student groups, because there was no money in the budget for the K-State Information Center, formerly U-Learn.

"I don't have an objection to what is in this bill," Skoog said. "I have an objection to what isn't in it."

"I will not be the person that kills U-Learn."

The center is a service on campus where students can call for general and K-State information. It is totally funded by student fees allocated through Senate.

Its funding was deleted from the budget earlier in the semester.

An amendment to the bill was proposed Tuesday night that would have reinstated funding for the center, but it was defeated by a 20-20-4 vote.

STUDENT SENATE

After a debate about how abstentions are counted, a revote was called. The amendment failed again by a vote of 24-23-1.

The original allocation for the center was $8,500, which was about the same amount as in this year's budget. The amendment would have allocated the center $7,704 for next year.

DeLoss Janke, Senate chair, would have voted in the case of a tie. However, he ruled that abstentions counted as votes not in favor of the amendment and did not cast a ballot in either vote.

The Senate will have to reconsider the allocations in a new bill or Referendum could give UPC immediate money

PHILL SPIKER

Students asked questions Tuesday afternoon pertaining to the benefits and effects on local businesses that the K-State Union Enhancement would have.

The Student Governing Board hosted an open forum at noon in the Union Courtyard that addressed many concerns from interested students.

The Union Enhancement referendum will be voted on by students on April 12 and 13 and must have a 60 percent majority to pass.

The project will cost a total of $9.2 million, which will expand the Union out to the north and renovate the facilities, services and programming in the Union.

This will cost full-time students a fee of $25 per semester and part-time students $12.50 for the span of 26 years. The proposed Union enhancement could be finished by the fall of 1998.

David Frese, student body vice president, said this project would help with student space, the infrastructure of the building, give additional funding to Union Program Council and help generate more revenue for the Union.

"The revenue-generating aspect of this is the anchor to this whole project," Frese said. "We want to have a healthy balance of want we have now and bring in some other restaurants or food options for our students."

Some students asked whether the project would be finished during their time at K-State.

Erin Parkinson, who will be vice president of membership for the UPC next year, said sophomores, juniors and seniors may not see the structural improvement by graduation, but they will definitely see changes in the UPC.

"Right now, you might not know about the programming because it is very small scale," she said. "Next year, with an increase in the budget, we can bring you bigger and better programming."

If the referendum passes, the UPC budget would be increased from $30,000 to $130,000.

"Twenty five dollars from each student is going for the structure, the programming, and is going to

SGA sponsors petition to help support Fort Riley

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Students wanting to show support for Fort Riley can grab a pen and sign their John Hancock.

Beginning today, the Student Governing Association is sponsoring a petition backing Fort Riley's presence in the community.

"We're hoping to make students aware of the importance of Fort Riley to the community and to inform the government that K-State will not only lose from an economic standpoint if the base closes, but an educational standpoint," Michael Henry, student senator, said.

Students and faculty who are connected with Fort Riley bring a diversity to campus that wouldn't be there otherwise.

"A lot of our students are from Kansas," Henry said.

"Involvement from Fort Riley provides a chance to see life outside of Kansas."

"There is an even exchange between the University and the base that, without which, the University would suffer."

K-State would lose students and faculty, Henry said, if the base were to close.

In other communities that have faced base closings, economic factors have been the main argument for maintaining the forts, John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement.

Dwain Archer, director of parking services, said.

Current equipment needs to be updated.

"The racks we have now really aren't useful for the mountain-bike type. They have those big, fat tires," Archer said.

Lights for each bike rack are also needed for security and comfort.

However, Skoog said he wants to make sure that students aren't discouraged from riding bikes on campus. He plans to achieve this by charging nothing to register a bike.

Fort Riley's proximity to a university has provided educational opportunities that many bases don't have.

"This is a fresher approach in that Fort Riley can learn from exchanges with the University."

"And, conversely, faculty, staff and student learn from exchanges within Fort Riley," Fairman said.

If Fort Riley were to shut down, Henry said, K-State would lose faculty as well as students.

The petitions will be on the SGA table in the Union from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday for the next three weeks.

"If people are riding bikes, then they are not driving," Skoog said.

"We need to encourage people to ride bikes," Skoog said.

This will help with the current problem of parking vehicles on and around campus, he said.

"The purpose of the registration is so that bicycle riders can get regulations into their hands," Skoog said.

There have been a number of bike accidents, thefts and other problems, Skoog said. Regulations will outline these problems and establish policy.

Skoog nixes bicycle permit fee

JEFFREY BARRETT
Collegian

Student Body President Ed Skoog said he feels confident that bike riders will not have to buy a permit to pedal on campus.

Parking services proposed that students pay $5 per year to obtain a permit for their bicycles. However, parking services and student government have compromised.

"Officially, the proposal is still possible," Skoog said. The parking committee still has to decide the final outcome.

"What we've come up with is in favor by the students," Skoog said.

Skoog said the $5 fee is not going to happen.

Parking services wants the $5 to provide funding for bike racks, lighting, rules and regulations and numerous other expenses.

It would also help identify bicycles in case of theft or misplacement.

"Bike racks are $450 apiece,"

► SEVERAL HALLS TARGET OF BOMB THREATS

A bomb threat late Tuesday morning forced the evacuation of students from Denison Hall.

Lt. Robert Mellgren of the K-State Police said at 11:22 a.m., the Riley County Police Department received an anonymous call claiming there were bombs planted in Bluemont, Denison and Nichols halls, and the K-State Union. The caller did not indicate any kind of time frame for the bomb, or any other specifics, Mellgren said.

Campus police then contacted people in charge of each building.

The threat made Tuesday was similar to one made two months ago, Mellgren said. Both callers were brief and gave very little information. He said the two incidents could be connected.

► FARRELL EXPANSION BEGINS WITH TUNNELS

The expansion of Farrell Library is well under way.

During spring break, all the transplantable trees around Farrell were removed.

New tunnels will be put in on the north and west sides of the library, Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said.

Tunnels run throughout campus. The major tunnels carry utilities, such as telecommunications, water and everything that goes to the east side of the campus.

"The problem with the tunnel running under Farrell is that it is poorly insulated, which causes extreme heat in Farrell."

Completion of the tunnels could be as early as the end of summer, Hobrock said.

Bids for the construction will open May 10, Nancy Burton, office manager for Bowman and Associates, said.

LONGEST-SERVING CONGRESS MEMBER RETIRES

JACKSON, Miss. — Rep. Jamie Whitten, the longest-serving member of Congress, announced his retirement Tuesday, giving up a post he has held since just before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

The decision leaves the campaign in Mississippi's 1st Congressional District wide open. Three Democrats and six Republicans have announced.

Whitten, 84, was elected to Congress in a special election on Nov. 4, 1941, and took office immediately. He would have faced a tenuous campaign after two years of poor health and had been urged by friends and associates to retire.

"This has not been an easy decision," Whitten said in a statement.

"The people of our state have been mighty good to me through the years, and it has always been my desire to use this position to serve them as well as I possibly could.

"However, the timing seems right, and there are other interests I still want to pursue," he said.

Whitten first won election on the strength of his prosecution of gamblers who came across the state line from Tennessee.

AMERICANS UNHAPPY WITH ECONOMY, POLL SAYS

WASHINGTON — Americans are in the doldrums despite the economic recovery, a poll released Tuesday suggests.

Most are unhappy with the course of the country, and more than half said they've been personally touched by crime.

The Times Mirror poll of 2,001 people found an overwhelming majority satisfied with their own lives and the way things are going in their communities.

But only 24 percent said they were satisfied with the way things are going in the country.

"Whitewater is putting a damper on the gross national spirit," Andrew Kohut, poll director, said. In addition, he said, "People don't quite believe in the recovery" and many are having trouble making ends meet.

Nearly half cited financial pressures when asked their family's biggest problem. More than half said they or a relative had lost a job, taken a cut in pay or benefits or seen layoffs at their workplace.

Crime overtook economic concerns when people were asked to name the most important problem facing the country.

ZULU PROTEST POLITICAL VIOLENCE

EMPANGENI, South Africa — Nationalist Zulus brandishing spears, clubs and sticks marched in this Natal province city Tuesday, defying a state of emergency.

Zulu tribal chiefs called for the show of force to protest the deaths of Zulus in political violence and to commemorate those killed following a Zulu march last week in Johannesburg.

Police said 85 people have been killed in political violence in the Zulu-dominated province since Thursday, when the state of emergency was declared.

The death toll could climb as casualty reports from rural settlements reach police.

CLINTON PITCHES HEALTH-CARE PLAN

TROY, N.C. — President Clinton pitched his health-care plan Tuesday as a cure for doctor shortages in rural America and implored the public to demand congressional action this year.

Warming up for an evening town hall to be televised in North Carolina, Texas, Tennessee and Virginia, Clinton spent the day promoting his health-reform ideas to doctors, administrators and patients of an understaffed and financially burdened rural hospital.

His TV forum was the first of three this week. The president and first lady, Hillary Rodham-Clinton, are trying to generate public demand for health-care change as Congress wraps up an Easter recess.

SpringDance explores themes ranging from spiritualism and light to villages and birds

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

For the past few weeks, McCain Auditorium has been walked on, tapped on, jumped on, rolled on and even, well, danced on.

All of this action isn't part of some wild, destructive gang's doing, but part of the Kansas State Repertory Dance Company's "SpringDance '94."

The show is a presentation of many works by different K-State choreographers.

Vera Orlock, assistant professor of dance, choreographed the first piece of the second act, called "The Path to Heaven." It is divided into four parts. Part one is titled "Vessel." By using Bulgarian music, Orlock has created a very spiritual piece.

"It's about a solo woman receiving the life force of the universe and giving it out. She's a receptacle," Orlock said.

Part four is called "Ribbons of Light." Orlock said the name is well-suited for the dancers in this piece.

"When I see them in the light, they almost look like candle flames," she said.

John Kahlich — the show's director and one of the choreographers — has been working around the clock to ensure the show's success.

Kahlich said that one of the biggest problems with putting something like "SpringDance" together is the fact that the dance department does not have its own facility.

This year, the show has used the talents of Robert Arens, assistant professor of architecture. He designed the structures used in the second act of the show. His students then built the structures.

Kahlich said Arens' structures play an integral part in the performance.

"Our dances depend on the physical structures that he built," Kahlich said.

Arens does not confront the design as a stage construction but as a structure wholly unto itself.

"He has a different perspective," Kahlich said. "It has to work on stage. We see his viewpoint, and we think in different ways."

Kahlich choreographs the third installment of the second act. It is called "The Village." Orlock describes Kahlich's piece as earthy.

"It's like life in a village, not spiritual, but more practical," she said. Rejoining the K-State Repertory Dance Company is Patricia Durbin, guest artist. Durbin graduated from K-State in 1989. She lives in New York City and teaches dance to children. She is now dancing with three different companies.

"I've really enjoyed it," Durbin said of this year's "SpringDance."

Achmed Valk, director of dance, choreographed the second piece of the second act. He will also be dancing in the same piece. He utilizes slide projections of rock structures to add a different effect to his piece. The rock structures were constructed by Rob Schouten, a native of Seattle.

Valk also choreographed "By Request," the ballet that opens the first act.

Valk approached Hanley Jackson, professor of music, to find a student composer. Jackson suggested Kyle Arnold, junior in music. Arnold wrote a computer score, composed on a synthesizer, in three movements.

The costume design is by Gina Cortes, who will only be with the dance department for this year. Cortes is from Berlin, Germany, and she must work in the many different styles that the show necessitates. John Uthoff, associate professor of speech, is providing the light design.

Haley Hoss, a fifth-year senior in dance, choreographed a solo piece for herself called "Bird of Prey." It explores the process birds go through during their daily lives. Hoss said, "They don't kill for pleasure, but necessity." She describes it as "the life of a raptor of prey in three minutes or less."

SPRINGDANCE

SpringDance '94 will be at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

OPINION

APRIL 6, 1994

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Union must expand, or it will crumble

To those unwilling to chip in for improvements they will never see, we say, join the thousands of alumni who paid for the facilities we have now.

A yes vote on the K-State Union expansion student referendum will mean a badly needed renovation for a building past its prime.

We understand the initial shock students feel when they see the figures: $25 per full-time student per semester for 26 years on top of the Union fee we already pay.

At this point, however, there is no choice but to pay or let our Union further decay.

The Union is already operating at its full capacity, and it's losing money. It's losing real money from food services and potential money from lack of programming resources.

Every year we neglect making crucial repairs to the infrastructure is another year students risk being inconvenienced by plumbing failures, power failures and heating or cooling failures.

Every year the Union fails to expand to meet student needs, it risks turning away student groups who have paid for the privilege of having meetings there.

Every year concrete plans for expansion fail to be made due to student apathy, material costs go up, interest rates go up, student enrollment goes up and the Union's effectiveness goes down. The quality goes down.

Thanks to the clear-sightedness of our student leaders, the proposed hotel/parking garage is no longer a part of the $9.2 million package.

Those not wanting to burden future students with a hefty Union fee for the next quarter century might ask themselves whether it's more fair to burden those students with a tacky Union from their parents' generation.

To those unwilling to chip in for improvements they will never see, we say, join the thousands of alumni who paid for the facilities we have now.

But whatever your opinion on expansion, the important thing to remember is this is a student referendum. It's our Union. It's our vote.

Tobacco, beer could solve Union's financial woes

Something should be done to help the K-State Union. Its budget hasn't kept up with inflation.

Union Food Services is barely making any money. There is little student interest in the Union outside of crashing or watching soap operas by the television, buying books, picking up a Collegian, or getting some lunch.

There are many suggestions about how to bring more money into the Union.

I disagree with some of them and believe some important ideas have been left out.

I support moving the KSU Credit Union to the Union to save the money it costs now to rent space for it, but does it have to be in the Union? If so, how about letting students use the credit union, too? If not, it should go on one of the top floors that students frequent less.

I agree somewhat with changing the lounge area. It would be nice to have individual seats so one person doesn't take up a whole lounge by sleeping or because most people are uncomfortable sharing with a stranger. The idea of installing a fireplace is silly, not to mention a hazard.

Converting part of the Union into a mall is not in the long-term interest. Manhattan has a hard enough time supporting retail business as it is.

By introducing retailers who sell merchandise that can be found elsewhere in town, the Union is threatening the gentle balance that Manhattan and the University have. Aggieville, Manhattan Town Center and Poyntz Avenue would suffer more than they already are.

In addition, there is no proof that there is any interest from retailers in Union space. There is a finite amount of money in the local economy, and putting in retailers would only spread it thinner.

The same is true for a food court. Aggieville is very close and handles the demand for food well, thank you. Some K-Staters go to the mall for lunch, which continues to sustain the symbiosis between the town and University.

By upsetting this, we would simply have empty retail space in the Union, Poyntz Avenue, the mall and Aggieville.

Paraphrasing, this reminds me of my adolescence in suburban New Jersey in which real estate developers believed that if they built a strip mall, it would fill itself with retailers selling quality merchandise to generous consumers.

Trees fell, strip malls were built, and dust settled as consumers continued going to New York and the shore to shop. I see similar planning and fate for the mall and food court if it were built.

A fountain? Flags of all countries? Sounds aesthetic, but not necessarily something that would draw students.

There are plans to improve the infrastructure, which I back to the hilt. The building needs a whole slew of items to improve the behind-the-scenes equipment and services to keep it running and make it more efficient.

It would be nice to get the asbestos out of there as well.

There are two items missing from the proposal that would boost Union income. The Union tobacco policy, like it or not, has hampered the ability of the Union to keep people in the building to buy things.

Face it — if people are on the sidewalk outside the Union they aren't contributing to its economy. If they could buy their cigarettes inside the building and have a place to smoke them inside, they would buy more things.

Those who like a cigarette with their lunch should also be given a place to eat besides Aggieville, namely the Union. It makes no sense to complain about the lack of income to the Union when so many students are not welcome there.

Secondly, the Union needs a beer-serving establishment. K-State is the only university I know of without a bar on campus. If Union Station, say, served beer and wine coolers along with lunch while playing a variety of music to a 21-and-older crowd, it would be a huge hit with professors as well as students. If there was a smoking section with a ventilation system, even better. At night, people could drink and enjoy a rock band, too, just like at other colleges.

There have been attempts to bring beer service to K-State for almost 20 years, but the Union Governing Board seems to be controlled by temperance zealots on this issue. Hysteria over second-hand smoke and vocal self-righteous non-smokers have prevented the Union Governing Board from making the Union a place for all K-State students.

Changing these puritanical policies would benefit the Union more than adding a dry cleaners or a McDonald's.

Maybe one day there will be a place to park, too.

► RESPONSE

Not all who receive recognition undeserving — most have earned it

Dear Editor,

I am responding to Sara Smith's column about undeserving people receiving rewards.

This is my second year at K-State, and every fall I spend about three or four months filling out applications for scholarships, grants and loans.

It is a long and grueling process, and about 95 percent of my applications are turned down because I'm underqualified, too young, studying the wrong thing or whatever.

The scholarships I do receive are given to me based on my academic achievements, not to boost my self-esteem.

I also highly doubt a company would give a pay raise to someone they know to be incompetent simply because he's a little down in the dumps versus giving it to an employee who has worked hard and shown initiative.

Her comment about people of ability being used and never receiving recognition because they don't realize they have talent is true. If people don't believe in themselves, then neither will anyone else.

Or if people do know they're talented, others will think they're "arrogant egotists." This is only true if the talented person acts like an arrogant egotist; otherwise, his talent will gain him the respect and admiration of his peers.

Frank Lloyd Wright is a poor example because although the man was truly a great architect and indeed had every reason to be proud of himself, what gave him the right to be arrogant?

Maybe the reason Shelley, Keats and Shakespeare are "kept a shelf away" from the Harlequin novels is because they're under the Classics section, whereas the Harlequins are under the Romance section.

And just because Danielle Steele sells faster than Dante doesn't necessarily mean Dante's brilliance goes unrecognized. If that were the case, Dante wouldn't be on the shelves anymore — he would have been packed away several centuries ago.

Christian beliefs have withstood 1,994 years of interrogation

Humanity's greatest rebuttal began about this time 1,994 years ago. It all started when a man from the Middle East reportedly turned water into wine, healed the blind, fed 5,000, raised a man from the dead, claimed he was God in flesh, offered humankind eternal life, was crucified partly because of these reports but rose from the dead three days later.

It's quite a story. More books have been written about this story than any other in history.

The issue is: Is it a true story?

The rebuttal became fierce just after Christ's body was reported missing from his tomb. Some of his followers and about 500 eyewitnesses claimed he rose from the dead. Others laughed in disbelief, including some of his followers. The alleged Messiah's body was never found. If it had been, a young movement would have been squashed in its infancy.

Most false stories and claims are eventually shown to be false over time. Not so with the story of Christ. After 1,994 years of enduring the most intense interrogation human reason could muster, this story stands unrebuted. Because critics and skeptics have been unable to disprove the truth and accuracy of the historical events critical to the authority and credibility of Christ, many have resolved to dismiss these events as myth or superstition.

These arguments of denial: it simply didn't happen, somebody made it up, the supernatural isn't real — it's superstitious, are particularly appealing because, by simply dismissing the story, these arguments justify escaping the issue without sincerely thinking about it.

Historical arguments, on the other hand, confront the issue directly. This line of thinking can be dangerous, however. Atheists have decided to follow Christ after seriously investigating these accounts.

By dismissing this supernatural historical account as myth or superstition, professors and other "intellectuals" commonly descend to the nadir of intellectual integrity. It amazes me how people who value an open mind can be so close-minded when it comes to Christ and the supernatural.

Denialists, a.k.a. atheists, materialists, naturalists, often claim faith is anti-intellectual because it involves believing through means other than human reason and our ability to accumulate hard evidence. Yet, it is the denialists who are most guilty of being anti-intellectual.

Any definitive statement about an unknown such as God exists, or God doesn't exist, is a faith assertion. The Bible describes faith as being sure of what you hope for and certain of what you don't see. Therefore, the denialist, who claims God doesn't exist or that the Christ story is a myth, is making a faith assertion that is equal in degree and scope as my claims of faith. Consequently, the denialist's criticism that faith is anti-intellectual turns out to be a rhetorical boomerang that is destined by its shape and form to strike the one that sent it.

Reality does not end at what human reason can understand. A thousand years ago, humanity didn't understand that the planets rotated around the sun, but the planets persisted in doing so. Nor did we understand gravity, but it certainly effected our lives.

Today, we don't understand all the laws of physics, but those laws continue to function. Nor do we understand the human body, but we continue to be. How can humanity, who is nowhere near understanding the material universe, be so arrogant as to conclude that the supernatural is myth and superstition?

Human reason is limited. Faith allows us to humbly acknowledge our limitations. With some philosophical questions, humanity is no closer to finding solid answers than we were 4,000 years ago. Nevertheless, human reason has conquered many great mountains of mystery, scaled numerous cliffs of confusion, charted vast amounts of unknown territory.

Despite our strengths of reason, our finite minds invariably lead our journey to a great chasm at the brink of our understanding. On the other side, the form of God who has revealed himself through Christ is visible in the distance. Yet, as the celebration of Christ's resurrection has reminded us, the only way to reach and explore that territory is by faith.

Student to get crash course in Navy nukes

MEREDITH REILLY
Collegian

A K-State student has been selected as the nation's first female Navy Nuclear Power Officer candidate.

Amy Hageman, senior in mechanical engineering, was chosen after completing the application process last April, a physical last August and an interview with a four-star admiral in February.

"Amy is the first female Nuclear Power Officer to be recruited," Lieutenant Vern Bagley, Navy Engineering Programs Manager, said.

Very few females were interviewed for the candidacies, he said. Roughly 160 candidates from across the nation were chosen this year, Bagley said.

Upon completion of her degree next spring, Hageman will go to Florida for 13 weeks for Officer Candidate School.

There, she will go through a transition period to re-familiarize herself in the Navy. She will have physical training and learn basic tasks such as navigation skills.

Hageman will then attend

Nuclear Power School for six months in Orlando after Officer Candidate School.

"I'll get a crash course in nuclear engineering for college graduates," she said. "They will teach me everything about how to operate a nuclear reactor."

Hageman said she needs to attend this portion of the training because she is a mechanical engineering major and knows little about nuclear engineering.

After finishing Nuclear Power School, Hageman will complete her training at Prototype.

Prototype is when a submarine or surface vessel is on shore and she said she will learn how to operate them before she goes offshore, she said.

Hageman said she would like to give the Navy a chance because it offers many career opportunities.

If she decides to leave, however, she said she would like to work for a few years and then return to school to get her graduate degree in mechanical engineering.

"It's kind of still up in the air. I have a lot of time to decide," Hageman said.

Fees may increase for state park use

JEFFREY BARRETT
Collegian

Users of state parks will be paying more if a bill to restructure the parks' fee system is approved by the legislature.

The department has created a number of proposals currently being considered by the Kansas legislature.

The administration admits that some of them are controversial but stresses that 85 percent of its operating budget comes from its constituents.

In 1991, Americans spent $542 million on wildlife-associated recreation, according to a Department of the Interior survey. Current proposals would add $4.4 million annually to operation and management of Kansas parks.

Three proposals under consideration will have the potential to raise money for the parks.

The first would do away with the vehicle permit system. Instead, there would be a charge per person.

A $10 annual permit or a $4 daily permit per person would be required for all park users ages 16 and older. This means a carload of people who used to pay for a single-vehicle permit will now have to pay per individual in the car.

"Everyone will be carrying a park permit as opposed to a vehicle permit," Pat Spain, office assistant for the Tuttle Creek State Park, said.

The permit will be carried on your person, Spain said.

"We would enforce it the same way a fishing or hunting license is enforced, one on one," Mathews said. A park ranger would approach park users and ask for a permit.

The second proposal would require a license for use of department wildlife lands and waters, except for persons under the age of 16. Those who already hold a current hunting, fishing, or furharvesting license would be exempt also.

Persons under age 16 are exempt those that larger families can enjoy the parks without being alienated economically, Mathews said.

The third proposal would change an existing guideline that allows persons over the age of 65 to forego purchasing a hunting or fishing license.

The department says about 35,000 Kansans over age 65 fish. They say about 10,000 hunt.

Anyone in Kansas up for a snowball fight?

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAYS, Kan. — The heaviest spring snow in more than a decade dropped at least 5 inches on parts of western Kansas Tuesday before spreading south and east.

Snowfall had increased by late afternoon along a line from WaKeeney to Scott City to Ulysses. Dodge City was expected to get heavy snow.

The Fort Hays Experiment Station recorded 5.5 inches, making it the largest snowfall of the 1993-94 winter weather season there. The station measured 5 inches on Feb. 22.

Heavy snow fell in a 20- to 30-mile stretch across western Kansas earlier Tuesday. Garden City and Russell also reported 5 inches of snow.

Few parts of Kansas were spared the unseasonable blast. By late afternoon, freezing drizzle was reported in Hutchinson, Wichita and Emporia, while snow fell in Topeka, Leavenworth and the Kansas City suburb of Olathe.

The precipitation slickened streets and highways, causing accidents and sending cars off the road in many cities.

It was the most April snow in the Hays area since a storm in 1980 dumped about 4 inches.

Ness City got about 4 inches while 3 inches fell in LaCrosse.

Farmers to the east of the heavy snow got about 1 inch, but said they could have used more.

"We just talked a while ago that we wished we had a whole bunch," Don Harvey, a farmer south of Collyer and an observer for the National Weather Service, said. The snow was expected to end Tuesday evening in western Kansas, with the freezing rain and snow tapering off around midnight in eastern sections.

Mostly sunny skies were forecast for western Kansas on Wednesday and Thursday, with partly cloudy conditions east both days. High temperatures were expected in the 50s for most of the state, but only in the 40s over snow-covered areas. Lows Wednesday night should be from the mid-20s to low 30s, with highs Thursday in the 50s.

The extended forecast calls for a chance of showers Friday through Sunday. High temperatures are expected to reach 65 to 75 Friday and Saturday, with lows 35 to 45 Friday and in the 40s Saturday. Sunday is expected to be a bit cooler, with highs 55 to 65 and lows 30 to 35 west and 45 to 50 east.

PROPOSALS FOR PARK PERMITS

There are three proposals in the Kansas legislature concerning a restructuring of the permit system. The purpose of the proposals is to raise $4.4 million more a year for renovation of Kansas parks because of age, neglect and the flood of '93.

- Discontinue vehicle permit system and establish annual and daily per permit system.
- Require a license for use of wildlife lands and waters. Exempt those under 16 and those holding valid fishing, hunting and furharvesting licenses.
- Eliminate exemption that allows persons older than 65 free access to hunting or fishing.

Team battles strong winds, tries to answer questions

The Cats' next tournament will be April 12, in Birmingham, Ala., at the Bent Brook-Blazer Invitational.

BRIAN SIEGRIST
Collegian

The weather just refused to cooperate with the K-State men's golf team during the 7th Annual Diet Pepsi/Shocker Classic Monday and Tuesday.

The team was first blasted with stiff winds gusting to 40 mph during first- and second-round action Monday. Then Tuesday, play was totally shut out by unseasonable snow flurries.

These were far from the weather conditions a struggling Wildcat golf team wanted to see as it took on a 16-team field at Wichita's par-71 Tallgrass Country Club.

"That was the windiest day I've ever had to shoot on during a tournament," Sean Robertson, senior in finance, said of Monday's blustery conditions.

Robertson managed to fair much better than the majority of the field and, bolstered by his second-round 74, placed into a tie for fourth. Robertson ended Monday's play with a 156 after combining a first-round 82 with the second-round 74.

"Sean's second-round 74 was very good, especially when you consider the conditions," Coach Mark Elliott said. "I think after the first two rounds, there were only five or six scores posted under 80, so that makes Sean's round pretty good."

Unfortunately for the Wildcats, the rest of the team did not do so well and posted disappointing scores of 335 and 319 in the first two rounds. The Cats settled into ninth place overall and 17 strokes off the pace set by leader Texas Wesleyan.

"We needed somebody to step up and we just didn't have that happen," Elliott said. "We haven't answered any questions yet and were getting down to the last three weeks of the season. We still have more questions than answers."

Elliott hoped to have some of those questions answered Tuesday, but an April snow flurry canceled Tuesday's action, leaving the Wildcats in ninth place.

"If we're a Division-I team and supposed to have a shot at competing at the regionals every year, we can't continue to play like this," Elliott said.

The Cats will get an opportunity for a final tune-up before the Big Eight Championships next Tuesday as they head to Birmingham, Ala., for the Bent Brook-Blazer Invitational.

TUBBY, TULSA TALKING

TULSA, Okla. — Tulsa coach Tubby Smith and school officials are talking about an extension for his contract, but at least one other school also wants to talk with him — K-State.

Smith, who's in the third year of a five-year contract with an option to renegotiate this year, said he expects an announcement later this week about a new contract that would keep him at Tulsa.

Smith also said K-State officials had contacted him. K-State is looking for a replacement for Dana Altman.

K-State's baseball games against Creighton and Northeastern Illinois have both been canceled because of inclement weather.

The Creighton game, scheduled for Tuesday in Manhattan, will not be rescheduled.

The Wildcats were to travel to Chicago today to face the Northeastern Illinois Golden Eagles in a double-header.

These games will be rescheduled. The Cats have already played the Golden Eagles this season, sweeping them in three games in Manhattan.

K-State will return to action playing Missouri in a three-game home stand this weekend. The first game will be 7 p.m. Friday, followed by games at 3 p.m. Saturday and 1 p.m. Sunday.

Snyder looks to add depth, reinforce key replacements

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

With college basketball over, it is time for spring football to kick into motion.

Practice for the K-State football team began Monday at KSU Stadium.

Coach Bill Snyder said that the important thing for the Wildcats this year is not to take their performance last year for granted.

"It is awfully important for us to realize that we still need to do the little things," Snyder said. "We still have to have every bit of discipline that we have attempted to have in the past."

"We are not by any stretch an empire, but we need to realize how they have all fallen. It happens from within."

Many of the key Cats from last year's squad are returning this year.

"We need to get better. We need to focus on the fundamentals, try to develop a competitive two deep at each position," Snyder said.

The players accounting for 97.9 percent of rushing yards, 100 percent of passing yards and 60.3 percent of all receiving yards will return for K-State. Additionally, players accounting for 58.3 percent of all scoring will be back.

That leaves 41.7 percent of the points unaccounted for, however.

"Offensively, it is quite obvious that with the graduation of guard, center and guard we've got to replace those three positions. We have our work cut out for us."

"We also have to develop a No. 2 quarterback, somebody to serve as Chad (May)'s heir apparent and also be able to take some playing time as well in the Big Eight Conference," he said.

Another aspect of the offense that must be addressed was the development of a new speed receiver to replace Andre Coleman, Snyder said.

"Andre added an awful lot to our offense as well as our special teams."

Wide receiver Ron Brown might be the person Snyder is looking for as Coleman's replacement. Brown, a junior-college transfer from 1993, will work with Jimmy Dean, a transfer from Barton County Community College.

"Both of them run extremely well. How well they can adapt to the system remains to be seen," Snyder said.

Defensively, the Cats need to replace their secondary.

"The fact we lost so many people in our secondary — all of our starters — I think we have a good group of young people to chose from and that will be our major focus," Snyder said.

Another significant shift for the Cats will be the time they face their opponents.

K-State has three games scheduled for night play. Prior to the kick-off of the Big Eight season, the Cats will play Southwest Louisiana and Minnesota at 6:30 p.m.

The Cats will also take on intrastate rival Kansas at 7 p.m. on Oct. 6 in Lawrence.

"We still have a segment that is interested in evening ballgames, and we are trying to enhance our attendance," Snyder said. "Once again, to see if increased attendance will be develop from that."

O's magic should mean No.1 season

O-R-I-O-L-E-S.

That is right, Orioles magic is back. Sorry, Kansas City Royals fans. Too bad you got trounced during Monday's opening day in Baltimore.

Sorry, I know that I am now living in Kansas (yeah, I know that the Royals are actually in Kansas City, Mo., but what other pro-baseball team does Kansas have?), but it is tough for me to switch allegiances too quickly.

I lived in Baltimore for 14 years, so I have orange and black blood running through my veins.

This should, with a little bit of luck, be the Orioles' year. They signed big-time hitters Chris Sabo and Rafael Palmeiro during the off season, and these two players should help the team slug its way to the front of the American League East.

Sabo drove in 82 runs last year and had 21 home runs. Palmeiro isn't too shabby, either. He had 37 homers and 105 RBI.

Even Sports Illustrated picked the O's to finish first in the eastern division.

Why am I talking about all this? Why should anybody in Manhattan care about the baseball team in Baltimore?

I don't know.

It was cold outside on Tuesday, and today is not supposed to be a lot warmer, so my brain turned to the warm thoughts of summer and then to the boys of summer — the O's.

Baltimore is under a new ownership group, and it has invested $42 million into the team. Peter Angelos, who heads the ownership group, is a rarity in big business baseball these days.

A fan.

He has been a fan of the Orioles for a long time, and his ownership has sparked a new desire for winning the championship this season.

Add to that what is still one of the coolest ballparks in all of America, and you have a great combination.

Oriole Park at Camden Yards set the model for many of the new parks being unveiled this year.

The return to an old fashioned park designed around the fans and the history of the game, rather than packing in as many people as possible and Astro Turf, has helped in a resurgence in game attendance.

Unfortunately this has also caused an increase in the ticket prices. Everything has a price I suppose.

The new stadium in Cleveland is so similar to the Baltimore stadium that Camden Yards was used as the stunt double during the filming of Major League II.

I went to a couple of Royals games last year, and I'll make it to some this year, especially when the O's come to town.

I like the Royals, and I like Kauffman Stadium, but it is tough to take the Baltimore spirit out of the kid.

Even if you don't like Baltimore, you could just think about baseball in general.

Hell, if you don't like baseball, just think about the warm weather that usually accompanies the days out at the old ball park.

SPORTS DIGEST

► JORDAN'S TEAM REVOKES FREE PASSES FOR KIDS

HOOVER, Ala. — Weeks before anyone knew Michael Jordan would be in right field, the Birmingham Barons gave youngsters 25,000 tickets for Sunday's game against Knoxville.

Sorry, kids, your tickets are no good now.

The Barons say none of the free passes given to area schools for the game will be honored because of the anticipated crush of people wanting to see the former NBA star.

In past years, only about 2,000 children and their families have used the free tickets.

"We rethought the situation because it would be a total nightmare," said Bill Hardekopf, president of the Barons, the Double-A affiliate of the Chicago White Sox.

To make up for the change, the tickets will be good for any one of 26 selected home games between April 11 and June 25. Barons spokesman Chris Pika said there is no guarantee Jordan will be with the team for all those dates.

Hoover Metropolitan Stadium seats only about 10,000.

The Barons traditionally give away 5,000 passes — each good for five fans — for the game, even though that's more than the stadium can hold. Before now, there was never any reason to expect all the tickets would be used.

But one high school principal said money, not logistics, is the real reason for the team canceling the passes.

"I think it's all about bucks," Dick Atchison of Oak Grove High School said. "Michael Jordan is coming, and they can now sell these tickets. It shouldn't make any difference who's on the roster. The Barons do some good things for kids, but I just think this is awful. These kids have to feel slighted."

The Barons' ticket office, in conjunction with Birmingham Coca-Cola, sent out the free tickets to the Jefferson County school system, said school system spokeswoman Nez Calhoun.

Calhoun said the change would be disappointing for the children.

"I told (the Barons) it would be a public relations nightmare," she said. "We looked at some other alternatives, but nothing seemed suitable at the time."

'Orlando' explores gender swap

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Collegian

"Same person, no different at all, just a different sex," explains Orlando, the central character in Sally Potter's British period film of the same name.

Based on the unconventional novel by Virginia Woolf, "Orlando" is a feminist portrayal of gender and identity. The film follows Orlando (played by Tilda Swinton) through roughly 400 years of his/her life. Orlando evolves from male to female after the first 100 years pass.

"Orlando" begins in 17th-century England during the reign of Queen Elizabeth I (played by Quentin Crisp). Orlando is a young, handsome man who has been raised in the highest social levels in England. After he is chosen as the Queen's valet, he goes to speak with her privately. Elizabeth tells him, "Do not fade; do not wither; do not grow old." Hence, Orlando lives continuously.

In the 18th century, Orlando acts as a foreign ambassador under Queen Anne. By 1750, Orlando has changed gender. He is now a she. She then undertakes a new life in society as a lady (although she still has possession of her family estate). She meets Alexander Pope, Johnathan Swift and Ben Johnson, but she has much trouble "fitting in."

Tilda Swinton easily glides into her role as the androgynous Orlando. She doesn't overdo her portrayal of the man but approaches him from a very feminine angle. At first, Orlando is very much a prissy. What is most noteworthy is that Swinton does not appear awkward as either sex. She is entirely believable. After the "switch," Swinton's female Orlando is confused. She doesn't find her peace until the very end of the movie, when she has a child and has found solace in her motherly duties.

But one has to question if Orlando has actually found her sexual identity. She has definitely found herself. She knows who she is and perhaps what she stands for. But does she know what she is?

Potter has made a remarkably fresh movie. The film has received immense praise by both British and American critics. Potter has spared nothing in making "Orlando" as original, factual and beautiful as possible. We have seen what a mega-budget and overexposure can do to a quaint period piece ("The Age of Innocence"). However, "Orlando" was done well — the costume design won an Oscar nomination.

Potter is one of those rare directors who can create a personal masterpiece on his or her own without the mainstream's approval and yet receive great recognition.

"Orlando" is a wonderful offering. It was made in 1993, so it is worthwhile to see it on the big screen. The movie is so mysterious and perplexing, you might want to pick up a copy of the book to understand more about this uncanny hero/heroine, Orlando.

MOVIE REVIEW

The Union Program Council will present the movie "Orlando" as part of the Kaleidoscope movie series. It will be showing at 8 tonight in Union Forum Hall, at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Thursday in Forum Hall, and at 8 p.m. Friday in the Little Theatre.

'Confused' watches cowboys from afar

Dear Cassandra,
I need your help. Lately, I've found myself attracted to men in cowboy hats, but there's one guy in particular. He's in my Natural Disasters class. I sit a few rows away and admire him from afar. He wears the coolest cowboy hat I've ever seen.

Anyway, the problem is that he doesn't know I'm alive. I can't get up the courage to sit closer or even talk to him. I don't know his name, and he may even have a girlfriend. I'm not very good at talking to guys, and I'm hoping you can help me. My attraction to this cowboy grows stronger every day, especially after having seen the movie "8 Seconds."

Yours truly,
Confused cowboy watcher

Dear Watcher,
I take it you're not from the farm but find country men attractive.

Here's a crazy idea to attract his attention. Figure out where he normally sits and try to pick a spot close to his seat. Bring a Zane Grey novel and begin reading it. Hold it so he can see the cover. Lots of cowboys love Grey's novels, and this would be a great opening for him to start a conversation with him. It probably won't work the first time, so keep trying.

If he never says anything to you, mention to him sometime that his appearance reminds you of a character in the novel. Be ready to explain why. Happy trails to you.

Cancer claims life of KSU art director

AMY ZIEGLER
Collegian

Heather Hurtig, 30, art director for K-State University Publications, died of cancer of the lymph nodes Sunday night at KU Medical Center.

Hurtig was a 1986 K-State graduate who began as a graphic designer in 1987 at University Publications.

In September of 1991, she was promoted to the position of art director.

Hurtig's contributions to the world of design include awards from the University and College Designers Association, the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education, Women in Communications and the American Business Women's Association.

She also was honored as woman of the year in 1989 and held the offices of president, vice president, secretary and newsletter editor for the American Business Woman's Association.

Hurtig always tried to come up with a creative approach to solving problems at University Publications, Shane Shanks, publications editor for University Publications, said.

"She changed the same old thing into something new. She had creative ways to catch people's attention," he said.

During her time at University Publications, Hurtig promoted the All University Open House, designed material to recruit students and worked closely with McCain Auditorium to create brochures, posters, parking stickers and postcards for the performances.

Hurtig was different from other designers, Shanks said.

"She had a strong design style, which not just anyone has. A strong style is a good trait in a designer," he said.

Kim Logan, a graphic designer who worked with Hurtig for 2-1/2 years, said Hurtig was easy to talk to and a good boss.

"It was fun for me to work with her. I learned a lot about design from Heather."

"She was a fun, energetic and talented designer," Logan said.

Shanks said Hurtig's fun personality and talent will be missed in the office.

"She was a good friend to us, and we'll all miss her," Shanks said.

Hispanic Americans rediscover lost heritage

"There was almost a complete exclusion of the Mexican and Indian heritage in the history."

CHARLES TATUM
Visiting scholar from the University of Arizona

SERA L. TANK
Collegian

For social, political and economic reasons, many Hispanic Americans are only now beginning to discover their Indo-Mexican heritage, a visiting scholar from the University of Arizona said.

Charles Tatum spoke Tuesday night at the American Ethnic Studies Banquet on "The Politics of Family History: Personal Reflections."

Tatum reflected upon his family history, written by his great uncle, Santiago Ininsa, and told about the bias against the European Spanish in history.

When writing the history, Ininsa stressed the family connection between the European-Spanish heritage and tried to deny any connection with the Indian and Mexican culture.

"There was almost a complete exclusion of the Mexican and Indian heritage in the history."

The Indians' culture was looked down upon. In one part of the book, Indians were referred to as ruthless savages.

"Overall, Santiago was pro-Spanish, pro-Anglo-American and anti-Mexican," Tatum said.

Success and being associated with the Spanish and Anglo-American cultures was very important to Mexicans of the early 20th century.

It was a time when any association with the Indian culture was looked down upon, Tatum said.

It wasn't until 1966 that Tatum began to seriously question his pure Spanish history, he said.

"I found out that the stories passed down from my grandparents were part of a systematic denial of our Indo-Mexican heritage. This led to a cultural schizophrenia."

The family history written by Tatum's uncle was helpful in giving him a general idea of some of his family's history.

It was also disturbing. The myths handed down by his mother and grandmother could not be historically sustained, he said.

IRA declares a cease-fire

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The IRA and its political allies ushered in a three-day cease-fire Tuesday night with hints they might extend their break from violence in return for negotiations with Britain.

British and Irish officials, however, held to their stand that there was nothing to talk about until the IRA pledges to give up violence for good.

"A positive attitude and flexibility of approach are required to allow the situation to be moved forward," the Irish Republican Army said in a statement released in Dublin, Ireland.

Britain and Ireland issued a declaration Dec. 15 offering Sinn Fein a place in talks on the future of Northern Ireland if the IRA laid down its arms permanently.

Sinn Fein has said the offer needs to be clarified before it can respond. Since Dec. 15, the IRA has killed three people.

SPEECH

Native American, Zulu cultures disappearing

"Ninety percent of indigenous people have been wiped out."

HARALD PRINS
Professor of Anthropology

Nations sell resources tribes live on.

JILL DUBOIS
Collegian

Strength in unity.

This is the plight of indigenous peoples, Harald Prins, professor of anthropology, said as the featured speaker at the Vernon Larson International Luncheon Series Tuesday in the K-State Union Flint Hills Room.

Prins' speech, "Tribal People in the New World Order: Transnationalization of the Native Rights Struggle" was just one of the many events to be featured during Native American Month.

Prins came to K-State four years ago after studying in England, the Middle East, Peru, Ecuador and Paraguay.

He also worked as director of research and development for the MicMac Indians of Maine.

Prins spoke about the attempted mass genocide of indigenous peoples all over the world in countries such as South Africa and North and South America.

"Ninety percent of indigenous people have been wiped out," Prins said.

Indigenous peoples are those who have lived in a nation but have been colonized or intruded upon.

They still live in their homeland but do not control the government.

Not only Native Americans, but Zulus of South Africa are indigenous peoples too, Prins said.

"We must rethink the world as presented to us by mapmakers."

"They showed us an erroneous picture of the world," he said.

"Underneath the surface of nation-states are 3,000 tribal nations or indigenous nations."

All these countries have people with identities and a strong desire to hold on to their heritage and native homelands, Prins said.

Many of these people are in Third-World nations that are in debt crisis.

Governments are often forced to sell natural resources tribal people live on.

These people are robbed of their natural resources by other powers.

They lose everything while the world watches, he said.

However, indigenous cultures have begun to network and use technology to document the destruction of their natural resources.

They use video cameras and photography to show the world what is happening in their country.

"We must have moral conscience and pay attention to these people," Prins said.

Info center upsets SGA budget override the bill within the next two weeks. It will take a two-thirds majority vote to override the Skoog veto.

If the Senate does nothing, no money will be allocated to any of the student groups listed in the bill.

Skoog said he does not want the groups to go unfunded, but he won't let the information center go unfunded.

"I think we can work out a compromise," he said.

The last presidential veto was in December 1986.

Student Body President Steven Johnson vetoed a bill on a Senate representation referendum.

Billie Miller, director of the information center, said she had a petition with more than 300 signatures on it and had talked to students who supported the center.

She said she did not feel the Senate was representing what students wanted.

The center receives about 150 calls per day, she said.

"They are taking something from students," Miller said.

Bryndon Meinhardt, agriculture senator, argued in favor of the information center funding.

He said Senate should give the new director time to increase the quality of the center.

"We need to give it a breath and see if it will go," Meinhardt said.

Miller said the center has tried to update its references and survey students on how the center can be improved.

Clayton Wheeler, business senator, said Senate should stick to its original decision on the information center.

"These are good allocations," he said.

Fee gives students options help the infrastructure that is in need of help now," Parkinson said.

Trent LeDoux, member of the Union Governing Board, said students will not only see improvements in the programming, but the changes also will make students' lives easier.

"I want students to be able to come in one building, pick up a transcript, pick up financial aid, get something to eat and not have to troop all across campus," he said. "In the long run, you are going to see things that make the student's life easier."

If the referendum doesn't pass, the infrastructure will still need to be repaired through increased costs.

LeDoux said there isn't really another option because there are so many parts of the Union that need to be fixed.

"Electrically, we are at capacity," he said. "If we plugged in three or four more microphones, we would shut this place down."

Frese said to fix the infrastructure problems, student government doesn't have to go to a student referendum.

"That can be done through Student Senate, and Student Senate can approve that money, and you might still see a $25 fee," he said. "Right now, we are trying to give the students some of the options that we think have been missing from the Union for many years."

Some students addressed concerns for the Manhattan merchants and how this project could affect them.

LeDoux said the Union will not only let the franchises come in but local businesses, too.

"I can't think of any local business that wouldn't like the opportunity to open up a branch in here," he said. "We are not trying to squeeze anybody out by any means."

Frese said he talked to a local merchant about the possibility of the Union putting a strain on its business.

"He said, 'If you are going to compete against me, I don't want you there, but since you are giving everybody an option to rent there, then I would want to be one of the ones in there competing against everyone else,'" Frese said. "We're keeping an eye toward local businesses and trying to build strong ties between the Union and Manhattan."

Frese said student participation is encouraged at every level, and students' opinions on the project are something the board wants to hear more of.

"This is a student-driven project, but it is going to have benefits for everybody who comes to K-State, who has been to K-State and who will come to K-State," he said. "Students need to learn more about this project. They need to attend forums, meetings and give us their ideas and opinions. After all, the Union does belong to them."

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Coach Dana Altman displays the most commonly felt emotion of the K-State coaching bench during the 1993-94 season. The Cats were just 4-10 in Big Eight conference play.

Altman exits K-State

TREY JOHNSON
Collegian

Perhaps now people will be happy with K-State basketball.

After a season filled with criticism of everything ranging from recruiting to easy non-conference scheduling to poor conference play, Coach Dana Altman has resigned from K-State and accepted the head coaching position with Creighton in Omaha, Neb.

Altman resigned just 24 hours after the Wildcats lost the third-place game to Siena in the National Invitation Tournament in New York.

"I'm disappointed," K-State President Jon Wefald said. "His players graduate and represent the University with class. He has great integrity and dignity. And then you listen to the talk shows, and it seemed like people didn't even care about any of that."

Rumors had circulated during the NIT that Creighton was looking at Altman to fill the vacant coaching position left when Rick Johnson was fired.

Johnson was fired March 2 after the Bluejays posted a 7-22 season record.

Creighton is a member of the Missouri Valley Conference.

Before the announcement on Thursday, Altman said no discussions had taken place.

"They're in a hurry to do something, so I need to touch base with them and see where they're at," Altman said during the press conference after K-State's loss to Siena. "But our season is over now, and I'm going to talk to them."

The discussions must have been good.

"I wasn't sure that the commitment from Creighton University is what I was looking for," Altman said Thursday evening. "After spending the day here with everyone at the university that I've met, I believe that the commitment to the basketball program is there."

Altman is a native of Nebraska.

During his four years at K-State, Altman posted a 68-54 record.

The Wildcats' loss to Siena completed a 20-14 season.

This was the first season since 1988 that the Cats passed the 20-win mark. During the 1992-93 season, Altman led the Cats to a 7-7 conference season and a trip to the NCAA Tournament. The Cats had a sixth seed in the NCAA Southeast Regional before losing to Tulane in the first round of the tournament.

Finishing with such a performance, Altman was named Big Eight Coach of the Year by his peers.

This season, the Cats posted a 4-10 record in Big Eight play.

Altman signed a five-year deal with Creighton, but he was unwilling to discuss the salary information.

The K-State assistant coaches, Ken Turner, Greg Gensing and Peter Herrmann, have made no moves away from Manhattan, but Altman said he planned to talk to them during the Final Four games in Charlotte, N.C.

The move by Altman came as a surprise to the players. Altman had just finished coaching the prior evening.

The players arrived back in Manhattan Thursday and were unaware that Altman was traveling to Creighton for anything other than open-ended discussions.

"Coach Turner told us he had to leave early for an interview," sophomore George Hill said. "He didn't tell us himself."

While Altman did not tell his players in person, they each said they supported his decision.

Deryl Cunningham said he wished Altman had spoken to the team about his decision to leave the Cats.

"I feel bad for the players that are left behind," Cunningham said. "I went through this at DePaul, the assistant coach that recruited me left and didn't tell me."

"I had no idea of anything going on. And I think that's bad. I think they deserve to know face-to-face."

The first job facing Altman at Creighton is improving the Bluejays' program.

"I'm not sure how long it's going to take," Altman said.

"We will work as quickly as we can, as hard as we can, to bring it about as soon as possible."

Altman said his background could help Creighton rebuild its in-state recruiting program.

"I'm hoping that growing up in the state of Nebraska and the fact that I know a lot of the high school coaches in the state will help us," Altman said. "I know Creighton's basketball tradition is solid. We hope to draw upon that."

During the press conference after the Siena game, Altman discussed the possibility of moving to Creighton.

"I'm from Nebraska, and my wife is from Nebraska," Altman said. "She's got two brothers and sisters who live in Omaha."

A native of Wilbur, Neb., Altman will be just 75 miles from his home.

He said he thought it might be time to move beyond Manhattan.

"The fans have been fine," he said. "The administration's been great. But maybe it's time to look at something else."

"I love Kansas State. But Creighton says it's willing to make a great commitment to the program and to the coaching staff. So, I'm going to listen. That's all there is to it."

Replacement search in full swing to fill coaching vacancy

An advisory committee has been formed to assist President Jon Wefald in finding a new head basketball coach.

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State's search for a new men's basketball coach is in full effect.

Athletic Director Max Urlick announced last Friday the establishment of an advisory committee to serve as a resource to President Jon Wefald and himself in looking for someone to fill the void created when Dana Altman left to become head coach at Creighton.

The committee members include: Ernie Barrett, Lee Borek, Jim Cheatham, Robert DeBruyn, Ron Francis, Bob Hagans, Jack Hartman, Don Hoffman, Kathy Holen, Bob Krause, Fred Merrill, Max Moss, Don Rathbone, Howard Sherwood, Bill Sinderson, Ed Skoog, Bob Snell, Veryl Switzer, Richard Thiessen, Mark Truitt, Paul VanNostran, Jack Vanier and Byron Winans.

Urlick said the 23-member committee would assist in deciding the direction of the program, steps to be taken for goals of the program, assisting in establishing a profile for the type of coach needed at K-State and aiding in determining candidate credentials.

The group met at 1 p.m. Monday.

"We were briefed fully, and he (Urlick) told us who he has talked to so far," Skoog, student body president, said.

"We can't comment on any names, but the list is not definite by far."

The first meeting included a list of candidates and a discussion on the path of K-State's program.

"In today's meetings, we not only discussed the coaching vacancy, but the general direction of where the program is going," Skoog said.

"We are looking for a long-term coach, and there is no set time for our decision. We don't want to make any harsh decisions."

"We are just an advisory group," Skoog said. "We have no authority. Ultimately, it is Max Urlick's choice."

Holen, an assistant professor of elementary education, said she might have been selected for a variety of reasons.

"I have been on the Intercollegiate Athletic Council (IAC) for 15 years, give or take three years," she said.

"I know my schedule accommodated the times they wanted to meet for the search. I am a very loyal K-Stater and a sports fan."

The panel was not able to release any names of possible replacements for Altman, but Holen said the members are discussing the possibilities with an open mind.

"We were just sharing ideas on where the program is going and the qualities we might be looking for," she said.

"There are no camps where people are for or dead-against someone."

"We are trying to work speedily but efficiently."

Rathbone, dean of engineering, said the committee is a diverse group.

"I know it's a pretty good cross-section of people," he said. "I just know I was selected, and I'm happy to serve."

While the committee is not rushing, April 13 is the start of the spring signing period for recruits. Such signings will be difficult without a head coach.

Cats reach 20-win mark during NIT

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

The 20-win plateau was a feat the K-State program hasn't seen since the 1987-88 campaign.

That season, Lon Kruger led K-State to a 25-9 record and a Midwest Regional Championship in the NCAA Tournament.

The Wildcats were able to reach the 20-win mark this season, finishing with a 20-14 record and fourth in the National Invitation Tournament.

The Siena Saints concluded K-State's 1993-94 basketball campaign, downing the Cats 92-79 in the consolation game of the NIT.

Doremus Bennerman, a point guard for the Saints, scored 51 points against the Cats in the consolation game last Wednesday in New York.

No player had scored more than 43 points against K-State in one game since Bob Portman did it with Creighton in 1948.

"He was just spectacular," former coach Dana Altman said. "Our guys tried to play hard, tried to play with emotion, but we just couldn't guard him."

"He's the quickest, best-scoring point guard that we've ever faced."

Siena took an 11-6 lead with a three-pointer by Bennerman. Shortly after, Anthony Beane drew two quick fouls trying to slow down the Saints' leading scorer.

Beane was only able to play 11 minutes of the opening half because of foul trouble.

"That was the first point guard that I've faced that looked to score that much," Beane said. "He was quick moving side-to-side."

The closest the Cats could get was a three-point margin, 50-47, with 13 minutes to play.

Askia Jones led K-State with 31 points. Deryl Cunningham scored a career-high 24 points, hitting 10 of his 14 shots from the floor.

But the Cats couldn't keep Bennerman in check. He was nine of 15 from the field and 27 of 30 from the free-throw line.

"Defensively, we were just a step slow," Altman said. "The guys went to the Empire State Building, and it looked like they climbed all those steps."

The Cats advanced to the semifinals in New York by downing Mississippi State, Gonzaga and Fresno State in the first three rounds at Bramlage Coliseum.

Vanderbilt sent K-State to the consolation contest of the NIT, beating the Cats 82-76 in the semifinals.

K-STATE GOLF AT WICHITA

The K-State men's golf team finished two rounds of competition through Monday in the 7th Annual Diet Pepsi/Shocker Classic in Wichita. The Wildcats were in ninth place after Monday's round at the par-71 Tallgrass Country Club. Sean Robertson, a native of Salina, was in a tie for fourth place after shooting a 74 on Monday. Troy Halterman shot an 80 and an 84, taking 30th after two rounds. Individual standings for K-State through the first two rounds are listed below.

■ 4. Sean Robertson	79-78=157
■ 30. Troy Halterman	84-80=164
■ 38. Chad Judd	85-80=165
■ 55. Chad Buckridge	84-86=170
■ 61. Will Siebert	86-85=171

Hartman joins committee after hospital visit in March

NICOLE POELL Collegian

Not even a week-long hospital stay could keep Jack Hartman down for long.

Hartman, K-State's winningest basketball coach and current TV commentator for Wildcat games, has recovered from his hospital visit in early March.

He's now gearing up for his role on K-State's advisory committee that will look for a successor for former coach Dana Altman, who was named the basketball coach at Creighton Thursday night.

"I feel great, and the doctors say I'm fine," Hartman said. "I had a blocked artery, but since the blockage had already done some damage, it was too late to do any balloon surgery. The doctors decided just to leave it."

Hartman's recovery came just in time for him to join the 23-member committee that will help President Jon Wefald and Athletic Director Max Urick in their search for Altman's replacement.

While Hartman said he was surprised to see Altman leave K-State, he also said he's ready to get down to business in helping find the right man for the job.

"I'm going into this with an open mind, and I think the most important thing for the committee to do right now is to get a feel for those who are most interested in the job."

Joining Hartman on the committee are alumni, former coaches, students and administrators who include: Ernie Barrett, Lee Borck, Jim Cheatham, Robert DeBryun, Ron Francis, Bob Hagans, Don Hoffman, Kathy Holen, Bob Krause, Fred Merrill, Max Moss, Richard Theissen, Don Rathbone, Howard Sherwood, Bill Sinderson, Ed Skoog, Bob Snell, Veryl Switzer, Mark Truitt, Paul VanNostran, Jack Vanier and Byron Winans.

The group met Monday afternoon, and while it's made up of diverse individuals, Hartman said everyone is looking at the same overall criteria in the selection process.

"We're all looking at basically the same things," Hartman said.

"But, first of all, we need to make sure that the person we select can coach. Some of the other qualities that come to my mind will be his ability to recruit, his ability to communicate with the players, and how well he can be in touch with our alumni throughout the state and nationwide."

As the longest tenured and most successful coach in school history, Hartman's continued commitment to K-State should come as no surprise to those who remember him from his coaching days.

Throughout his 16-year coaching career at K-State, from 1970 until 1986, Hartman led the Cats to three Big Eight titles, two conference tournaments and nine post-season appearances. Hartman's Cats tallied 20 or more wins seven times, making his record at K-State 295-169 for a .643 percentage.

He was named the National Coach of the Year in 1981, when the Cats made the NCAA West Regional Finals, upsetting San Francisco, Illinois and top-ranked Oregon State.

Since his retirement in 1986, Hartman still resides in Manhattan and said he always manages to drop by the Cats' practice sessions during the season.

"After all those years I spent as a coach here, I can't help but care about K-State. It's pretty special to me."

Wildcats drop into tie for last place with losses at Iowa State

BRIAN ANDERSON Collegian

The K-State baseball team dropped into a tie for last place in the Big Eight Conference with Nebraska last weekend, losing two games to Iowa State.

The games were played at the Cap Timm Field Saturday and Sunday at Ames, Iowa.

The Wildcats (11-21, 2-7 in the conference) lost 11-7 Sunday and 8-4 in the first game of a doubleheader Saturday. K-State took the second game, 18-4.

During Sunday's first game, second baseman Mark Elsinger went 4-for-5 — three of the hits were doubles — with six RBI, including the game-winning RBI, to help Iowa

State (9-15, 3-6 in the league) win 8-4.

Iowa State gained the lead in the bottom of the fourth inning on solo home runs by Monte Jones and Paul Walker.

Between the home runs, Darin DeRue hit a triple and then scored on a sacrifice fly from T. J. Graber.

The Cats evened the score in the fifth. After consecutive walks to Todd Fereday and Chris Hess, Tim Decker's single to the right-field corner scored both base runners.

The Cyclones fired back to take a 5-3 lead. Chad Ponegalek led off the inning with a walk and scored on Elsinger's double off K-State's Rob Merriman (2-6).

Elsinger moved to third base on a sacrifice bunt and scored on a sacrifice fly from Brad Mangler.

Elsinger's third double in the seventh inning brought in two runs, and he scored again on a sacrifice fly from Mangler for an 8-3 Cyclone advantage.

K-State batted around in the eighth inning and scored four runs to close the gap. The rally started with a two-run home run off Miller.

A two-run single by Hess brought in Chris Bouchard and Fereday, and K-State climbed to within one run of Iowa State, 8-7.

The Cyclones cushioned their lead in the eighth inning with a two-run single from Elsinger, and an Adam Green error scored one run for an 11-7 win.

During Saturday's second game, the Cats defeated the Cyclones 18-

4. Fereday went 3-for-5 with two home runs and eight RBI.

The Cats scored seven runs in the third inning. Fereday hit his first grand-slam home run to bring in Miller, Scott Poepard and Hess.

In the first game of Saturday's doubleheader, a pair of home runs from Miller — a solo shot in the second and a three-run blast in the third — couldn't help K-State win as the Cats committed four errors that led five Cyclone unearned runs to score in the 8-4 loss to Iowa State.

Mid-season collapse

K-State's 4-10 Big Eight record puts damper on promising year

The players and coaches had higher expectations. Certainly, the fans did, too.

After finishing last season as an NCAA Tournament qualifier with a No. 6 seed, K-State seemed to have so much promise for the 1993-94 campaign.

But the Wildcats faltered in the heart of their Big Eight Conference season and finished with a 4-10 record in league play.

"Our expectations were high after last season," assistant coach Ken Turner said. "We had some key players back, and we felt we could surround those players with some good players."

"We felt we would win 20 games in the regular season. But we didn't take care of business in the Big Eight."

The Cats fell three games short of the 20-win mark, sporting a 17-12 record at the end of the regular-season stint. K-State won three of seven games at home and one of seven on the road.

"We knew we had to win our games at home," Turner said. "That would have put us at 7-7, and we thought we could sneak up on some teams on the road."

K-State did go 7-7 in the league last season, helping it earn a trip to the NCAA Tournament.

"When we had to step it up last year, we did," Turner said. "This year, we didn't. We were more consistent last year."

K-State started this year strong, winning 10 straight non-conference games.

The Cats were 10-1, and everything seemed fine. They even knocked off then-No. 1 Kansas, 68-64, in Lawrence.

"I thought the game against Kansas might open their eyes," Turner said.

"But we got complacent and satisfied with that win."

After beating Kansas, K-State lost nine of its remaining 14 games and finished the regular season with a four-game losing streak.

In the first post-season game, the Cats scored just 13 points in the first half, eventually losing to Kansas, 73-52, in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament.

"Last year, we had everybody playing well on the same night," senior Deryl Cunningham said.

"This year, different guys stepped up on different nights. We needed to hit on all cylinders. The times we were able to do that, we won — like we did at Kansas. Everybody had to play their part."

At Lawrence, Askia Jones scored 26 points, Anthony Beane had 18 points and six assists, Demond Davis had nine points and eight rebounds, and Cunningham grabbed 10 boards.

In the series with Oklahoma, the Cats lost at Norman 87-77. Jones led the Cats with 31 points, and Cunningham added 19 points and 21 rebounds. But that was about it.

However, in Manhattan, all four seniors scored in double figures, helping K-State gain the 89-76 victory.

After the win against the Sooners, the Cats won just one game in their last five attempts.

But the Cats managed to better themselves in the National Invitation Tournament, winning three out of five games. K-State reached the semifinals at Madison Square Garden in New York.

"It (the NIT) was good for us," Turner said. "It enabled us to finish on a winning and positive note."

Jones scored a school- and conference-record 62 points against Fresno State in the third round as the Cats qualified for the NIT final four for the first time.

"The biggest low was not making the NCAA Tournament and not finishing higher in the conference," Cunningham said. "We did have some bright spots, like making the final four of the NIT. Also, watching Ski get those 62 points was a highlight."

Vanderbilt ended K-State's run through the tournament, downing the Cats 82-76 in the semifinals. Siena beat the Cats 92-79 in the consolation game and ended K-State's season with a 20-14 record.

"It was a chance to end a little bit better," Cunningham said of K-State's NIT experience. "It may not have been exactly what we wanted, but we didn't want to go out with nothing."

The Jumping Path

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Dante McGrew isn't too vocal about his athletic ability. McGrew captured second place in the triple jump at the Big Eight Championships last season and has already met the provisional standard in the event for this year's NCAA championships. Even though the senior eclipsed the provisional qualifying mark with a leap of 52 feet, 4 inches in the Wildcats' first meet, McGrew said he wasn't jubilant. "I should've done better," McGrew said. K-State's first meet of the year was the College Station Relays at Texas A&M. McGrew's ability has placed him among some impressive athletes. Last summer, he competed alongside 1992 Olympic champion Mike Conley at the TAC (The Athletic Congress) National Championships in Eugene, Ore. The meet served as a qualifier for the World Championships, which took place in Stuttgart, Germany. "I had to jump right after he (Conley) did," McGrew said. "It was kind of embarrassing." The top three athletes in each event represented the United States at the World Championships. "I feel like I can go a lot farther," McGrew said. "Just because you're a good athlete doesn't make you a better person." What McGrew enjoys most about the triple jump is not personal glory but the closeness with his teammates, he said. During competition, McGrew said, he absorbs the support of his teammates. "My teammates help me out a lot, especially during the meets," he said. Even McGrew's style while competing is low-key, unlike some of the jumpers who perform minor superstitious ceremonies before jumping. McGrew said he just listens to music, eats candy and jumps. "I eat a lot of candy for energy," McGrew said.

However, underneath the modest personality lies a fierce competitor. "I can't stand getting beat," McGrew said, shaking his head in disgust. "I can't even stand to lose playing Sega with my friends." Teammate Marlene Davis said McGrew will throw the controller if he loses one of their video-game battles. "I don't beat him very often at video games," Davis said. "He is the king of luck." Along with high jumper Ed Broxterman, Davis and McGrew spend their weekends together playing video games or renting movies. Davis said the three push each other during practice. "Dante calls me a scrub and tells me he can run faster than me," Davis, who runs the 400 and 800 meters, said. "I tell him I can jump further than him." Davis refers to McGrew as "Slaw Dog," which Davis said means scrub. "We always try to compete,"

Davis said. "It (the video games) is just another way for us to compete." However, McGrew said he worries about other things besides competition. McGrew, an elementary education major, said he thinks about teaching children. "The kids today are hurting," McGrew said. "They just aren't very stable." After working as a teacher's aid, McGrew said he was convinced it was the right career for him. "When I went to school, the kids seemed to like me, and I really like working with them," McGrew said. McGrew said he also wants to coach high-school athletes. "I really enjoy trying to help out kids," McGrew said. "I feel like I can relate because I'm just a big kid myself." "Big kid" may be an accurate way to describe McGrew. He said he's not looking to impress anybody with his triple-jumping talent — he's just having fun.

Defaults lead to Cats' Big Eight loss on road

CRAIG PINKERTON

After winning its first Big Eight match of the season, K-State's women's tennis team dropped a match to Colorado, 8-1, last weekend. K-State, which beat Missouri 6-1, fell to 4-12 and 1-1 in league action.

Freshman Nikki Lagerstrom picked up K-State's lone victory against the Buffaloes by downing Sara Willens 6-4, 6-4 in No. 3 singles. The win ran Lagerstrom's conference record to 2-0.

"Nikki played well, but that was no surprise because Nikki has been playing well," Coach Steve Bietau said. "It was a good win for her and a big step for her."

Playing people who are usually more experienced and better is a positive learning experience for Lagerstrom.

"The best thing to do in tennis, or probably any sport, is to play a higher level of player because you can learn from them," she said.

Summer Ruckman dropped her No.-1 singles match to Nathalie Dickson, 6-0, 6-3. Martine Shrubsole fell to Erika Stenstrom, 6-1, 6-0 in her No.-2 singles match. Brooke Brundige, playing No.-4 singles, lost to Karin Brannvall, 6-1, 6-3.

The Buffs swept both of the doubles matches.

The problem of not having enough players available to play continues to plague the Wildcats. K-State defaulted in No.-5 and No.-6 singles and No.-3 doubles due to the lack of healthy members. Being

HOME FINALE

The women's tennis team will play their last two matches of the home season against Nebraska on Saturday and Iowa State on Sunday. Both games are at home.

short players cost the netters three points out of a possible nine.

Being down three points before the match begins diminishes the Cats' chances of winning but not their attitude.

"The situation now really tests everyone," Bietau said. "It tests their motivation, their self-confidence, and it forces them to do a great job to have any chance at all. Even if they do a great job, there is no guarantee they'll get the results they would like to have. Knowing that, I think they are doing an exceptional job of handling the situation."

With so many players out to injury and illness, the remaining players haven't let their spirits get them down.

"When it first happened, everybody was upset, obviously," Lagerstrom said. "But now, our attitude is better than it has been all year."

The netters will continue trying to play good tennis this weekend as they will play conference foes Nebraska on Saturday and Iowa State on Sunday in Manhattan. The two matches will be the last at home for the Cats.

Will K-State miss Altman? Ultimately, the answer is yes

Hoots and hollers could be heard throughout K-State residence halls last Thursday night.

The reason the students were cheering was basketball coach Dana Altman had just stepped down at K-State for the head coaching job at Creighton.

One guy on my floor heard the news of Altman's departure and went into his room and announced the news to his friends.

That was followed by five or six loud cheers of "Yes," "He's finally gone" and "We won't miss him."

I walked down toward my room, and I started to wonder — will we really miss him?

As I first started to ponder, I said there was no way we would miss Coach Altman. We went to the NIT this season, and everyone knows what that means — Not In the Tournament (NCAA).

This season's sixth-place finish in the Big Eight Conference also reinforced that thought.

Despite qualifying for the National Invitation Tournament final four, I believe there was only one bright spot this season: the upset victory against then-No. 1 ranked Kansas.

The rest of the season didn't offer much promise. After the victory against Kansas, the Cats plummeted to near the cellar of the Big Eight.

Then as I lay on my bed, I fumbled through the K-State media guide. Eventually, I came upon the section that reviewed last season's records and accomplishments.

In my mind, I started to recall the great season and how Altman motivated the group of under-achievers all the way to the NCAA Tournament and the championship game of the Big Eight Tournament.

JEREMY CRABTREE

I also remember the victory against Oklahoma at Bramlage Coliseum and how the student section came pouring out on the court jumping around.

No one seemed to be dissatisfied with Altman at that moment.

Then this season happened, and Creighton came calling with an escape route from all of the criticism.

Altman said one reason he is leaving is because Creighton is close to where he is from. He also said it would be good for his family and that the Bluejays have made a commitment to basketball.

What you didn't hear Altman say as a reason for his departure was the criticism, but you know that played a factor.

We will definitely miss Altman for several reasons.

My first reason that we will miss Altman is he improved his record each of his four years at K-State. He came in here right off the heels of Lon Kruger and won 13 games during his first season.

Then, during his next two seasons, the Cats continued to improve their record, and they made an appearance in the Big Dance.

Altman also will be missed through his recruiting. Recruiting services have the Cats' class ranked in the top 25 for next season's recruits.

Maybe alumni and students can learn next time not to be so hard on the coach, and maybe he'll stay a bit longer.

As for the new coach, I wish him luck.

There are a lot of qualified candidates.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE'S 1994 REFERENDUM GUIDE

$25 increase enough to pay for expansion

TAWNYA ERNST

Money, money, money.

It's what everyone wants, and it's what the Union needs before improvements are made.

Should a student referendum on April 12-13 pass, full-time students will pay $25 each semester for the next 26 years.

"Twenty-five dollars is enough revenue to pay for the expansion," Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said. "But we will have to sell revenue bonds."

"Interest will have to be paid just like any home mortgage, but we do know that $25 will be sufficient to fund the $9.2 million enhancement project," Rawson said. He said it would cost more to make improvements later, and the students would get less for their money.

With interest, the project will cost $21 million.

However, students aren't the only ones who will have to pull out their checkbooks to pay for Union improvements.

The administration has agreed to provide additional funding if the referendum passes. The Union Programming Council and the plaza north of the Union stand to benefit from administration funding.

"If students succeed in passing the referendum, it means a substantial improvement in campus programming immediately," Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement and dean of student life, said.

The total UPC budget would be $130,000 next year if the referendum passes. The budget increases would be used to enhance programming starting in the fall.

The referendum allows for an additional $70,000 to be added to the present $30,000 UPC budget. Another $30,000 would come from the institutional support fee.

The administration money would come from the institutional support fee, which is collected from local agencies and campus auxiliaries, such as parking, housing, Lafene, intercollegiate athletics and student publications, Bosco said.

The UPC budget hasn't been increased since 1988, Paul Donovan, UPC president, said.

Donovan said if you consider inflation, the UPC budget has actually decreased. He said there are activities UPC has not been able to offer because of the lack of money. UPC has also been forced to reduce its office hours.

"If the referendum doesn't pass, there will be drastic cuts in a lot of services," Donovan said. "There won't be a lot left here."

UPC also was responsible for homecoming and open house activities for the first time this year but did not receive more funds to cover the additional costs.

Brent Coverdale, UPC president-elect, said if the referendum passes, UPC would try to bring in some recognized bands and more speakers on student issues.

Funding from the administration would also go toward reconstruction of the plaza area, contingent upon the passage of the referendum.

Union Food Services' future looks bleak without boost from expansion referendum

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The K-State Union Food Services' net revenue has dropped $120,000 since last year.

"It's no secret we're having a bad year," Jack Sills, Union director, said. "We're going to end up with a loss this year, and it'll be a significant loss."

Projected budget figures for this fiscal year show a net revenue of $4,500 compared to $124,177 in 1992-93, Malley Sisson, food services director, said.

The expansion looks favorable to the food services, Sisson said, because it is giving a boost just at a time when finances are at their worst.

"If the renovation doesn't pass so we can have hope to become modern and update, what hope do we have to expect to provide goods and services that we offer now?" Sisson said.

"Our plans are very bleak without the renovation. I can't tell you what the future is, but it wouldn't be good without it," she said.

Without the expansion, David Frese, student body vice president, said it could result in a decrease in food service hours, the foods that are made available and the possibility of the Union contracting food services to outside sources.

"There's three ways of doing this," Frese said. "One, buy a fast-food franchise like Joe Smith has in Aggieville. Two, buy the product and cook it up and sell it under their name. And three, rent that space out to a franchise owner and preferably a person who lives in Manhattan."

The third is the most palatable option, Frese said, because the Union would receive money from the rental space.

If you have more variety, students will be more excited about coming in and that will increase revenue, customer count all around.

The expansion could mean more customers and in turn more money, Sisson said.

With or without the expansion, a price increase will go into effect May 18, she said.

There will be an approximate 6.4-percent price increase on all items on the menu, she said. Tax will no longer be included in the prices on the menus. Pennies will be used instead of rounding off to the nickel.

Additionally, providing that the city annexes the University, the sales tax will increase 1 percent from 5.4 percent, Sisson said.

The price increase is necessary to have the $97,000 that food services are budgeted to contribute to the Union.

"That's considered our necessary requirement," Sisson said.

The money enables the Union to generate increased revenue so it can become less dependent on student fee increases, Sisson said.

"It has never been able to have a break-even year without student fees," she said.

The Union and food services are dependent on their customers.

Recently, fewer customers and higher labor costs have worked adversely on the food services profit making abilities, Sisson said.

The cost of labor continues to increase on a yearly basis, and with fewer customers, it's harder to operate at a profit-making level, Sisson said.

"What we want to do is relate the total money we spend for labor with the net revenue," she said. "We're paying more for labor with fewer sales coming in."

FOOD SERVICE REVENUES PLUMMET

The K-State Union's net revenues from food services have fallen from 234,096 in 1989-90 to 124,177 in 1992-93.

Source: K-State Union

SARA SMITH/Collegian

The Union has 40 full-time benefit employees. Each receives single-coverage health insurance.

The cost of the insurance has jumped from about $75 over the last several years to $212 this year. Effective July 1, it will go up to $222.

Sisson attributes the lower customer count to increased competition from outside franchises and the condition of the Stateroom.

"The big question is what has happened. There is a lot more competition with places off campus. There are more options for faculty and students to eat at," she said.

The appearance of the Stateroom has also been a drawback, Sisson said. Customers feel uncomfortable eating there, she said.

"It's old, it's dated. Customers don't like it,"

Sisson said. "It's just become less attractive to eat here because as other places open up, new and up-to-date, we stay the same, and each year we look worse."

"The reason we haven't changed is that we don't have major funds to redo everything out here."

Because of fewer customers, Sisson said they have already cut back on the number of hours that food services are open.

The reduced hours and the expansion have caused some concern among employees.

"There have been hours cut and jobs rearranged. People have been switched around already," Carolyn Harkins, center beverage work leader and food services employee for nine years, said.

Beer sales hinge upon expansion

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

The possible expansion of the Union has brought renewed interest to the sale of alcohol on campus.

The two are in no way tied together, Union Director Jack Sills said, but the Union Governing Board is looking into the possibility once again.

It is up to the UGB to make any decision on the issue, he said.

"It's my personal preference to abide by the decision of the UGB," Sills said. "We will be seeking whatever is best for the Union and K-

State students."

The UGB is waiting to see if the expansion referendum passes, UGB President Beth Trimmer said.

"Until the referendum passes, UGB can't take steps to change its policies," Trimmer said. "It's all so up in the air. There's no concrete answers."

"We have to do the homework before we make a decision," she said. "We're in the process of calling schools that have sold beer to find out what success or problems they have had."

Without the passage of the referendum, Trimmer said, the UGB could still change its policy, but the Union likely wouldn't have the money to bring in the beer.

Even then, she said, a decision wouldn't be made until next year.

K-State's policy now states that students of legal age can consume 3.2-percent cereal malt beverage. However, the policy doesn't contain any information about the sale of alcohol.

The Kansas Board of Regents alcohol policy states that 3.2 beer can be served on campuses under guidelines set up by the school's administration.

DID YOU KNOW?

- A Union expansion will cost 31 cents per student per day for 26 years. The Union was built in 1956 and hasn't been remodeled since 1972.
- More than 1 million customers use the Union each year.
- Ours is the second-largest Union in the regents system, but it receives the least amount of financial support from students for operations, repairs and programming.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the K-State Union, explains how outdated and fragile the Union's plumbing is while standing in the gate of the mechanical room last week during a tour of the Union. During the past five years, the Union's plumbing has backed up an average of four to six times a year. The backups endanger the Union's recreation area, bookstore and Union Station.

Union tour shows problems

"It takes $200,000 a year to turn the lights on. We have every overhead you can imagine in business. We take in $10 million, but $10 million goes out."

JACK CONNAUGHTON
Associate Director of the K-State Union

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

If you'd gone to the K-State Union to bowl a frame the Monday during spring break, you might have been up to your ankles in sewer water.

A backed-up drain in the recreation area caused a flood of water out of one of the restrooms halfway to the bowling lanes. There was three inches of water in the video gameroom.

This was just the latest in a long history of plumbing problems in the Union and part of the infrastructural malaise it is suffering after 50 years of constant use, Union associate director Jack Connaughton said.

The Union was built in 1956 using student fees. It was renovated and added on to in 1963 and again in 1972.

Plans for renovating and expanding the Union are based on the $9-million figure that would be raised by increasing students' Union fee by $25 over the next 26 years.

Proponents of the Union expansion project are so determined to show they are not just frivolously picking students' pockets that they invite any skeptics to take a tour of the Union — behind the scenes.

■ A plethora of plumbing problems

There are no tell-tale smells left in the rec area after three shampoos with sanitizer and deodorizer, recreation manager Terri Eddy said. But, she said, the pipes back up about six times a year.

"We've been really lucky that it hasn't hit us bad at peak times," Eddy said.

Though the back-ups have only been minor annoyances at this point, they do have financial repercussions.

If the water backs up around the snack bar, it jeopardizes sales, Eddy said.

"You couldn't sell food if you're standing in sewage," she said.

When it happens, the city has to be called in to flush the lines, which costs about $200 a trip, she said.

Connaughton said the problem is probably the 4-inch pipes, which are too small to handle the volume of water from the rest of the Union.

They are the original pipes, he said, installed when the building served only half the students it does now. At the Union's present capacity, 6-inch pipes are needed.

The rec area isn't the only place that has suffered from bad plumbing. Eddy said parts of the dance floor in Union Station have been replaced three times because of pipes leaking. She said it could spread above the DJ station, which contains very expensive equipment.

Connaughton said it's scary to think about what's above the ceiling in Union Station.

"Those old pipes are right above an area we spent $200,000 to remodel," he said.

■ Duct tape does it all

If the water inside the pipes is worrisome, what lies around the pipes may also give some people pause: asbestos.

Connaughton said most of the pipes in the Union are insulated with asbestos, but it should not be a cause for worry.

"As long as it's not disturbed, it's OK," he said.

The Union would have to be completely shut down to remove the asbestos, and so far, there hasn't been enough planning or money, Connaughton said. The Union has not set a date for the asbestos removal.

Way back in the engine room, Connaughton pointed out heating ducts that are falling apart and being held together with duct tape.

An enormous hot water heater is taking up space. It isn't used, but it can't be removed.

"We'd have to cut it apart, but if we cut it apart, it has asbestos. So, we just left it," Connaughton said.

He said some of the plumbing system could probably be salvaged, but a lot would need to be replaced.

The Union has also reached its electrical capacity, he said, and it would be difficult to add any additional electrical equipment.

Most of the restrooms are also in pretty bad shape, especially those on the ground floor, he said.

Connaughton said it cost about $60,000 to renovate the first floor restrooms in the early 1980s.

"We could probably spend a million dollars on restrooms alone," he said.

Apart from structural repairs, he said much of the Union just needs a facelift, such as the stateroom, ballroom and courtyard.

■ Money, money everywhere, and not a cent to spend

Don't get the idea that the Union has been allowed to decay through neglect, Connaughton said.

In the past, money has tended to be

OTHER IMPROVEMENTS

Other targeted areas for renovation in the Union include carpeting, the loading dock, Vending Services and the security system.

spent in places that have high visibility to students, such as the Union Station, he said.

When it came to updating the stateroom, it was decided to put in a mini food court that offered pizza, chicken and Mexican food and an ice cream counter instead of renovating the entire cafeteria.

"It gets the job done, but we don't have the elbow room we need to get the job done better and get the service out quicker," Connaughton said.

Instead of buying all new chairs for the dining room last year, new purple chairbacks and seats were purchased, and only a quarter of the money was spent. It was all the Union could afford after spending $250,000 on roof repairs.

"If we would have taken that money and bought new chairs, someone would have noticed it, but we didn't have $250,000 to spend twice," Connaughton said.

■ There's more overhead than just asbestos

Part of the Union's money woes stems from a philosophy, which is not to gouge the students, he said.

Other student unions rely on fee money, he said, but the Union has always paid operation expenses with sales, user fees, conference fees and other self-generated income and let student fees pay for things such as programs and student government activities.

Connaughton said overhead costs can be quite high.

"It takes $200,000 a year to turn the lights on," he said.

"We have every overhead that you can imagine in business. We take in $10 million, but $10 million goes out."

Retail space to open if students vote yes

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Students may soon see private businesses in the Union if the Union expansion project is approved by students.

The Union plans to move the bookstore on one level, and the space occupied by the bookstore on the ground floor could be used for retail space.

The Union would have room to have two to six spaces for retail stores or services in that space at a cost of about $150,000.

Dave Frese, student body vice president, said the retail space in the Union will cost the least. But, it has the biggest potential for revenue.

He said the businesses would bring more jobs and more revenue to the Union.

Jack Sills, Union director, said the criteria by which the Union would select business that would be allowed to go use the space hasn't been decided yet.

Jack Thoman, Union business manager, said revenue from retailers could be used for improvements elsewhere in the Union.

"Students will have a lot to say about how the space is used, but it is up to us as administrator to get the best deal for the students," Thoman said.

The Union would collect rent for the retail space or it might collect a commission on total sales, he said.

He said the decision would be based on cost considerations and students' preferences. The Union would have to take proposals and make a selection based on the guidelines specified by the state of Kansas.

The Union has not contacted any local businesses to see if they would be interested in the space. However, Sills said a couple of businesses had contacted the Union.

Sills said the other campuses the Union contacted that had retail stores did not have any problems finding businesses to fill their retail space.

"We have to have the space before we can contact the businesses," Frese said.

Entire businesses or services probably would not be established in the Union, Sills said. The stores using the Union retail space would be extensions of businesses in the area. Sills used the example of a dry cleaner.

"You probably won't have an entire dry cleaners in the that space, but there could be a pick-up point where students could drop off their clothes," he said.

Branding would be another option of the food services expansion.

The Union could bring in a brand name pizza, hamburger or taco restaurant to the Union.

Frese said the Colorado State University Union put a Hardee's™ in its union, and it doubled the food service sales.

"Food service will benefit simply because there will be a variety of places to eat in the Union," Frese said. "People will not want to eat hamburgers every day."

Thoman said it would be harder for local businesses to compete with national franchises for the space, but he said local people often own franchise businesses.

"The UGB philosophy is to get as many local businesses as possible," Frese said.

Randy Martin, president of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said businesses didn't know very much about the expansion yet.

He said local businesses would not object to having private businesses in the Union if fair competition was allowed. He said he didn't think businesses in the Union should be subsidized in any way.

Parking question remains unsolved

SARA ABRAHAM
Collegian

There may soon be more space to eat or study in the Union, but there won't be more space to park your car.

A parking garage and hotel were two ideas that the Union looked into as complements to the Union expansion project. For financial reasons, neither proposal is included in the $9.2 million project students will vote on April 12-13.

Memorial Stadium was one of the locations being considered for a parking garage, with perhaps an enclosed skywalk linking it to the Union, Dwain Archer, manager of parking services, said.

Parking and the Union were two separate issues and had traditionally used two separate means of funding. Students have been responsible for funding and running the Union, and parking has been funded by parking fees, Skyler Harper, associate architect in facilities planning, said.

Jack Sills, director of the Union, said the lack of parking hurts Union business, but parking shouldn't be funded through the Union.

"I don't think that a parking garage or a hotel is something that students should have to pay for," Sills said.

An additional concern was the considerable expense involved in building a hotel or parking garage. Ed Skoog, student body president, said.

Both would be expensive and would require a greater budget than the $9.2 million that the present Union expansion proposal hopes to raise.

While it remains on the agenda as a long-term goal, Skoog said a parking garage will not be part of the current expansion project.

The possibility of developing a shuttle system or a parking garage is still being explored by Facilities Planning, Parking Services, the Student Governing Association and various other bodies on campus, Archer said.

Economic issues hamper Union expansion plans fronts," Bosco said. "We would also take care of the plaza, which is the focal point for campus."

"Right now, it's aesthetically unappealing. With SGA leadership, we've been able to forge an agreement," Bosco said.

"If the referendum is successful, funding would be secured to develop the plaza."

"The administration has pledged that. That area would be our responsibility."

Reconstruction of the plaza would probably take about four years, Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said.

Guttering and curbs would be removed and the entire area re-landscaped, Rawson said.

"It's not an inexpensive undertaking," he said. "It would cost well in excess of $100,000."

There are special maintenance funds that would be available for the reconstruction, Rawson said.

The plaza would be complete five years after the completion of the expansion project, Rawson said.

Without passage of the referendum, the Union will not receive the funding from the administration.

But the Union stands to lose more than money without the expansion project, Bosco said.

Services will be cut, and the infrastructure's condition will only get worse.

"Without it, we'll see a drastic cut in K-State Union services," Bosco said.

"First, you'll see it in building hours and options. It's a direct result in our inability to provide renovation and expanded space to increase revenue."

"Without this plan, the University has to deal with the day-to-day reality that the infrastructure and heating and cooling are deteriorating."

The alternative is that there will be no money available for maintenance or reserves for emergencies. The Union would break even from year to year, Bosco said.

One reason that the Union has not received attention earlier is due to the fact that students have already been asked to support a variety of other projects, including Farrell Library and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, Bosco said.

"There always seemed to be other projects that had a higher priority," he said.

"It's the Union's turn and time to be considered."

ENVISIONING THE POSSIBILITIES

Here are some possibilities and goals for the expansion of the K-State Union. None of these plans are final, and students will be surveyed for their ideas before any plans are finalized.

- ✓ Enhance lounge space.
- ✓ More study space.
- ✓ Music listening center.
- ✓ New TV lounge with more space and new furniture.
- ✓ Relocate Union Programming Council offices and establish offices for some student groups.
- ✓ Fountain and international flag display.
- ✓ University satellite offices — Career Placement, University ID Center and Alumni office.
- ✓ Equip all meeting rooms with modern equipment.
- ✓ Add a teleconference room.
- ✓ Relocate and enhance copy center.
- Consider sister services to Union Bookstore: copyright materials, custom packets, etc.
- One-stop shopping for classroom materials.
- ✓ Non-retail information center — information racks only. Snacks would be moved to a ground-floor Union-operated convenience store.
- ✓ Additional storage.
- ✓ Increase office space.
- ✓ Add locker space for customers and employees.
- ✓ Computer lab space.
- ✓ Maximize open space.
- For programming.
- For international students.
- New speaker system in courtyard.
- More study space.
- Renovate courtyard.
- Close in courtyard to utilize space differently.
- ✓ Lounge or club where beer would be served.
- ✓ Store to sell K-State items — meats, grains, bulk flour and dairy products.
- ✓ Improve Union lighting.
- ✓ New movie equipment in Forum Hall.
- ✓ Miscellaneous new equipment: copiers, vehicles, furniture, etc.

Regents approve tuition hike

A legislative conference committee reached an agreement on a $12.4 million bill for the state's six universities. The bill doesn't allow funding for PFE.

Bill would increase tuition, raise $12.4 million for universities
ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A legislative conference committee Wednesday reached an agreement on a bill that would appropriate an additional $12.4 million for the state's six universities.

The bill does not contain funding for Partnership for Excellence, a program that would increase faculty salaries so they are more competitive with those offered at universities in other states.

But the bill would increase tuition at the three larger universities — the University of Kansas, Kansas State University and Wichita State University — by 5 percent. It would increase tuition by 3 percent at the three regional universities — Pittsburg State University, Emporia State University and Fort Hays State University.

The tuition increases would raise another $12.2 million.

Under the measure, the Board of Regents would be able to give faculty members pay increases of no more than 2.5 percent. However, individual schools will decide who receives a raise, so some professors might not see a salary increase.

Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, said the regents will have $5.3 million for unspecified purposes, a new approach to funding state universities.

"I think some people are going to have problems with this philosophy," said Bogina, the chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

He said under the funding proposal, universities will have to compete for money before the Board of Regents, rather than the Legislature.

The bill also would earmark a $775,900 increase for funding for school libraries. The money would be spent during the 1995 fiscal year, which begins July 1.

On Tuesday, the committee resolved two other major appropriations bills, one for $1.5 billion for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services and the other for $1.6 billion for the Department of Education.

K-State students pay $30 compared to $41 at the University of Kansas, $59.25 at Wichita State University and $40.50 at Emporia State University, according to UPC data.

UPC could gain an immediate boost if students pass the Union expansion referendum.

If students support the referendum, $100,000 more a year — $30,000 from the administration and $70,000 from student fees — will be given to fund programming next fall. If the expansion doesn't pass, the UPC budget will remain at Trent LeDoux, sophomore in agricultural economics, and Pat Carney, junior in political science, express their interest in allowing the Union to sell alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. Two students stacked empty beer cans and cigarette packages on a table in the Union today to show their disapproval of Union beer and tobacco policies.

Trent LeDoux, Union Governing Board member, and Patrick Carney, UGB candidate, were in the Union plugging beer and tobacco sales.

UGB policy states that tobacco can't be sold or consumed anywhere in the Union. Only certain non-student groups can serve alcohol at special events.

LeDoux proposed a policy change that would have allowed the sale of tobacco in the Union to UGB earlier this year, but it was defeated.

LeDoux and Carney said students want the products available. They said changing the policies would bring more students and revenue to the Union.

"Food Service revenue dropped $143,000 this year," LeDoux said. "The Union needs to find a way to bring in some money." "People aren't buying anything when they come here," he said. "We can use every source of revenue we can get."

Increased traffic means increased revenue, LeDoux said.

He said the Union could also bring in more revenue from conventions through beer and tobacco sales.

"I always know when there is a convention here, because there are six people smoking outside the entrance," he said.

Carney said the students he has talked to have supported the beer sales idea.

He said beer and tobacco sales should be options considered in the Union expansion project if it is passed by students in a referendum next week.

An area for people to smoke inside the Union should also be an option that is considered in the expansion, Carney said.

He said more people would use the Union if beer and tobacco were allowed.

Wild Turkey Workers', Students for Students, Students for Leadership, Hope and Jordan, and Gumbo are all parties in the 1994 SGA elections.

WILD TURKEY WORKERS' PARTY

This party has nothing to do with turkeys or workers. The name is mostly cosmetic, but the platform of the party is serious, said David Frese, arts and sciences senator candidate.

Frese said the party would work to ensure students had a say in the Union expansion project if it passed.

"We would work to keep the Union a student union and not an administrative facility," Frese said.

He said the Student Senate made a mistake by not taking a stand on the Partnership for Excellence.

Mark Tomb, arts and sciences senator candidate, said his father is a teacher at K-State, and he knows how little faculty are paid and that it is hard to retain high-caliber teachers when salaries are low.

Frese said the Senate not only needs to deal better with the state government but also the city government.

He said the city will need to know what students are thinking if the campus is annexed.

The city and K-State administration have been working on an annexation plan for several months. The plan will probably go before the city commission in June or July.

Parking is something that will continue to be an issue in Senate, Tomb said. "You don't buy a parking license, it is a hunting license," he said.

Matt Niemann, arts and sciences senator candidate, said that students should be encouraged to ride bicycles to campus.

Frese said the Senate candidates in the party would work against apathy in Senate.

"You can come in and vote on Thursday, but the Senate is more than that. It is coming in everyday and checking your mail and calling students back that have left you messages," Frese said.

CALIFORNIA AFTERSHOCK CAUSES LITTLE DAMAGE

LAKE ARROWHEAD, Calif. — A strong aftershock of the 1992 Landers earthquake jolted a wide area of Southern California on Wednesday. There were no immediate reports of serious damage or injury.

The tremor struck at 12:01 p.m. and measured 4.8 on the Richter scale. It was felt in downtown Los Angeles and inland desert areas to the east and south to northern San Diego County.

The quake was centered six miles southeast of Lake Arrowhead, said Heather Lovasz, a representative for seismologists at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

"It was pretty strong," said Jeanne Bradford of the Lake Arrowhead Communities Chamber of Commerce.

"It was like the building got pounded. Two big jerks and little bit of rumbling."

SNOW STORM PRODUCES SLEET, SNOW ACROSS MIDWEST

A storm system spread snow and ice across parts of the Midwest on Wednesday, and rain moved into the East. Another weather system dumped snow on the mountains of the Northwest.

The Midwest storm spread snow from the central Plains into parts of the Ohio Valley.

Three inches of snow accumulated in parts of Missouri at Chillicothe, Independence, Kearney and Linneus, and in Indiana at Fort Wayne and Marion. About 2.7 inches fell at Detroit, and 2 inches fell at Toledo, Ohio, the National Weather Service said.

"I was wearing shorts and doing yard work last weekend," Robin Wagner said in Toledo. "Now I'm scraping snow off my windshield. This is ridiculous."

Light freezing rain and freezing drizzle made roads slippery across parts of Missouri.

SHREDDED FILES MAY NOT PERTAIN TO INVESTIGATION

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The two couriers who shredded documents at Hillary Rodham Clinton's former law firm say they don't believe the files had anything to do with the Whitewater investigation.

Jeremy Hedges, 20, and Clayton Lindsey, 19, also say they have left the Rose Law Firm for other jobs.

The two college students acknowledged earlier this year they were asked to shred documents at the firm around the time a special prosecutor was appointed to investigate the Whitewater affair.

Special counsel Robert Fiske subpoenaed them to testify before a grand jury.

Both have said the files they shredded had the initials of the late Vincent W. Foster Jr., the deputy White House counsel found dead last year in what police have ruled a suicide.

Foster had worked on Whitewater matters for the Clintons.

Hedges said it was clear to him that the documents he shredded were Foster's, but "I personally don't believe those documents had anything to do with that investigation."

Lindsey agreed with Hedges, but he said he did not see what was in the files.

CLINTON PREPARED TO PROTECT PEACEKEEPERS

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration sent its top mediator back to the Balkans on Wednesday and said it was prepared to threaten Bosnian Serbs with NATO air strikes to protect any Ukrainian peacekeeping troops sent to Gorazde.

While the Pentagon this week appeared to rule out using air power to lift the Serb siege of the predominantly Muslim town in eastern Bosnia, administration officials said that military assessment could be changed after a U.N. inspection.

But Serb forces blocked the top U.N. commander, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, from going to Gorazde. Instead, the British general went to Pale at the request of Bosnian Serb leaders to discuss the possibility of Bosnian cease-fire negotiations.

MEMBERS STRIKE DUE TO LOW WAGE

Up to 75,000 Teamsters members went on strike Wednesday in a contract dispute concerning the use of lower-wage, part-time employees, setting up picket lines in the union's first nationwide walkout in 15 years.

An industry bargaining group said the smaller companies affected by the strike would be allowed to sign tentative agreements before agreement is reached on a final pact.

A few strikers were arrested in the Northeast, but no serious violence was reported.

"Everything is peaceful. It's unusually quiet, which is good," Millard Kizlia, manager of a Churchill Truck Lines Inc. terminal in Tulsa, Okla., said.

BLACKS GRANTED FAIR VOTING ACCESS

BALTIMORE — To give blacks fair representation, a rural Maryland County must allow each of its voters to cast up to five ballots in elections for the five-member county commission, a federal judge ruled Tuesday.

U.S. District Judge Joseph H. Young ordered the voting system for Worcester County after lawyers in the case could not agree on a system. He gave the county 60 days to put it in place.

Other parts of the country have implemented similar multiple-vote systems, according to the American Civil Liberties Union. In 1988, a federal judge ordered Chilton County, Ala., to increase black voter participation by having each voter cast seven ballots for the county commission and school board. The plan worked; there now is one black member among the seven in each body.

PROCEDURE:

Blackmun to relinquish Justice post

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Justice Harry Blackmun, a liberal anchor of the Supreme Court and author of the landmark Roe v. Wade decision that legalized abortion nationwide, announced Wednesday that he will retire at the end of the current term.

President Clinton, citing Blackmun's distinguished 24-year career on the highest court, said "the shoes are large" as he searches for a replacement. Clinton promised to fill the second Supreme Court vacancy of his term soon.

"I shall miss the court, its work and its relationships," Blackmun said. "But I leave it in good hands."

At a White House announcement, Clinton saluted Blackmun as judge of "majesty and reason, with scholarship and grace" who defied all political labels. In stepping down, Clinton said Blackmun will "step up into our history."

Meeting with reporters at the court later in the day, Blackmun called his tenure on the court "a fantastic, intimate experience" but said he was convinced it was time to go. "My goodness, 85 is old," he said with a smile as he told tales of serving with others over the years, crediting the late Thurgood Marshall with often breaking tense moments with funny stories.

"I think it's a good time (to retire) when I'm still feeling all right," he said. "I shall have to keep busy, or I'll fall apart."

The justice told Clinton several months ago he was likely to retire at the end of this year's term. With the White House search for a successor well under way, Clinton promised a nominee of genuine stature and reminded reporters of his campaign statements, including a promise to name abortion-rights supporters to the court.

Driving on the right side of the street and drinking ice-cold beer may seem commonplace for many K-State students, but for Colette McDonagh, junior in history and exchange student from Middlesbrough, England, it just seems backwards.

McDonagh came to K-State with a considerable change from her life in England.

"It's weird with all the cowboys. I never really thought they existed."

She didn't quite know what to expect when she first heard she was coming to Kansas.

"I was imagining a Texas-like place with cactus and cowboys everywhere and the towns to have dirt streets."

While her early anticipations about the Midwest may have not all come true, McDonagh said she has observed a great deal of differences between the two cultures.

Opinions vary about parking

PHIL SPIKER
Collegian

Public transportation, walking, biking and a gondola were solutions to the parking problem student body presidential candidates discussed at a debate Wednesday evening.

The presidential debate was at Goodnow Hall and included five candidates and a vice presidential candidate. The candidates were asked seven questions by a moderator and each gave brief answers on their platform on the subject.

The parking problem at K-State is an issue that all the candidates have differing opinions about.

Steffany Carrel, senior in public relations, said the University should work toward a public transportation system, and some of the ideas she has been working on include city participation.

Carrel said she thought if people would get out of their cars and start using other modes of transportation, it would help the parking problem.

"Building a lot of parking spots and new garages won't help the problem," she said.

Patrick Robben, junior in political science and a vice presidential candidate running with Michelle Smith, said public transportation and other options like walking to campus are solutions the University should definitely look at.

"We need to find ways to get public transportation and encourage people to walk to campus more," he said. "No matter how many parking spaces are put on campus, eventually they will be filled up, that is just human nature."

Jeff Peterson, senior in animal science, said he thinks parking is something which should definitely be focused on.

"Parking has been a problem on campus for years and it is going to continue to be around if we don't do something about it," he said. "We need to encourage biking and walking to campus, not make a deterrent for it."

Stacy Dalton, junior in marketing, said the parking problem won't be a quick fix and pressure should be put back on the administration to listen to students.

"You can't do it in a year's time," she said. "The administration needs to put the focus back on the students."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Faculty salary increases a distant dream again

Students and faculty both lose as the Kansas Legislature considers rejecting the Partnership for Excellence.

The Kansas Legislature is considering a bill to appropriate $1.1 billion to the Kansas Board of Regents without the Partnership for Excellence — surprise.

People shouldn't have gotten their hopes up that the Legislature would boost faculty salaries to make them competitive with out-of-state universities.

Were regents' schools asking too much?

K-State was aware the partnership would have raised tuition by 9 percent.

The present budget increases tuition by 5 percent at Kansas University, K-State and Wichita State and 3 percent at Pittsburg State, Emporia State and Fort Hays State.

The regents will be able to give faculty members pay increases of no more than 2.5 percent. The individual schools will decide who receives a raise and who doesn't.

The Legislature isn't including a cost-of-living increase for universities; so, after inflation is figured in, it is the same as a pay cut.

Another "cut" is in financial aid. The students at regents' schools are losing $2.3 million in possible financial aid.

A hindrance to the process has been Gov. Joan Finney's and the Legislature's tug-o-war on the admission of Washburn University into the regents and the Partnership for Excellence.

The Senate rejected Washburn, and the governor said she would veto anything involving the partnership.

Who loses every time — the students and faculty. Tuition is still going up, faculty is still underpaid, classes will still be canceled and students will still be broke from lack of financial aid.

Union enhancement pointless until parking problem alleviated

CHRIS KLEIDOSTY

Why are we expanding the K-State Union? Is it because other universities have unions that are better? The bottom line is money.

Is the Union really a crumbling mess? I have worked at the Union for two years continuously — four semesters, two winter breaks, two spring breaks and all of last summer. This enables me to seek what repairs are being done that most students don't see. If the Union is a crumbling mess, why did we paint the ceiling of the Courtyard for two weeks last summer? I'm sure everyone noticed. I don't know the exact cost, but I do know that the Union had to rent an expensive machine that allowed the painter to reach the high ceiling. I will say that the maintenance crew of the Union does an excellent job at keeping things in working order. My point is, if things are falling apart, why are we painting a ceiling that no one looks at?

But if we expand the Union, we will make more money, right? No. The Union is state owned and supported, with its profits, the fine people who work there, myself included. It does nothing more. Yes, the recycled money provides the student with office space for clubs and student government. It also provides movies, food services, bowling, etc. Do we really need the things such as more store vendors and glass ceilings for eating? Is this detrimental for an institution of higher learning? Expansion will lead to more jobs but not more money.

OK, let's assume we decide to renovate the Union. What about parking? Whoa! I thought the insert in the paper was highly symbolic of the pushers of expansion. A small, four-inch article was printed about this huge problem.

At my last bookstore meeting, I listened to someone who gave a pep talk about Union expansion. This speaker was asked about parking and eluded the question completely. I guess I would too if I didn't have an answer.

Recently, I was asked to park at West Stadium during Open House weekend because I'm an employee of the Union and because a lot of business is expected. This is a perfect example of a problem we already have. I'm also a student, and I believe I am one of the 20,000 people who has the right to park wherever I am allowed, especially if I pay $50 extra to do so.

Why hasn't anyone brought up the parking conditions of the other model unions? They should have some answers. I bet not one of these model unions are looking at as small as a parking space as we do.

Before we do anything, I think there is some infrastructure that does need attention. The main problem I have encountered is the sewage. This is something that needs work now. However, everything else, I believe, is in good shape.

Bottom line: The Union will only do as much business as the parking lot will accommodate.

Solution? We need to do several things. First, the Union needs to adopt financial responsibility of the immediate parking lot and future parking garage. It is the only way money can be raised for something so vital. Use the $9.2 million from the $25 fee to build the parking garage with alumni and Parking Services assisting. Adequate parking is essential to good business.

Next, we can renovate the Union. How about accepting donations from alumni, renaming the Union after the two highest donors, and we will have a model union. If we can build one of the best athletic facilities with alumni, why can't we do the same with our Union?

If we get the parking issue solved, we will enable more people to be accessed to the services of the Union. We need more than student money to fix the problems of our Union. Things will just get worse, not better, if we don't solve a parking problem that already exists.

The first thing we as students can do is to vote no to expansion and simply write on the ballot: Parking. If we can do this on April 12 and 13, we can start to head in the right direction and not let the terrible history of parking repeat itself.

Memos from the edge

Everywhere across America, where answering machines converse and the information highway is growing, memos are alive and kicking.

I just got a memo from my boss because I slept in on the wrong day. A misplaced memo got someone killed in "The Pelican Brief," and memos are rumored to fly everywhere in Washington. I have compiled several juicy memos that were never shredded and am now having them printed for your entertainment, even though some of them may put my life in danger.

These memos are real. (Sure they are.) They have been gathered over the years by me. That's how many connections I have.

Zoe Baird to Bill Clinton:

I have to talk to you. I think I have some bad news. There's something I forgot to tell you.

Kimba Wood to Bill Clinton:

Um, Bill, I know you don't want to hear this after what happened with Zoe, but ...

Rush Limbaugh to Howard Stern:

I'm beating you. Check the ratings. Cuss all you want — I'll still win. Ha!

General Electric's CEO to Tim Robbins:

You're going down, little man. I'm going to take your little head and screw it into a socket and turn you into one big voltage adaptor. Sarandon can watch.

George Bush to Ronald Reagan:

The weapons are on their way to Iran. Iran is the country with the leader with the big white thing on his head who hates you. Weapons are things that shoot people, like Americans. Wake up, sir. Talk to Dick Cheney if you have any questions. I'm on my way to Maine. I know nothing. Remember that. Remember something, please. I guess I could get in trouble for that, couldn't I? Oh well. You're not going to remember this stupid memo: Nobody remembers anything around here, except for that North guy in the basement.

Stephen King to his publisher:

Another book coming in two months. No mutilations this time, I don't think, but I am including nightmares, Satan, premonitions and a few warped personalities. And you can tell the cover artist that I'll need a face without eyes, a cat and a faraway light. I still have no plot, but that's a detail. I have a blind guy. It should be cool. Dean R. Koontz is going to hate me for this one.

Rush Limbaugh to his agent:

Will you please get a better picture of me for the next book cover? Maybe we could pose me with some Snapple™ or something. Gotta go. I'm going to make fun of Joycelyn Elders to the tune of Bohemian Rhapsody.

David Bowie to his ex-wife, Angie:

OK, fine. Keep telling that Mick Jagger story. Nobody cares. I still look better in a dress than you.

Bill Clinton to the Arkansas Highway Patrol:

This is your governor. I'm going to need about five Big Macs and 10 patrol cars for Friday night. Gennifer's having a party.

Ross Perot to Bob Dole:

Here's the deal. People love you making fun of that yahoo in the White House up there, and I've got 4 billion smackers sittin' in the bank. You can be my running mate for 1996. We could win. OK, I'll be your right-hand man. Whatever. I'm dying down here in Texarkana.

Bob Dole to Ross Perot:

You'll never be president. I know it, you know it, and the American people know it. I was in World War II. I could crush you with my good arm tied behind my back. So, you stay in Texas, and I'll stay in Congress where I belong. Wait till you see what I've got cooked up for blocking the health-care reform package.

Barbara Bush to Hillary Clinton:

Change the carpet in the Lincoln bedroom, and I'll take you by the headband and snatch you bald. I know where you live.

Nancy Reagan to Hillary Clinton:

Take my advice, sweetie — red is not your color.

Solutions to the Top 10 campus problems

As you can tell by the proliferation of signs on trees and fliers stuffed in your hands, it's student government election time again.

My hope for this new crop of future public servants is that they awaken to the vast amount of ways students are ripped off by certain campus departments, entities and bureaucracies, and bring these issues to the attention of the student body.

No. 1, by a full car length, is The Parking Problem. Parking Services gets a bad rap constantly for this, and it should, as it has a vested interest in never solving the parking problem — revenue from tickets is what keeps it in business.

Students are another cause of the predicament when they drive two blocks to campus every day.

We should be rewarding those who ride their bikes or walk to school, providing them with accessible racks with the money from car misuse fees, instead of the proposed permit fees.

Hopes of solving this problem are bleak. Even if Parking Services builds a parking garage as high as the moon, there will still be people following you out of the Union, hoping to take your parking space. The problem won't be resolved until you can fax students from their bed right to class.

ANDREW TOMB

No. 2 is the Kansas Legislature. It's hard to believe these old men and women 60 miles down I-70 can rip off K-Staters by remote control, but I feel their bite almost every day. Without a raise in faculty salaries, our professors see no benefits from being a good teacher, hurting the students.

The Legislature is famous for removing faculty salary increases and extra funding for university programs at the last minute, resulting in programs being cut, contracts not being renewed, and removal of entire departments and majors.

My father, a biology professor here at K-State, calls this "auto-cannibalism." Auto-cannibalism is what an organism does when it is not getting any food: It actually digests its own tissue for nourishment.

This is a desperate action when applied to higher education, one that should make us very concerned for the future.

For the results of auto-cannibalism, come over to my house and be blinded by the yellow glare of Always Save Macaroni & Cheese boxes when you open the cupboard door.

No. 3 is Housing and Dining Services, the cartel in charge of K-State's residence halls.

It costs more than $1,600 dollars a semester to live in the residence halls, and they stick you with 40 percent of your remaining rent if you decide to leave early. And they throw you out out on the streets twice a school year.

The fourth biggest rip-off would have to be the Division of Facilities, the department responsible for all the building maintenance, grounds and janitorial services.

If you thought Jon Wefald or Ed Skoog was really in charge of the University, you're wrong, it's Facilities.

These are the jokers who wanted to charge Student Governing Association $400 to install eight suggestion boxes — $160 of it just for hardware. Sounds like the U.S. military. The price eventually came down, but you have to wonder what they are sneaking in on less watchful groups.

The athletic fee comes in at No. 5. This seems to have faded from the spotlight in recent years, but the fact still remains that every full-time student here gives a $17 handout to the athletic department every semester, for which they get nothing in return.

K-State Police is rip-off No. 6. It's not that I believe we don't need some security on campus, but a fully armed, state-deputized police force is overkill. Are they waiting for an invasion by KU?

This is seen when you read through their daily reports and see that most of their time is spent wheellocking cars and helping those who've locked their keys in their cars.

The seventh rip-off is the Textbook Conspiracy. Publishers put out new editions of their textbooks roughly every seven days, making the old editions obsolete, so they say. Professors then require students to get the new editions, reducing the value of the old books to that of kindling wood.

I just checked the old editions out of the library and ask a lot of questions.

The K-State Union comes in at No. 8. The Union is run like a commune, without any profit motive. Good things like Union Program Council are underfunded, and every time something goes wrong, they come to the students for more cash.

The Union expansion referendum is promising. With the addition of outside vendors and a little competition, the Union could come around to market capitalism.

Rip-off No. 9 is the way faculty are tenured at K-State and other universities.

There is no incentive for a professor to be a good teacher, just to be a funnel for large research grants, resulting in promotions and tenure. Be just a good classroom teacher, and the only reward comes from the satisfaction of helping people learn. We should be thankful for the professors who still see this as valuable.

The result is more classes being taught by graduate teaching assistants, underqualified instructors and audio and videotaped lectures.

The final rip-off number is the temple of K-State bureaucracy, Anderson Hall.

Anderson Hall has no classrooms, just the offices of the K-State administration. With their plush offices and salaries, the administrators have joined with the Legislature in sucking all the funding for (common) faculty salary increases and made our University top heavy.

The High Priest of the bureaucracy, the Rev. Jon Wefald, is a good man. I went to a lot of football and basketball games as his guest when I was in high school, and I hope he would consider me a friend, but I would have my own plan if I had his job for a day:

I would use the K-State Police department to take over the Kansas Legislature and get the funds needed to adequately support the University.

I would require that all persons living within walking distance to campus be denied parking permits, abolish the faculty lots, and make all administrators and department heads surrender their reserved stalls to students commuting from surrounding towns.

I would place the Division of Facilities and the Housing and Dining cartel under martial law (the K-State ROTC could be used), hire a lot of outside contractors to do the necessary maintenance on campus and move the administration offices to one of the empty wings of the residence halls.

I'd revoke the tenure system, and make it profitable again to be a good teacher.

I suppose about one day is about all I would last as president.

EDUCATION

K-State ranks 5th on scholarships

ROBYN NASH

Collegian

Many of the U.S. student scholars can be found at K-State.

The University ranks fifth in the nation for the number of students awarded the Rhodes, Marshall, Truman and Goldwater scholarships over the period of 1984-94, according to the latest data released by each scholarship granting foundation.

At the top of the list were the Ivy League schools of Harvard, Yale and Stanford. K-State is tied for fifth with Brown University.

"If you throw those four scholarships together, we're number one in state universities," President Jon Wefald said.

Even though the University of Michigan is rated the No. 1 public university in the world — they have only had 26 of the scholarships, while K-State has had 38, he said.

In addition to scholars, the K-State debate team's wins in two out of the last three national championships makes K-State's record unbelievable, he said.

Because of this, Wefald said, Paul Harvey named K-State as the leading public school in the United States in a 1991 broadcast.

"There are several reasons why K-State is doing so well in producing top scholars. First, we get exceptional students coming in," Wefald said.

In the last year, K-State has had 225 valedictorians and salutatorians enter the university, Wefald said.

The second reason is that K-State has an outstanding and dedicated faculty, Wefald said.

A letter from Charles Walters, the 1994 Truman Scholar and junior in international studies, history and political science, Wefald said, illustrated this.

"He said, in effect, the quality of the institution at K-State rivals that of the outstanding liberal arts colleges," Wefald said.

"He said the faculty has a genuine interest in getting to know students and helping them to excel. He indicated that many of them worked with him individually."

Wefald said the third reason is that K-State has really emphasized the production of these scholars.

Nancy Twiss, scholar adviser, has done an extraordinary job identifying the up-and-coming students and getting them to focus on these scholarships, Wefald said.

"Fourth, I think since we've been emphasizing we are the student scholarship capital of America, it has raised their (students) levels of confidence that they can indeed win the nation's top scholarships," he said.

And these students are taking their experiences and education out into the world.

World Bank economist Margaret Grosh was K-State's first Truman scholar and according to the January 11, 1994 edition of the Miami Herald, Grosh is making a difference in Latin America.

Her study on the effectiveness of 30 social welfare programs in 11 countries has changed the way Latin America should look at reform programs, according to the Herald.

Grosh found that narrower programs with more specific targets have benefits for a greater number of people.

If Latin American governments want to reach their neediest people with their dwindling funds, it should listen to Grosh, according to the Herald.

This year, two more students are following in Grosh's footsteps by winning elite scholarships.

Walters was recently awarded the Truman, and in December, Signe Balch, first-year veterinary medicine student, was awarded the Marshall.

No one received the Rhodes this year, and the Goldwater recipient has not been announced yet, Wefald said.

"We helped ourselves in two of the four categories this year and I'm sure we'll get one Goldwater," he said.

Balch said she plans to use her scholarship to attend Oxford where she hopes to earn at least her masters and hopefully her doctorate.

"Because so much is open to undergraduates here, I got to explore a lot of things I was interested in and make my education as full as I could," Balch said.

Balch said she agrees with Walters about K-State's outstanding faculty.

"I think K-State should be pretty proud of its faculty," she said.

Walters becomes Truman scholar

JILL DUBOIS

K-State has done it again. The university successfully produced its 18th Truman scholar earlier this month.

Charles Walters, junior in international studies, history and political science, was awarded the honor.

Truman scholarships are awarded each year to one student in each of fifty states. Winners receive $30,000 to provide for four years of study leading to a career in government and public service.

K-State ranks first in the country among public universities in producing Truman scholars.

Walters is a former executive mayor of Jardine Terrace family housing community, a member of the student body president's cabinet and was vice president of Chimes junior honorary. He is also a member of Phi Kappa Phi honor society and Golden Key National Honor Society.

"It was a tremendous surprise. It was not expected. Having met the other candidates and come to know them even for an afternoon, it was shocking," Walters said.

Walters went to Washington, D.C., for interviews with a selection panel consisting of a federal judge and a U.S. senator, among others.

"You can leave a Truman interview believing that panel thinks you are a dummy. You have to go in there knowing what you believe," Walters said.

About 852 applicants from 435 universities and four-year colleges were nominated for the scholarship and only 65 candidates were elected, Nancy Twiss, arts and sciences adviser, said.

The field is then narrowed to seven from each state and then to three.

Walters plans to use the scholarship to do graduate work in trade and developmental policy and the Russian language.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ORIOLES DEFEAT ROYALS

BALTIMORE — Rafael Palmeiro and Kansas City nemesis Harold Baines hit successive homers in the sixth inning Wednesday night as the Baltimore Orioles rallied to beat the Royals 4-2.

Kansas City newcomer Vince Coleman got his 649th career stolen base in the seventh inning to move into a tie with Bert Campaneris for 10th place on the career list.

Moving in the Wright direction

CRAIG PINKERTON
Collegian

For each of K-State's women's golf teams' eight tournaments this year, Jacque Wright has led the way.

In doing so, she has established herself as potentially the best golfer ever to play for the women's squad.

"Jacque definitely has a lot of potential," assistant golf coach Jim Brenneman said. "Because she's only a junior, she could be a really good player by the time she graduates from K-State."

Already this spring, Wright has finished in second place in both of the Wildcats' tournaments and has led the Cats in each of their eight tournaments this year.

At the North Texas/Southern Methodist Invitational, she had one of the better tournaments ever for K-State by posting a 75.0 average through two rounds on her way to a tie for second place. Her second round score of 74 tied for second on the school charts for best round ever by a K-State.

It was the second time in her career that she recorded a 74. The other came at the Susie Maxwell Bering Classic in 1993.

So far this spring, Wright has helped the Cats finish fifth at the UNT/SMU Invitational and second at the Southwest Missouri State Invitational.

Although she always finishes near the top of the field, Wright doesn't spend a lot of time thinking about winning a tournament.

"I try not to think about winning," Wright said. "I just try to go out and play the course. I can't control what everyone else does. I obviously would like to win a tournament, but it's not like I am playing any one person. It's more like I am playing against the course."

"All I can do is play the best I can and hope that it is better than what anyone else does."

For Wright, knowing how to win begins with how she practices.

"I try to put myself in situations where I imagine that I'm in a position to win and how I would handle certain situations," Wright said.

The practice is paying off for the DeSoto, Mo., native. With only two tournaments left on the schedule, Wright has posted a 79.8 average. If she continues to hold it under 80, she will become the first player in K-State history to have a sub-80 season average.

"I would like to accomplish that but, realistically, I know that the courses coming up are very difficult," Wright said. "It is going to take a lot of preparation, and everything else is going to have to come together at the same time to get going. I'm just trying to stay focused and keep everything going Jacque Wright had an off putt and an off day last year during the Wichita State Invitational. Wright has improved this year, and she currently leads the Cats.

in the right direction."

Finding the time to practice takes a lot of time management for the horticulture major.

Due to the amount of time she has to spend in labs, she has to do a lot of practicing on her own. Most of the practice time comes in morning hours. In the afternoons, when her classes are finished, she hits the course to play.

"She is very scheduled and very self-disciplined about practicing," Brenneman said. "She always does it on her own. I never have to get on her about needing to practice."

Practice time isn't taking away from study time for Wright, who chose K-State over Missouri, Purdue and Vanderbilt. During her sophomore year, she earned first-team Academic all-Big Eight honors with a 3.76 GPA. This year, she is also on pace to earn academic all-Big Eight honors.

Finding the time to study is becoming more difficult as she gets older.

"I'm taking more hours than I have in the past," Wright said. "The closer I come to my degree, the harder my classes become. It becomes more difficult each semester."

Once she gets her degree, she hopes to put it to use by working on golf courses.

Her degree, which allows her to work with turf with an emphasis in design, would allow her to do golf course renovations, design evaluation and trouble shooting.

Some of the trouble shooting would include deciding on which types of grass to use, the shrubbery on the course and other technical aspects.

Like most other athletes, Wright dreams of taking her game to the next level and trying to join the pro tour.

"It has always been my dream, but at the same time, I am trying to be realistic," Wright said. "If I would consider that, it would probably be a few years down the road. It also depends a lot on my last year and a half here."

Teaching or coaching golf would also be a consideration for her. Last summer, she had the opportunity to teach a junior class in Farmington, Mo.

Before she can think much about her post-collegiate plans, Wright still has some goals to reach while at K-State.

"I would like to win a tournament, but in golf, I think that it is really hard to set goals like that," Wright said.

"I try to lower my goals a little. My main goal is to work on my temperament. Beyond that, I just try to hit one shot at a time and go from there."

By taking it one shot at a time, Wright is well on her way to becoming one of K-State's best golfers.

COLUMN

Calm, cool, collected didn't win this race

Altman might not have had the flair or dramatics of some coaches, but he did care for his players.

He didn't throw temper tantrums, like Oklahoma's Billy Tubbs. He didn't have a theme song, like Iowa State's Johnny Orr.

He didn't get into fights with the fans, like Missouri's Norm Stewart. He didn't throw chairs onto the court, like Indiana's Bobby Knight.

He didn't threaten to kill another coach, like Temple's John Cheney. He didn't go roam the stands during a game, like Northwestern's Ricky Byrdsong.

He didn't do any of these things, and now K-State's Dana Altman is gone.

These days, it appears that for a coach to be popular and successful in Division-I basketball, he has to be a one-man show, giving the media and the fans his own performance.

Right or wrong, it's pretty safe to say that none of the above coaches are unpopular or in danger of losing their jobs because of their actions.

In fact, most of them are beloved heroes.

Granted, Stewart, Knight and Cheney all guided their teams to very successful seasons — but take a look at the other guys.

Tubbs and his Sooners lose to Vanderbilt in the first round of the National Invitation Tournament. Northwestern finishes last in the Big 10 and celebrates an NIT berth.

Even my dear Coach Orr and Iowa State didn't make the NIT.

But do you hear any students or alums calling for Tubbs or Orr to go? Of course not.

The fans have grown to love these coaches, not for their high winning percentages but for their antics both on and off the court.

This was one area where Altman was lacking. Altman was one of the few quiet, polite coaches who was more concerned with his team than his image.

"His players graduate and represent the University with class," President Jon Wefald said.

"He has great integrity and dignity. And then you listen to the talk shows, and it seemed like people didn't even care about any of that."

Most of the fans didn't. Forget integrity and dignity; most wanted arrogance and a big ego.

The fans didn't seem to care about Altman's 68-54 four-year record, his 1992 Big Eight coach-of-the-year honors or his 20 wins this season.

What most of those angry radio callers wanted was a coach who could make the ESPN highlights or could chew out a referee every couple of games.

While I admit I like Knight and I love Orr, I also like the more soft-spoken, gosh-darnit-saying coaches, like Altman, who conduct themselves with class, with a little foot-stomping once in a while.

It's a shame there isn't much room for both in today's college ranks.

BASKETBALL

Keady willing to talk

NICOLE POELL

He's the Big Dog's keeper at Purdue, but he's got the Wildcats in his blood.

As Purdue's basketball coach, Gene Keady gained national attention last month as he led his Boilermakers and the Dog, Glenn Robinson, to the Elite Eight in the NCAA Tournament.

Now, this former K-Stater's name is being tossed around as a possible candidate for the coaching vacancy at his alma mater.

"Have you guys found a basketball coach yet?" Keady said Wednesday afternoon.

Asked if he was looking at the position, Keady said, "Aw, I probably couldn't take the pay cut."

"No, I'm just kidding."

Lloyd Eugene Keady was a former two-sport star at K-State from 1956 to 1958, playing, not basketball, but football and baseball.

"I did play basketball in junior high and high school growing up in Larned, and I played while I was at the juko in Garden City," Keady said. "When I got to K-State, the basketball squad really didn't need me, since they had guys like Boozer and Parr on the team."

While the Cats didn't dominate the Big Eight in athletics when Keady was around, he said his years in Manhattan were good ones.

"My time at K-State was very enjoyable," Keady said. "All my professors were great, and I was just thrilled to be playing in the Big Eight. Being a Wildcat was a great experience."

Keady said one of the reasons he took the Purdue job was because it reminded him of K-State.

"Purdue is very similar to K-State," he said. "It's a very agricultural school, and it also has a vet school. The people here have the same philosophy that they do at K-State, and they love and support all the sports."

WOMEN'S SOFTBALL

Teams compete in fast-pitch tourney

BRENT BROWN
Collegian

Manhattan will be the site of the annual women's fast-pitch softball tournament this weekend.

Starting this Friday morning, community college teams from all over Kansas will arrive in Manhattan to play at Twin Oaks Softball Complex.

Ivan Wilkinson, recreation supervisor for Manhattan Parks and Recreation and complex manager, said there have been similar women's fast-pitch tournaments in Manhattan, but none have involved this many teams.

"Some years, we've had between six and 12 teams," he said.

"But this year, all Region Six teams are required to play."

Region Six, which is made up of 16 teams from all over t Kansas, is one of the five strongest regions in the nation for fast-pitch softball.

Wilkinson said all Region Six teams will be participating in the tournament.

He said the tourney will be good for Manhattan's economy.

"These teams are going to come to Manhattan and stay in the hotels, eat at the restaurants and go to the bars," Wilkinson said.

Ed Hargrove, coach for Cowley County Community College women's team, said that this tournament will give coaches and players a chance to scout the other teams.

"We'll have the opportunity to see other team's players," Hargrove said.

Hargrove said the good central location makes traveling a lot easier for the teams.

"It gives the teams in the region a chance to come together and play good competition without having to travel too far," Hargrove said.

He said this tournament allows teams to play other teams that they may not be scheduled to play in the regular season.

Other than Arizona, which consists of some of the best teams in the nation, Missouri,

GAME TIMES

Teams will compete in the women's fast-pitch softball tournament at the Twin Oaks Softball Complex.

Friday's first game starts at 10 a.m., and the day's final game will start at 6:45 p.m. Saturday's games begin at 10 a.m. and run until 3:15 p.m.

Oklahoma, Texas and Kansas are the next strongest regions in the country, Hargrove said. "The winner of Region Six annually places in the top five at the national tournament," he said.

Hargrove said he encourages the people of Manhattan to come watch the tournament.

"I think people would be really amazed at the competition of play," he said.

The tournament starts at 10 a.m. Friday.

For more information, call Ivan Wilkinson at 587-2757.

SPORTS DIGEST

TICKET PRICES INCREASING

NEW YORK — The average ticket price for a major league baseball game broke the $10 barrier this season following an 8.9 percent increase, quadruple the rise between the 1992 and 1993 seasons.

The average ticket price is $10.45, up from $9.60 last season, the Chicago-based Team Marketing Report said Tuesday.

"By any standard of measurement, baseball has really kept its ticket prices down," Milwaukee Brewers president Bud Selig, chairman of the ruling executive council, said.

The cost for a family of four to attend a game — including two beers, four hot dogs, four soft drinks, two caps, two programs and parking — rose 5.5 percent, to $95.80 from $90.84.

DREAM TEAM II GETS READY

COLORADO SPRINGS — The team that will compete in this summer's world championships will play exhibition games July 26 in Charlotte, N.C., and July 31 in Oakland, Calif.

Dream Team II, which will train from July 20-30, will play the German national team in Charlotte and the USA Goodwill Games team in Oakland.

The U.S. team is coached by Don Nelson of Golden State and has 13 players. Key players are: Derrick Coleman of New Jersey, Don Majerle of Phoenix, Alonzo Mourning of Charlotte, Shaquille O'Neal of Orlando, Mark Price of Cleveland, Isiah Thomas of Detroit and Dominique Wilkins of the Los Angeles Clippers.

The championships are Aug. 4-14 in Toronto and Hamilton, Ontario.

Women's clinic offers guidance, support

JILL DuBOIS
Collegian

Some people have been trying to find one for as long as 10 years. Meanwhile, millions of others have them every day — it's a baby.

More than 2.5 million people are waiting to adopt children every year.

But what is a young woman to do if she finds herself with an unplanned pregnancy?

According to various Manhattan authorities, a woman has many options.

One is to contact the Women's Resource Center on campus.

"If a woman called and said 'I don't know what to do,'

"I would tell her to come to the women's clinic," Judy Davis, director of the center, said.

"We offer prenatal care, and we can also give referrals on adoption and social service agents.

"If they haven't made a decision, we can also offer pregnancy counseling."

"We also can offer spiritual referral. Mental, physical and spiritual health is also important," she said.

Birthright of Manhattan is another organization providing service to young mothers.

It help with medical, legal and psychological situations, and offer free pregnancy testing.

It also will provide housing if a young woman needs a place to stay.

The group does not encourage abortion.

The Kansas Children's Service League can also offer help.

It offer pregnancy counseling services and can refer women to adoption agencies if they choose to give up their children.

It is also a licensed child-placing agency that offers follow-up case management.

"We see about 25 women a year," Kim Menard, social-work supervisor, said.

"We offer support with the decision-making process giving outside, unbiased help.

"We will counsel whoever is involved or wants to be involved."

"The majority of women choose to keep their babies because they feel a bond with the baby — it's a part of them."

Life Choice Ministry is another organization in Manhattan that shares many options available to pregnant women.

LCM is made up of unpaid volunteers who act as a means of support for any woman finding herself in a crisis pregnancy.

They share abortion and adoption information but do not do abortion referrals.

The organization has a private attorney who can assist in private adoptions.

They also offer free pregnancy testing to anyone in the community.

■ Giving up your child for adoption

For women who choose to give their children up, they can have a say in who will adopt their babies.

"Adoptive parents fill out an anonymous application giving information about themselves, and the application is filed.

"Mothers can then look over the applications and choose adoptive parents anonymously and even interview the couple if she chooses," Diana Nickel, a volunteer at Life Choice Ministry, said.

Nickel is an expert on the program because that is how her daughter Juliana came into her life 4-1/2 years ago.

"Our profile went out to a young mother, and she wanted to meet us.

"We were interviewed, and one week later we were notified.

"It was a miracle. A lot of people wait years and years, but the birth mother chose us. Our personalities clicked," she said.

The family still keeps in touch with the birth mother, Julie.

Nickel and her husband decided to use both her name and the birth mother's name to create "Juliana."

"There is an incredible trust between us.

"We had visits in neutral places at first, but now we visit in each other's homes two or three times a year.

"Julie has no regrets — she can see the baby anytime she wants. She knows she never could have provided for Juliana like we have," Nickel said.

When Juliana was born, the Nickels had to wait 4-1/2 days to bring her home.

Juliana's natural father's mother wanted to keep the baby, but later changed her mind.

"It was the most excruciating 4-1/2 of my life. But within six weeks, all the paperwork was through.

"That was in 1989, and it even takes longer now," Nickel said.

Nickel and her husband, Paul, already had two sons, then 11 and 9 years old, but were unable to have more children.

Nickel said Juliana adores her two older brothers, who are now 15-1/2 and a half and 14 years old.

Nickel said she is surprised at the number of girls who don't use birth control.

"I see it time and time again. If you plan ahead and intend to be sexually active, girls feel more guilty.

"There is such a lack of education. We need a greater balance of society."

Nickel said Juliana even knows what it means to be adopted.

Nickel said Juliana said, "It means Jesus had a very special home for me."

Ball to help with funds for Farrell

JILL DuBOIS

Collegian

You can spend "One Enchanted Evening" at the 7th annual Friends of the KSU Libraries costume gala.

The ball is scheduled for 7 p.m. Saturday, April 9, in the Great Room of Farrell Library.

The gala committee chose the theme "One Enchanted Evening" because it reflected the enchantment of reading and literature. Karen McCulloh, secretary for the friends group, said.

The ball is one of the major fundraisers for the library, McCulloh said.

"We still need $2.1 million dollars for the library addition, and it is exciting to see how important Friends of the KSU Libraries are and how they make a difference," she said.

The group will make a substantial monetary gift to the National Endowment for Humanities, which donates $1 for every $3 the Friends gives. The endowment will then create a $50,000 gift every year for the Libraries. This will help to acquire books and resources for history and modern languages.

"We are very fortunate to have Jon Wefald behind us," Julie

FOR MORE INFO.

For more information, or to make a reservation, call Julie Hostetler at 537-4900 or Karen McCulloh at 532-5671.

Hostetler, junior in English, said. "He has been very supportive."

Hostetler is president of the Friends of the KSU Libraries.

She said the group has been having the galas since 1988 when it was started by a group of faculty.

"Our job is not only fundraising but to create awareness and do public relations for the library," she said.

"We have no traditional alumni support because no one graduates from the library. We're just what our name says — we are friends of the library."

Any student, faculty or member of the community can become a member of the organization. Student membership is $5, $25 for faculty and community and $10,000 to be a life member, McCulloh said.

The Vaughn Bolton Orchestra of Manhattan will provide dinner and dance music.

Foul play suspected in death of presidents

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — The presidents of Rwanda and Burundi were killed Wednesday in a plane crash near the airport in Rwanda's capital, a U.N. official said. Rwandan diplomats charged the plane had been shot down.

Presidents Juvenal Habyarimana of Rwanda and Cyprien Ntaryamira of Burundi had been attending a meeting of leaders of east and central African countries in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania.

Their plane went down while approaching the airport in Kigali, capital of Rwanda, according to Chinmaya Gharekhan of India, a special political adviser to U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali.

Rwanda's U.N. ambassador, Jean Damascene Bizimana, told the Security Council the crash was not an accident but an assassination, diplomats said. He said the plane was hit by rocket fire, but did not say who attacked.

Francois Ngarukintwali, the Rwandan ambassador in Brussels, Belgium, said he was told the plane was shot down by the chief of staff of the Rwandan Cabinet, Enoch Ruhigira.

"It was shot down. It's true. It burned," he said, adding he could not confirm the deaths.

The two were aboard a presidential plane, but it wasn't clear whose.

The French Foreign Ministry in Paris said its embassy in Kigali quoted witnesses as saying there was heavy weapons fire near the airport around the time of the crash.

The African leaders had met Wednesday to seek a regional approach to ending ethnic hostilities in Burundi and political tensions in Rwanda.

Habyarimana's coalition and the former Rwandan Patriotic Front rebels have failed to agree on a transitional government despite a peace accord last August.

Ethnic rivalry between the majority Hutus and the minority Tutsis is mostly responsible for the failure to form the government.

On Tuesday, the Security Council extended the 2,500-member U.N. peacekeeping force in Rwanda for four months and urged swift creation of a broad-based transitional government.

A new report by Oxfam and other aid agencies said more than 800,000 people in Rwanda, stricken by drought, risk starving to death without emergency food shipments.

Alumni Association to purchase new computer system for database

The alumni database contains the names and addresses of 95 percent of K-State's alumni.

Database to be moved, put in Alumni offices

LISA ELLIOTT
Collegian

K-State, the KSU Foundation and the KSU Alumni Association are spending $300,000 to purchase a new computer system to house the alumni database.

The database is now on the University mainframe, but the Alumni Association plans to put it on to micro computers in its offices.

The KSU Foundation is working with the Alumni Association on the project.

The mainframe computer used now is very large and difficult to run, Fred Thibodeau, Alumni Association president, said.

Most people in the association offices are not familiar with the language required to write programs to retrieve data, and the amount of time necessary to complete a data retrieval is relatively long.

The Alumni Association is dependent on the people outside its office when it needs information from the alumni list.

For special requests, a program must be written for the mainframe to sort the information.

The turn-around time for an alumni list can be from two days to two weeks.

With the new software, specific lists of alumni could be generated within 24 hours.

"The goal is so we can get information to the alumni and so other organizations can get information to their alumni," said Sam Shryock, director of information systems for the KSU Foundation and the Alumni Association.

Moving the database to the Alumni Association will also give the association more control over the data.

The responsibility for the safety of the data, keeping records current and operating the system will be on the shoulders of the Alumni Association.

Even though the association updates the current database, the system is maintained by Computing and Network Services, including all back-ups and label printing.

The alumni database contains the names and current addresses of 95 percent of K-State's alumni.

However, having the information is not enough. The ability to manipulate the information is vital, Thibodeau said.

One reason the alumni database is so important is that it is very useful for raising money from alumni for K-State, he said.

K-State ranks seventh in the nation for donors per graduate and first in the Big Eight in alumni association membership, Thibodeau said.

An accurate database supports the programs of the Alumni Association, such as the K-Stater magazine, alumni clubs, Catbacker clubs and alumni trips.

The database is important for more than raising money, Thibodeau said.

"We know where 95 percent of our people are. If you only know where 70 percent of your alumni are, you can't maintain a level like that," he said. "It's the single-most important thing we do."

The new database will be contained in one microcomputer.

The server will hold 2 billion characters.

The Foundation and Alumni Association are purchasing a total of 77 computers.

Fifteen of the computers will be purchased in the next three to four months. The server has been purchased.

Internal communication will be improved by the addition of the new computers.

The new system will allow users to talk to each other through the computers without going through the mainframe, said Jeanine Lake, records supervisor for the Alumni Association.

"It is the largest move from a mainframe to a microcomputer Local Area Network that the University has done," Shryock said.

Irish expect violence from Republican Army

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The Irish Republican Army's 72-hour cease-fire may be in place, but many people here are resigned to more conflict.

"Anybody who thinks the IRA have killed their last person or planted their last bomb doesn't understand what they're about," said Richard Ellis, a Protestant shopper taking advantage of the cease-fire to browse in the city's oft-bombed downtown stores.

The IRA's allied Sinn Fein party says the truce is designed to give British leaders enough breathing space to agree to renewed talks.

Britain agreed last December with the Irish government, that Sinn Fein can join talks only after the IRA ends its campaign against British rule of Northern Ireland. Prime Minister John Major's office said it would not respond to a letter delivered Wednesday by Sinn Fein, pressing for a meeting.

For those who live here, Wednesday meant another day at a desk, in the welfare line, slogging through the rain to get the shopping done. More soldiers than usual patrolled the streets on foot and in armored vehicles.

The cease-fire has offered some people a few days' peace of mind, though for Catholics the fear of pro-British extremists remains.

And many assume the IRA will punctuate the end of its cease-fire with an attack somewhere this weekend.

Few Protestants or Catholics see any hope in a central premise of the two governments' Dec. 15 declaration.

Many people can't understand what the deadlock is all about, given that Britain admitted last November it had communicated secretly with the IRA and Sinn Fein for the previous three years.

"The British have talked with republicans before and will talk with republicans again, because they have to if they want peace," said Gerry Holland, a community volunteer in Catholic west Belfast, the anchor of IRA support in Northern Ireland.

On the other hand, many Catholics see Sinn Fein's weeks of demands for "clarification" of the declaration — a seven-page document distributed free throughout Northern Ireland — as a poorly disguised appeal for negotiations.

Group to aid KSU employees

"Classified employees are just as important to the stability of a student's education as the faculty or administration."

PAMELA BLOCK
Chair of Classified Women's Caucus

TED ELLET
Collegian

Promoting issues and concerns of many K-State employees is the primary goal of the Classified Women's Caucus, a group recently formed on campus.

Pamela Block, chair of CWC and classified employee with the dean's office in the College of Architecture and Design, said many students and faculty don't realize the significance of classified employees.

"Classified employees are just as important to the stability of a student's education as the faculty or administration," Block said.

She said the term classified employee refers to state civil service workers who perform a range of support services at K-State.

"The University could not function without us," Block said.

"Staff people in the registrar's office, admissions office, the people you speak with over the phone are all classified employees. They perform anything from secretarial and clerical duties to administrative assistant duties," she said.

"We're more or less the backbone of the university," Block said.

The Classified Women's Caucus was organized after Block and several other staff members realized that the concerns of classified employees were not being equally represented at K-State.

A steering committee was formed, patterned after the Faculty Women's Caucus, a group that focuses on the concerns of the faculty. FWC members became mentors for the evolution of the Classified Women's Caucus.

FWC Member Marge Neely, professor of counselor education and mentor for Classified Women's Caucus, said the role CWC plays is important.

"It provides a support group and networking possibilities for classified employees, which is just as important as the kinds of issues that they get together and discuss," Neely said.

"They've been very kind in giving us unsolicited advice. I'm very impressed with how they get things done. Everybody jumps right in and does their part," Block said.

Block said she hopes to join forces with the Faculty Women's Caucus to co-sponsor seminars and other programs important to female professionals.

"Because we are women, things come from a different angle. We've been asked why we don't form one huge group as women. We believe that we share common interests as women, but classified women must approach things differently than students or professors," she said.

But Block said that even though the group is called the Classified Women's Caucus, the group will be trying to achieve goals for all classified workers, regardless of sex.

"I don't want people to think that we are limiting ourselves to women. Our concentration area may be on women, but classified employees aren't all women. If men want to join and help us strive for solutions, we welcome them to become members," Block said.

The Classified Women's Caucus steering committee met for an ice breaker meeting in early March and plans to meet on the second Wednesday of each month from noon to 1 p.m. The general meeting will be held quarterly.

Block said the next meeting, scheduled for April 13, 1994, in Union 205, will cover several topics essential for providing direction to the group.

She said the steering committee plans to form a mission statement, form a dialogue with the Student Senate, and develop a language that can be used on University documents to include classified employees.

"We help keep the University functioning. We hope this group will let people know how much they rely on classified employees," Block said.

Ex-Biosphere residents arrested for break-in

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUCSON, Ariz. — Two people who lived inside Biosphere 2 for two years were arrested Wednesday for allegedly breaking into the sealed environmental experiment and leaving the doors open so outside air could get in.

Abigail Alling, who has been taking responsibility for Monday's intrusion in calls to reporters across the country, faces two felony charges, burglary and criminal property damage, and a misdemeanor trespassing count.

She was arrested at a Tucson motel with fellow crew member Mark Van Thillo, said Pinal County Sheriff's spokeswoman Belia Fessenden.

Van Thillo faces the same charges.

Alling and Van Thillo, among eight people who lived in the sealed dome for two years ending Sept. 26, 1993, are employees of the project's operator, Space Biospheres Ventures.

Both were suspended from their jobs with the project last week by a court-appointed receiver representing the controversial project's financial backer, Texas billionaire Ed Bass said.

Alling had indicated she was considering turning herself in, but Fessenden said the pair was arrested as they were leaving the motel.

Alling said she ordered the doors thrown open at the giant terrarium to end the experiment in order to protect the current crew of seven living in the dome outside Oracle, 35 miles north of Tucson.

'Air Farce' landing at McCain

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

The effects of the North American Free Trade Agreement are slowly creeping up on the United States.

This division is, of course, the Royal Canadian Air Farce.

The Air Farce, consisting of Roger Abbott, Luba Goy, John Morgan (Morgan does not travel with the group) and Don Ferguson, also takes pokes at the United States — so don't expect to hear unfunny jokes about Canada's parliament.

Air Farce member Roger Abbott describes the troop's show as sort of like "Saturday Night Live" because we deal with things that are happening in the past week. We try to update the show each week.

Abbott said the troop enjoys a good scandal: "The mayor of the city has just run off with the fire chief." He also said there hasn't been many good scandals since about two months ago (translation: Tonya Harding/Nancy Kerrigan and the Bobbitt saga).

However, Abbott said, "we sort of have routines that travel well." The group does change their show when they travel to the United States. "Because of where we live, I'm sure a lot of the stuff we do here would baffle audiences in the United States," Abbott said.

Abbott credits their comedy style to a mixture of British and American comedy. However, he also said, "I think as North Americans, we share a pretty common sense of humor."

The Air Farce is based out of Toronto. The group tries to limit their tours to about two weeks. Manhattan is a solo engagement this time.

In 1992, the Air Farce went to the Montreal Comedy Festival, a summer laugh-fest that attracts the biggest names in comedy.

The Air Farce was started on Dec. 9, 1973, as a radio show. The group proved to be such a hit that it now has its own TV series in Canada. It is in the same format as "Saturday Night Live," minus the musical guests.

The troop members were also the first Canadians to be inducted into the International Humour Hall of Fame. In 1991, Maclean's Magazine named the group to their 1991 Honor Roll of "Canadians who make a difference."

Last October, the Air Farce released its seventh comedy album, "Twenty/Twenty." It's a celebration of the group's 20th anniversary.

This special engagement could not be any more timely. President Clinton will be in Topeka on Thursday, and Roger Abbott, as Bill Clinton, will be at McCain on Sunday. Democrats, beware!

COMEDY GROUP

- > The Royal Canadian Air Farce, a comedy group, will be presenting their skewed look on life in a special performance at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.
- > Tickets can be purchased through the McCain Box Office. Admission is $15 for the general public, $13 for senior citizens and $7.50 for students and children.

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveau

Cassie comforts confused cradle robber

Dear Cassie,

I am confused about whether it is appropriate for a 21-year-old guy to date girls as young as 16 or 17. I find myself extremely attracted to a 16-year-old girl. She is very easy to talk to, and I can say anything to her. One of my friends is dating a girl her age, and their relationship seems to be working out pretty well. People give him a hard time about it, but he doesn't seem to really care because he likes her so much.

I really want to ask this girl out. I definitely think what a person is like on the inside is much more important than what is on the outside, but shouldn't age also be a consideration for the way a person should feel toward another? I hope asking her out is normal and not a sign that I am some kind of pervert who is attracted to younger girls and that I should get help.

I am definitely confused about what I should do in this situation.

Sincerely,
Robin's cradle

Dear Robin',

The inside matters more. You would not be a pervert to go out with a younger woman, but many people would perceive you to be one.

Her parents would probably be strongly against it. My only concern is whether her maturity level is compatible with yours.

I have found a great division between the maturity level of 16-year-olds and 21-year-olds.

Good luck. I hope you make the right decision.

Grad puts new twist on old art

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Finding Coby Ellison's ceramics studio is about as easy as finding parking at the K-State Union.

However, once you do find the small, dark room in West Stadium, you're likely to hang around awhile. What you'll find is a delightful little collection of ceramics spanning the room. Most of what is displayed is Ellison's recent work.

Ellison, a native of Kansas City, plays on decorative arts, such as fine china. Picture Versailles Palace in France. What sort of dishes and vases would you expect to see? Probably flower motifs in pinks, purples, blues and yellows, all laced with gold. Now, bend those plates. Pull them apart. Strip the fine, polished glaze off of them and expose the rough underbelly.

Now you're talking like Coby Ellison.

As for his satirical take on decorative ceramics, Ellison went to books for his inspiration. He looks at antique styles of ceramics, as well as books on horticulture in Europe in the 1800s.

Ellison said his work "definitely speaks of decorative, but at the same time, they are totally in your face."

What drives an artist to satirize art, even if it is decorative? Decorative art has always been denounced by the art world as, well, decorative — something you would hang in your bathroom, but not a museum.

Take it one step further. What drives a student, who has always worked in printmaking, to a totally different medium of expression?

"After two years in printmaking, I wanted to build some of the images that were primarily two-dimensional in a three-dimensional format," Ellison said. With that in mind, he embarked on a new adventure: a total immersion in ceramics.

"I talked to Yoshi (Yoshiro Ikeda, professor of art) about coming over here and letting me have some space and giving me the technical knowledge when I needed it," Ellison said.

Yoshiro Ikeda is an internationally renowned ceramicist who teaches ceramics at K-State. He exhibits in many galleries, including a recent exhibit at the Strecker Gallery in Manhattan.

Ellison came to K-State in 1987, after one year at the University of Kansas. He majored in printmaking, graduating with a bachelor of fine arts.

"Right before I graduated from KSU, I applied to a school up in Maine, called the Skowhegan School of Painting and Sculpture." The Skowhegan School has a very prestigious summer program.

Ellison said, "They take 65 out of, like, 1,200 people. I applied and got accepted to that."

"It's like an international school that for nine weeks they give you a studio, they give you a place to live, they give you food, they give you everything you want but supplies.

They have visiting artists come in every week. It's a real open forum."

The school is very unconventional. The students do not attend daily classes but simply work on their own at an easy pace.

"It was no structure, as far as classroom," Ellison said. "It was like 'today I'm going to make paintings out of spaghetti.' Not that anyone did it."

Being grouped with other artists from different parts of the country gave Ellison the chance to pick up on other ideas.

"It was a really good opportunity for me because I was the only one from this part of the country," he said. "I got to see the different ideologies, as far as, like, the coasts are concerned. West coast versus East coast."

Committee negotiating crime bill proposals

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Senate and House negotiators agreed Wednesday on the contents of a bill that would make it illegal for minors to have handguns, and were close to finishing work on a proposed Sexual Predators Act.

A joint conference committee met into the night in an attempt to resolve differences between the two chambers on numerous crime proposals.

Its members are drafting the final version of the Legislature's anti-crime package, so that both houses can consider it in pieces Thursday and Friday.

It was relatively easy for the conference committee to agree on the juvenile gun bill, because the differences between the House and Senate versions were technical. It would make it a crime for people under 18 to possess handguns.

Working out the final version of the Sexual Predators Act proved a more difficult task because a state official presented an alternative proposal — considered by neither chamber — as the conference committee met. House members seemed to favor it, while senators appeared to reject it.

"I just don't know why there's a rejection of thoughtful research," said Rep. Mike O'Neal, R-Hutchinson, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

House members eventually relented.

"Having said a lot of things that put me in the position of being able to say, 'I told you so,' I have nothing to lose," O'Neal said.

The gun bill is designed to keep the weapons out of the hands of minors, particularly gang members.

It make exceptions for juveniles involved in hunting and sport-shooting competitions under the direction of adults. In such cases, the juvenile would still be charged with a crime but could present evidence to refute the charges.

The Sex Predators Act is designed to keep violent sex offenders in state custody longer. Legislative action was made more compelling by the rape and murder last year of a young Pittsburg State University student by a sex offender who had been released on parole.

The bill targets two groups, people already serving time in prison for a sex offense, and people who will commit acts in the future.

For people who will commit crimes in the future, the bill would permit judges to sentence them to 40 years in prison without parole.

A person would have to have committed an earlier violent sex offense, such as rape or aggravated sodomy, or a judge would have to conclude that he would be likely to commit another crime because of his mental state.

But such a measure cannot be applied retroactively to people already in prison. So, the bill would allow prosecutors to seek to have such persons declared violent predators by juries.

A person designated as a predator would then be committed to the custody of the state Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services for treatment.

UPC hopes to bring in big names

$30,000.

This would provide better programming for students on campus and the Manhattan community as well, Brent Coverdale, next year's UPC president, said.

UPC provides about 500 programs a year of educational, social, recreational and entertainment value, Coverdale said.

At one point during the 1960s, the UPC was able to bring in people such as Bill Cosby and Jerry Lee Lewis, but a lack of funding has had a detrimental effect on the UPC.

With the possibility of new funding, the council has hopes to bring in the likes of Counting Crows, Oprah and other celebrities, Ann Claussen, UPC director, said.

Bramlage Coliseum and McCain Auditorium have picked up some of the programming in recent years, Claussen said.

"The UPC plays a vital role in University programs, and we would like to maximize that role," Claussen said.

"We're not just providing programming for students. We want to involve students," Claussen said. "If the referendum passes, we want to enhance cooperation with other student groups and, by the year 2,000, have the University jumping."

Claussen said UPC is asleep at the wheel now.

Closer involvement with other student groups is one of the goals that UPC hopes to meet next year, Coverdale said.

He said he believes UPC could have stronger programming if the groups on campus would work together.

Sharla Bailey, who is on the special events and eclectic review committee, said she would like to see more theme weeks, like Mardi Gras, in the Union.

Decorations and various specials, perhaps foods, could be incorporated to fit the theme, she said.

Art student asked back to K-State

After Ellison finished at the Skowhegan School, he moved to Seattle.

"I basically just jumped in the car and moved to Beverly," Ellison said. "I figured things out the hard way, but it was a good experience, because, now, I could go anywhere and do that."

In the meantime, Yoshiro Ikeda asked Ellison's old professor what he was up to. Ikeda was interested in having Ellison back at K-State as a graduate student to study ceramics.

"I think it was an honor, for me, that he would ask me to come back just because of my stature," Ellison said.

Ellison was particularly astonished that Ikeda would ask him back to study with him.

"He would be the best person to come back and work with. The knowledge he has in the field is just amazing." Now, Ellison teaches drawing classes to undergraduates.

Ellison doesn't consider himself a ceramicist. He still continues his work in printmaking and drawing. However, a lot of what Ellison does with ceramics is based on his former knowledge of printmaking and drawing.

Ellison is very attuned to how his art is to be viewed.

"It's not really pristine. It's elegant but really in a bastardized sort of way," he said. "I think of these as being very flamboyant, expressively, just as much as the decorative is flamboyant in being gaudy."

"I really enjoy it, about working with the whole process."

"How I wanted to approach ceramics is not necessarily, say, 'OK, I'm in ceramics, I have to subscribe to the ceramics doctrine.' A lot of ceramics are pretty boring. It's a personal taste."

Where Ellison's latest artistic binge will take him, only he knows.

SGA elections offer alternatives

This is the third year for the party.

STUDENTS FOR STUDENTS

Students for Students' platform is based on controlling the cost of tuition and fees for K-State students.

Senate should do all it can to keep student fees and tuition as low as possible, Patrick Carney, Union Governing Board and arts and sciences senator candidate, said.

"We need to work with the regents so we don't get something like the Partnership for Excellence garbage we had come out this session," he said.

Aaron Otto, Student Board of Publications and arts and sciences senator candidate, said Senate needs to take a proactive role in controlling tuition.

"You need to get in on the ground floor and lobby the legislature and not go whining and complaining at the end."

Carney said Senate should look for ways to cut waste including stopping student fees from being used to pay for University employees.

"This year there were needy organizations whose funding was cut, because there was no money," he said.

Otto said Senate did a good job of keeping student fees down this semester. Senate decreased fees overall this year, not including a possible $25 Union-enhancement fee.

"You must know what's not working and cut it," Otto said.

The party is endorsing Stacy Dalton for student body president and Dale Silvius for student body vice president.

STUDENTS FOR LEADERSHIP

Students for Leadership is a party composed of ROTC members.

Jason Mitchell, candidate for agriculture senator, said the party does not have a platform established yet.

The party is endorsing Jeff Peterson for student body president and Brad Finkeldi for student body vice president.

HOPE AND JORDAN

Tamara Jordon, candidate for Student Board of Publications, said her party's platform is based on an increased student voice.

She said African Americans are not fairly represented on University boards, and her political party felt a sense of urgency to change that situation.

"We want to increase the voice of African Americans on the boards and expand on the voice for other students that is already there," she said.

GUMBO

Education more difficult in England

"There's not much toleration for gays here, and I don't like the attitudes some people have, but America as a whole is still more tolerant than England."

McDonagh said she is also concerned about violence in both countries.

"England is still a violent society," she said. "You have a lot of stabbings, but you have to have special permits for guns."

"It's shocking that everyone's got guns here."

McDonagh said she has noticed contrasts between the educational systems of the United States and England.

"I think England's educational system is more advanced," she said. "Classes are smaller here, and I think they're easier."

McDonagh said academics in England are much more difficult.

"It's different in England," she said. "We will have classes for three years, and then you'll work for a year in your field."

"You take an exam at the end of your three years, over everything you've learned," she said.

"Here, you have to study on a more regular basis, while at home, everything is centered around three months at the end of your three years, while you study for the final exam."

Social life is another area of contrast for McDonagh.

"Here, everything is built around the weekends, but in England, we'd go out every night," she said. "We'll just go to the pub for a drink, sit around and talk."

Candidates tackle election issues

Ben Eastep, senior in agricultural economics, said he is looking at taking a different approach to the parking problem.

"We are going to post a gondola at the football stadium to the Union," he said.

"The up-front fee would be a little more, but everyone would be able to drive to campus."

Jared Adams, sophomore in speech and pre-law, said until more parking is available, students should get two warnings before they have to pay tickets.

Campus safety is a problem that should not be ignored, some of the candidates said.

Adams said this issue needs to be brought to the attention of the administration.

"I think this is important because a lot of campus crime goes unreported," he said. "I think we need to get out and inform people. This might possibly help find some solutions."

Carrel said a University-wide escort service would be one of her possible solutions to this problem.

"This way you can call a number, whether you're scared or alone, or you just want a ride home. You can just call this service," she said.

Clinton pushes health plan

"The results of all this is the government is cutting defense spending, but health-care costs are going up to pay for the same system."

BILL CLINTON
President of the United States

JULIE LONG
Collegian

About 4,000 Kansans turned out to welcome President Bill Clinton to Topeka Thursday afternoon as he came to promote his health-care reform plan.

Clinton was greeted by Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., and Gov. Joan Finney before speaking to an enthusiastic crowd at Forbes Field.

Clinton briefly talked about the problem of health care to the audience at Forbes.

The United States spends 40 to 50 percent more on health care than any other industrialized nation, yet on any given week, 58 million Americans have no health care, and costs continue to rise.

"The results of all this is the government is cutting defense spending, but health-care costs are going up to pay for the same system," Clinton said.

The United States has the best doctors, nurses and medical technicians in the world but the worst system of financing health care, he said.

"And we have to do something about it," he said.

The governor thanked Clinton in her opening remarks for the help the state received during last summer's floods.

"We thank you for coming," Finney said. "We remember that during the tragic floods of 1993, you did more to provide relief for us than any tragedy with any administration in my memory."

After he reiterated the achievements of his administration in deficit reduction and economic stimulation, he said Congress still needs to address crime, unemployment, lobbyist reforms and tax laws.

Later Thursday afternoon, Clinton met with about 150 people who operated small businesses at the Topeka Foundry and Ironworks.

He spent time discussing health-care problems and costs they have experienced with their employees.

Clinton proceeded to Kansas City for a televised town hall meeting on health-care reform.

He opened the meeting by explaining why health care was close to his heart.

"I have been interested in health care for a long time," he said.

His mother was a nurse and throughout his political career, he has watched the health-care system change for the worse.

"Our country is the only advanced country in the world that does not provide health care for its citizens," he said.

America is also the only country with 1,500 insurance companies writing thousands of policies.

This complexity in how the system is financed is what needs to be changed, he said.

"If we cut back on administrative costs, we will gain jobs in health care and lose jobs in clerical work," he said.

The way to bring down the cost of health care is to help the small businesses and self-employed form large pools similar to big businesses so they can receive the same breaks, Clinton said.

"The only way to be fair to small business people is to put them in large pools," he said. "The rates for small business, farmers and self-employed people are 30 to 40 percent higher."

Clinton urged the viewers of the town meeting to contact their senators and representatives and let them know they you feel about health care, regardless of party.

Health-care reform concerns small businesses

CLINTON HEALTH CARE PROGRAM

FAST FACTS

- Guaranteed, irrevocable private insurance.
- Protection of Medicare for elderly.
- Choice of doctor and health plan.
- Health benefits guaranteed at work.
- Outlawing of insurance company abuse.

DETAILS

- All U.S. citizens would have coverage by 1998 by mandating employers provide health insurance to employees.
- Health Alliances would link citizens and health-care providers. Employers would be required to purchase a health plan through the Alliances. Employers of more than 100 employees establish their own "Corporate Alliance."
- Employers must pay a minimum of 60 percent of a full-time employee's premium and a pro-rated percentage of a part-time employer's premium.
- Most of the money will come from employer/employee health care premiums. Insurance plans will have co-payments and deductibles. There will also be a tax incentive for health products.
- There will be an overall limit on health-care expenditures by paying "global budgets" to Health Alliances. The savings will come from streamlining claims administration procedures.

Adults between the ages of 18 and 24 are the single-largest uninsured group in the United States, according to information released by the White House.

The Clinton health plan promises to change that, but local feelings are mixed on the effectiveness on the president's proposal.

Many small business owners have concerns about health-care reform and how it will economically affect business.

"It seems like when the government repeatedly is adding costs for businesses to pay, the bill is passed to consumers, which equals higher prices," Larry Boyd, manager of I Can't Believe It's Yogurt, said.

Even if it is not required that the business pay for health care for part-time employees, Boyd said additional costs for things such as utilities or milk resulting from government interaction will increase prices.

"On the small-scale, when the government puts strain on small businesses to pay for programs, they (small businesses) tend to fade away," Boyd said.

To fund the Clinton Plan, the money will come from employer/employee health-care premiums, and insurance plans will have co-payments and deductibles. A tax increase also will be placed on tobacco products.

Jenee Phayer, freshman in pre-optometry, does not believe health-care reform is necessary.

"I think people should stop complaining about health-care costs," Phayer said. "If people understood what people go through to become a doctor, they would understand."

Doctors must take several years of complex schooling, and many are in debt when they leave school, Phayer said.

Phayer said she believes people would take advantage of the system if strict guidelines about when and how often a person can visit the doctor are not passed in the health-care reform bill.

Jenny Hoppes, senior in physical therapy, said she believes all Americans should be able to have health insurance.

Hoppes said it is unfortunate

K-STATE KICKS OFF INTERNATIONAL WEEK

K-State will celebrate International Week, April 11 - 16, with a variety of events, activities and displays. The theme this year is "One world - hand in hand," and along with the Manhattan community, the campus will kick off the celebration with a flag parade at 11 a.m. Monday beginning at the KSU International Student Center and ending at the K-State Union Courtyard. Opening ceremonies will begin at 11:30 a.m. in the courtyard with performances by local children, a proclamation by the mayor of Manhattan and speeches by community members, including President Jon Wefald.

Other special events planned for the week include:

- World art displays at different locations around Manhattan and K-State.
- The film "Farewell My Concubine" will be shown at 7 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Little Theatre. Admission is free.
- A language and culture day dialogue has been scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Tuesday in the K-State Union Courtyard.
- The movie "Rhapsody in August" will be shown at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the K-State Union Forum Hall. Admission is free.
- The keynote speaker, Maj. Gen. Josue Robles, commander of the 1st Infantry Division at Fort Riley, will discuss multiculturalism in a lecture scheduled for 9:30 a.m. Wednesday in Forum Hall.
- An international fashion show will begin at 11:30 a.m. Wednesday in the Little Theatre.
- A free showing of the film "Cecilia" will take place at 3 p.m. Wednesday in the Little Theatre.
- An international fair will begin at 9 a.m. Thursday on the first and ground floors of the K-State Union. K-State departments, local businesses and international student organizations will participate in the fair.
- Kijana Wiseman, performance artist and musician, will perform as "The Griot" at 7 p.m. Friday in the Little Theatre. A preview of her show will begin at noon Friday in the Union Courtyard.
- Closing day ceremonies will include a community-wide international parade that will begin at 9:30 a.m. Saturday starting at the Manhattan City Park and ending at the Manhattan Town Center. An international night fiesta and cultural show will also be featured at 5 p.m. Saturday in the cafeteria and auditorium of the Manhattan Middle School.

NATIONAL NEWS

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

► MYSTERIOUS DEATHS PROMPT FIGHTING IN RWANDA

NAIROBI, Kenya — Rwanda's acting prime minister and three U.N. soldiers were killed today when fighting broke out after the deaths of the presidents of Rwanda and Burundi in a mysterious plane crash.

President Clinton expressed regret for the surge in violence, saying Prime Minister Agathe Uwilingiyimana was sought out and murdered by Rwandan security forces.

The U.N. soldiers were also killed in Kigali, the Rwanda capital, U.N. representative Joe Sills said in New York. Members of Rwanda's presidential guard reportedly kidnapped them and three Cabinet ministers earlier today.

The whereabouts of the ministers remain unknown, though Radio France Internationale, citing unidentified diplomats, reported later in the day from Kigali that Labor and Social Affairs Minister Landouald Ndasungwa had been killed.

U.N. representative Fred Eckhard said there was an unconfirmed report that Uwilingiyimana had been killed while in a U.N. compound in Kigali.

Sills said the United Nations had been denied access to the plane wreckage carrying the presidents and thus could not confirm whether it was shot down Wednesday night.

Rwanda and Burundi have been wracked for decades by fighting between the Hutu and Tutsi ethnic groups, one of Africa's most savage ethnic feuds.

Both President Juvenal Habyarimana of Rwanda and President Cyprien Ntaryamira of Burundi were Hutus, which are majorities in both countries.

Sills said the U.N. soldiers were unarmed and from Belgium. He had no details of the circumstances of their killing. There are unconfirmed reports that an unspecified number of other U.N. soldiers were missing, Sills said.

One U.N. military observer from Togo was kidnapped and released unharmed.

► CLINTON'S SUPREME COURT NOMINEE CHOICES DIVERSE

WASHINGTON — Justice Harry Blackmun's retirement will give America the youngest Supreme Court in a half-century, and some court watchers are urging President Clinton to aim for one that will more closely reflect the country's diverse population.

"I wish he'd pick a black man or a black woman to provide a more liberal counterpart to conservative Justice Clarence Thomas," said American University law professor Herman Schwartz.

Clinton should choose a Hispanic to reflect that group's growing share of the U.S. population, Rep. Jose Serrano, D-N.Y., chairman of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus, wrote in a letter to the president.

Others are more interested in ideology than demographics.

Clarke Forsythe of Americans United for Life said Clinton should choose someone who does not seek to legislate from the bench as a replacement for the retiring Blackmun, the court's most liberal member.

The National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League's

James Wagoner would like to see a second black, a third woman or the first Hispanic as long as that person has a deep seated commitment to individual privacy and protecting a woman's right to choose.

But Rex Lee, a former U.S. solicitor general, argued against trying to fill any particular demographic slot.

"What it should look like is the very best talent that is available in the legal community," said Lee, who served in the Reagan administration and now is president of Brigham Young University.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, is high on Clinton's list of possible nominees. He's 60. Another possible nominee, U.S. District Judge Jose Cabranes, 53, of Connecticut, would be the court's first Hispanic.

Other possible candidates include Solicitor General Drew Days III and federal appellate Judge Richard Arnold of Arkansas.

Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt was named as a top prospect but said he did not want the job. Days is black, the others white.

► AMERICAN TEEN SEEKS PARDON

SINGAPORE — Lawyers for an American teen-ager who pleaded guilty to vandalizing cars said they have until April 20 to seek a presidential pardon that would spare him six strokes of a rattan cane on the bare buttocks.

Michael Fay, 18, who is at the center of a controversy between Washington and Singapore, completed his first week in jail today.

Fay was sentenced to the lashing, four months behind bars and a $2,200 fine for spray-painting and tossing eggs at cars last year along with several other foreign youths. The jail term could be reduced by one-third for good behavior.

Fay's final appeal of the lashing was rejected March 31 by Singapore's chief justice, and his last hope for avoiding the cane is a pardon from President Ong Teng Cheong.

► GUNNERS BREAK IRISH CEASE-FIRE

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Protestant gunners attacked on the first day of an Irish Republican Army cease-fire intended to pressure Britain to make political concessions.

No one was hurt when three gunners fired on a taxi depot in an IRA stronghold in west Belfast. Police said the gunners escaped in a hijacked car to a nearby Protestant neighborhood.

The IRA's political ally Sinn Fein said the attack Wednesday night was deliberately sectarian.

An outlawed Protestant loyalist group, the Ulster Freedom Fighters, claimed responsibility.

Earlier Wednesday, Sinn Fein urged Prime Minister John Major to proceed with talks.

"At Commerce Bank, we know it's tough to do your best in school if you're hassled by money problems. So we offer Money 101 — a package of banking services especially for college students. Use any or all of them.

Money 101 is a Student Loan Program with a difference. All student loans are the same — same rates, same terms. Only the banks are different. And Commerce Bank can save you interest. While other banks capitalize interest as many as 16 times while you're in school, Commerce doesn't until you graduate — meaning real interest savings.

Money 101 includes a Student VISA or MasterCard to help you get the things you need — and cash advances, too.

The low-cost Money 101 Checking Account helps you keep track of expenses with a complete monthly statement.

And for maximum convenience, sign up for Money 101's Connection 24 Card. It gives you access to your checking and savings accounts 24 hours a day at any Connection 24 ATM (Automated Teller Machine) in Kansas — and other CIRRUS and BankMate ATMs nationwide.

So call me or stop by today and sign up for Money 101 — find out how top performance banking can help your performance at school."

Parking, union expansion topics of forum

Same issues, same attendance. New year. Only 22 out of more than 120 students running in the Student Governing Association election showed up for a debate in the K-State Union Thursday.

Parking, money and communicapresidential candidate, said Student Senate did a $7,000 parking study, but it hasn't done any good.

"There has always been a parking problem at K-State, but the problem can't be solved fast. It's easier to deal with each problem individually," Moore said.

Moore proposed decreasing the cost of each ticket and increasing and a strong voice, Brent Coverdale, a candidate for arts and sciences senator, said.

"Student Senate made a good first step in communicating with Parking Services. We must strongly encourage them to continue until a solution is reached," he said.

Pat Carney, candidate for a two-year term on Union Governing

The proposed $25 student fee increase for the Union expansion would have to be raised to $50 to pay for a parking garage, he said.

"We need to focus on the problems within the Union that deal with plumbing, asbestos and electricity," Carney said.

Many of the candidates brought up the issue of the decrease in rev-the Union to attract people, Tim Lehmann, candidate for a one year term on UGB, said.

He said he disagreed that there won't be enough traffic for future businesses to prosper.

Another issue addressed at the forum was student governments role in lobbying for Partnership for Excellence.

legislative conference committee earlier this week.

"Student governments role is very important. Someone must take the lead and voice the student's opinions," Michael Henry, candidate for arts and sciences senator, said.

The attitudes of the Kansas Legislature regarding Partnership for Excellence could be changed if they knew the true cost of K-State, James McCracken, a candidate for business administration senator, said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Senate elections showing student lethargy

More than likely, a mere 2,000 to 3,000 students will decide the Union referendum, but everyone will pay fees.

Apathy runs amuck.

Student government elections are coming up, and the ticket isn't full.

No one filed for the Student Senate seat for the College of Veterinary Medicine. The Graduate School has seven seats, and only three people are running. The College of Education has six seats, with only five people running.

It is possible to run as a write-in candidate if the candidate files an expenditure report.

Will anyone get the motivation to do this?

Probably not.

The Collegian sponsored a forum Thursday for candidates and students. There are more than 120 candidates running for student government, and 20 candidates and fewer than 10 students showed up.

Granted, people have class and work. But if they want the responsibility of being part of student government, they should put forth more effort than plastering their names to a few bulletin boards and trees around campus.

Not doing anything is so easy to do. A meager 20 students participated in the K-State Union expansion forum last week.

More than likely, a mere 2,000 to 3,000 students will decide on the Union referendum, but everyone will pay fees.

It seems everyone wants to do so little but bitch so much.

Stolen bag full of memories, not replaceable possessions

I thought my life had fallen apart. My backpack was stolen last week. I'll admit, the theft was my own stupid fault. I'd been working on a very complicated assignment for hours and was tired when I stumbled home. I would have forgotten my head if it hadn't been attached. Close enough — I left behind my backpack.

When I finally remembered where I'd left it, I didn't hurry back to get it. Believe it or not, I thought it was safe where it was for a little while (I really have lost my edge to have believed that.)

Besides, it was empty. Well, for the most part. There weren't any textbooks or anything of commercial value in it — just a project I'd been working on the entire semester, my checkbook (which never has any money in it), a set of keys unidentifiable even to myself, my torn-up ballet slippers and my Star of David on a chain that was always breaking.

Hardly things someone could have made a profit from, but they were taken anyway. I'm not angry now. At first, I was furious. It wasn't because the items are a bitch to replace. Well, OK, that had a lot to do with it. Do you know how hard it is for me to get my Waldenbooks card changed? It's not piece of cake!

What really ticked me off was the idea someone could have taken something having absolutely no value to anyone but me. I felt betrayed — violated. I know it was just a backpack.

It wasn't my apartment or my body or anything infinitely more important than a canvas satchel. I still felt as if my privacy had been compromised.

The anger I felt gave way to a small sadness. Those items had a sentiment and love attached to them. A memory. That's why I carried them with me instead of leaving them in my room or a vault. To remind myself, when the day had been too hard, of good times.

I could buy another set of ballet slippers, but not ones I completed my first pirouette in. I could buy another Star of David, but the one taken was given by a special friend more than three years ago. I'll never own another.

The thing is, I learned early on in my life never to get too attached to anything. Don't get attached to people or places or objects. People will betray you, places have to be moved away from, and objects can be used to break your heart.

If you fix too much affection to something, you run the risk of having a soft spot. You run the risk of being destroyed. Living in a family where they "love" you until you scream "uncle" or the bone just pops out of its socket, detachment is just common sense.

I had my heart broken more than once, learning the value of aloofness. When I came to college, though, I slowly lost it all. I opened myself to the experience of living somewhere I wasn't going to be moved from every two years. I let myself meet people and trust them.

I let myself own things and secure to them personal meaning without worrying that doing so marked me as a weakling.

I reserve the right to feel disappointment. Mainly toward myself. I was the fool who allowed myself to fall in love with objects. I left myself vulnerable.

If the thief who took my backpack is reading this, I am sorry circumstances forced you to take my things. Whether you did it because you needed the money, because you wanted the thrill or just to be mean isn't important.

If you haven't thrown all my valuables away, if you still have them, don't bother to send them back. I've learned my lesson, and you deserve the trophies to remind you of a job well done.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Where have all the patriots gone?

Call me old-fashioned if you want. Please call me old-fashioned. I would be proud.

I come from the "old school" that has respect for America. I have read a great deal of history. From this perspective, I see America as the greatest nation ever created on this planet — a land of freedom and opportunity.

America was founded on these cherished beliefs. The persistent problem today is those fellow Americans who have decided to condemn America. They say we are holding our head a little too high because of various tragic events that occurred in our nation's past.

I'll admit the birth of this great nation hasn't been spotless. The problem is that rather than telling people to look at the past and learn from it, which would have a more positive outcome, they take the easier and more destructive attitude of "Hey, look at your past America — you suck!"

It is no wonder there has been such a moral decline in our nation. People are losing faith in this nation because they no longer have anything to be proud of as Americans. The continuous flow of negative attitudes pouring from various areas — government, media and (tragically) schools greatly downplays America's greatness.

Basically, it is simple to be negative about something. It's easier to give up and say it isn't worth trying harder or doing better.

Positive people have to do the hard thing. They must always believe and never give up because as soon as they do, they fail. They must have faith and pride.

The big question is, where was all this faith and pride in America lost?

Obviously, it started with the little things. The loss of those expressions and icons that promoted faith in America gave the primary blow.

I feel one of the biggest tragedies in this self-destruction was brought about through the case of Texas v. Johnson, in which the Supreme Court in a 5-4 decision upheld flag burning as a freedom of speech and, therefore, not punishable by law.

WILLIAM MCKEEN

This sadly turned Old Glory from a symbol of America into just a meaningless object.

The American flag and other symbols give the people something to look up to every day. The flag embodies the numerous values that define America. It should be held with great respect, but the morally destructive liberals in our government squelched all reverence for the symbol in this dreadful blow.

Another shot to American patriotism was the elimination of "The Pledge of Allegiance" from our schoolrooms. The biggest reason was based on a few groups' religions. To satisfy these few in their beliefs, they stole an opportunity to believe from many.

It would be fine with me if those few who feel it is against their moral beliefs do not participate. They do not have to say the pledge. It is sad, though, that all the others are not given this chance to participate in affirming their faith in America.

I also hear complaints of many American songs. One example is the song "America the Beautiful." It contains words such as "brotherhood" and "God."

It is sad a whole generation will grow up without being given the opportunity to experience patriotism because a select few have disaffirmed all faith in the nation.

I am curious how many children these days know the words to the "The Pledge of Allegiance."

I get angered when I am at a sporting event and during the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" people do not remove their hats.

I know people who came to this country for the opportunity they knew it would give them — immigrants just like our forefathers.

One man whom I used to work for came from Mexico with almost nothing but a third-grade education. He came here because he heard that if people try hard in America, they can one day be successful.

He now runs one of the best Mexican restaurants in my hometown and has been written about in various culinary and travel magazines.

America is a great nation, and people need to understand its strength. I believe this begins with reverence for those things that uphold its greatness — songs, the flag, etc. Otherwise, its citizens will not be able to comprehend its ideals and its positive outlook toward the future. Only through this can we keep making our nation greater and greater.

I am not saying to ignore the bad events, but we must learn from them along with the good events.

William McKeen is a senior in English.

► UNION

It's about priorities — and expansion shouldn't be No. 1

Dear Editor,

The past five or six years have seen an amazing number of building projects at K-State. Every time a new idea is proposed, we hear words like enhancement or excellence, which sound good but are never clearly defined.

The primary focus of this University must be the education it provides.

Too frequently, the budget ax at this University goes to cutting scholarly journals and class sections to meet so-called budget shortfalls.

Then, a short time later, a new multimillion-dollar expansion is proposed or new sidewalks are put in.

When a student leaves K-State after four or five years, how modern the Union is will matter little to an employer looking for the best educated and will matter little to the recent graduate who is struggling and wishes his department could have bought new computers or a wider selection of research literature.

The vote on the Union expansion is not about whether a Union expansion would be nice to have or about whether the increase in students' fees appears small because it is spread out over a 20- or 30-year loan.

The Union expansion is about priorities. $9.2 million is a lot of money and could go a long way toward true investments in students' long-term future, such as new equipment, computers, scholarly journals, etc.

With tuition continually on the rise and going up substantially again this fall, shouldn't we be very careful where each additional dollar is spent?

► BLACK BUNNIES?

Shame on you, Scott — you judged the toy rabbit by its color

Dear Editor,

I would like to respond to that all too familiar self-righteous left-wing attitude found in Scott Allen Miller's column Monday titled, "Don't judge a hare by its color."

Maybe the irony lies in the title. Mr. Miller has done just what he said not to — judge a toy rabbit, of all things, by its color.

Mr. Miller states that the media depicts blacks in an unfavorable way. Scott, I hate to break it to you, but the media is as liberal as it gets. I can tell you of only one country that has no underlying prejudices — it is called Fantasyland.

What country has such diversity as the United States? Where else can anyone voice his or her opinion on anything? What country has such a melting pot of ethnicities as we do?

Scott, I certainly hope you know the answer because I sure don't. You state that you hope your white generalizations have exceptions including yourself.

I am sure glad that you are so proud of yourself and your attempts to explain one of the most misunderstood problems in the world by your ingenious encountering with toy rabbits.

I would never dispute that this country is far from being color blind, and it bothers me, too, but things of this nature take time and thought.

I think your "bunny" insights are insipid and ludicrous. I cannot help but think of that politically correct adage that all you liberals love telling us that we, "Need to be part of the solutions and quit being part of the problem."

It appears you are the problem, Scott, and so are all the people who think like you.

► RELIGION

Have your faith — but don't confuse that with science

Dear Editor,

John, your logic just doesn't stand. You obviously have read little philosophy discussing religion or you would have realized all your arguments have been considered and torn to pathetic bits by philosophers decades ago, namely Hume, Wittgenstein, Ayer, etc.

First of all, you say, "skeptics have been unable to disprove the truth and accuracy of the historical events critical to the authority and credibility of Christ."

Answer me this, John, what exactly would count as evidence for the existence of God, or what would count as evidence for the nonexistence of God?

Say I was able to show you proof God doesn't exist. Would you accept the proof and renounce your faith? Of course not — you would exercise all possible means of showing my evidence false.

Some beliefs can be changed given the proper evidence. For example, I may believe the world is flat until presented with an aerial photo showing the Earth as a sphere. Religion doesn't work this way. Giving up a belief such as religion involves much more than changing one's mind about an idea. It involves changing one's entire way of life and views about the world.

A truly religious person should realize historical details are irrelevant, and one whose belief lies on proving details correct is missing the point of religion entirely.

A truly religious person should realize that religious beliefs don't rely on evidence, and science and religion are not competing for the same territory.

Value of health plan debated

many college-age adults do not have health insurance when the amount of money to cover such a low-risk age group would be minimal for the government to cover.

"Other countries seem to have that type of health-insurance policy, and it seems to work out better," she said.

Opponents of the Clinton plan argue that a complete overhaul of the health-care system is not necessary.

A survey of 3,000 members of the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and Industry released in February demonstrated that many people are instead in support of plans proposed by Senator John Chafee and Senator Phil Gramm.

"KCCI members apparently feel that the health-care system needs reform and improvement, but certainly doesn't merit trashing or complete overhaul," Ed Bruske, KCCI President, said.

"Instead, they are saying we need to find ways to stimulate the private sector to develop innovative approaches to make health insurance available and affordable," he said. "Affordability is the key word."

Unlike Clinton's Plan, Gramm's Plan is voluntary, and all financial responsibilities are placed on the individual.

Other watch dog groups believe the Clinton plan is the most affordable answer to the health-care crisis.

According to a report released March 30 by the consumer group Families USA, Americans will get more comprehensive health benefits under Clinton's health reform and pay less than they would without reform.

"The Clinton reform slows skyrocketing health costs and gives us solid health protection," Ron Pollack, executive director of Families USA, said. "Without reform, health costs will continue to soar and families' health security will keep dwindling."

Senate OKs class waivers, general-education

TAWNIA ERNST
Collegian

Student Senate passed a resolution Thursday night to support a Faculty Senate proposal to allow physically or mentally disabled students to waive some of their classes.

Suitable replacement classes would be found for classes that might pose challenges to the students' respective disabilities.

For example, a student with a physical disability wouldn't have to take the Principles of Physical Fitness.

Senate also took action to support the proposed general-education program.

The program provides a means to take courses that don't necessarily fall within a student's major without increasing the number of hours needed for graduation, Scott Rottinghaus, arts and sciences senator, said.

Courses would be designed or restructured to promote critical thinking and to stress skills in life that would not always be covered within a student's major, Rottinghaus said.

A meeting to discuss parking and biking regulations will be at 3 p.m. Thursday, April 14, in the Union Big 8 Room. The meeting will be open to all students.

Students will have the chance to discuss any complaints they might have about biking or parking on campus.

Michelle Ecklund, a senator who has served on the Parking Council, said one idea has been to take about 500 of the existing general parking stalls in the lot west of Ahearn Field House and reserve them for students only.

There are between 900 and 1,000 stalls in that lot, she said.

Despite cancelled talks, Bosnian peace possible

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Serb troops kept pressure on the embattled Muslim enclave of Gorazde while the U.N. commander struggled Thursday to persuade generals from both sides to accept a general cease-fire.

Truce talks scheduled for Sarajevo airport did not take place. Instead, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, who leads U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia, shuttled between the commanders of Serb forces and the Muslim led government's army.

There were hints of progress. U.N. representative Maj. William Levack said Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic told U.N. officials he would agree to a 24-hour cease-fire throughout the former Yugoslav republic.

The Bosnian news agency B-H Press said the Bosnian government commander ordered his forces to stop shooting at 6 p.m. local time (11 a.m. CDT).

There was no word that the Serbs had agreed to the cease-fire.

But Levack said the Serb commander told Rose that his forces would hold fire if government forces did. It was not immediately known whether fighting had stopped.

Rose was pushing both sides to agree to a proposed cease-fire for all of Bosnia, U.N. officials said.

"We're fairly close to some kind of peace plan," Rose said earlier in the day, but he declined to give details or discuss stumbling blocks.

"Both sides need time for reflection, and we hope to continue the talks tomorrow with a view to signing a peace plan in the very near future."

Charles Redman, the special U.S. envoy to the region, meanwhile arrived in Croatia on Thursday, with visits also planned for Sarajevo, the Bosnian Serb headquarters in Pale and Belgrade, capital of Yugoslavia.

He said he was going to talk with leaders in those areas about a general cease-fire.

Some fighting has been silenced in Bosnia. A cease-fire between the government and Serbs has held since Feb. 10 in Sarajevo.

Croats and Muslims have observed a truce since Feb. 25 in central and southwestern Bosnia as part of their U.S. brokered agreement to stop fighting and form a federation.

But the fierce fighting in Gorazde has complicated efforts to sew the patchwork truces into an overall peace for Bosnia, where more than 200,000 people are dead or missing after two years of war.

The United States and its NATO allies on Thursday urged the United Nations to dispatch hundreds of Ukrainian and other peacekeepers to Gorazde, Clinton administration officials said Thursday.

British and French peacekeepers may be redeployed to join the Ukrainians in trying to protect the town's 65,000 civilians.

The United States was ready to transport the Ukrainians, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Serb militia besieging the area around Gorazde had appeared to ease their attack Wednesday night, but U.N. aid workers in the town reported more shelling Thursday.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Smith visits; decision possible

TREY JOHNSON

Collegian

Tubby Smith has emerged as the top pick to replace former K-State basketball coach Dana Altman.

Smith was at K-State Thursday attending meetings and touring the facilities the Wildcat basketball program has to offer.

The Kansas City Star has quoted an unnamed member of the 23-person K-State search committee as saying, "He's the guy we want. I just don't know if we can come up with as much money as he can get by staying at Tulsa."

Reportedly, an offer has been made to Smith, and Athletic Director Max Urlick is waiting for a reply.

An announcement by Smith could come as early this afternoon. If another coach accepts the position, the decision likely will come during the weekend.

Smith, coach of the Tulsa Golden Hurricane, led his team to two victories in the NCAA Tournament this season. During his three years at Tulsa, Smith has compiled a 55-35 record.

While an official decision has not been announced, the K-State search committee has a pressing deadline to meet.

Monday at 8 a.m. is the deadline when coaches may no longer contact any potential recruits until the Wednesday signing period. For a new coach selection to be effective, it must allow the coach the opportunity to attract new players to the program. Also, many coaches might not wish to leave their programs if they have already signed new team members.

If K-State is unable to sign a new basketball coach by Monday, the recruiting process may be hampered. Also in the running are K-State Assistant Coach Ken Turner, Washburn's Bob Chipman and Larry Hunter of Ohio. Both of these coaches also have been interviewed for the coaching position.

Chipman is expected to be interviewed for a second time today concerning the job.

With three games snowed out this week, the K-State baseball team is back in action this weekend for a three-game homestand against the Missouri Tigers.

The Wildcats, 11-21 on the season, dropped two out of three games against Iowa State last weekend, putting the Cats near the bottom in conference standings with a 2-7 record.

Missouri enters this weekend's series coming off a three-game sweep at the hands of the Kansas Jayhawks. The Tigers are 20-10 on the year and have a 3-5 Big Eight record.

Probable starters for Mizzou are part of an all-southpaw battery that includes Chris Robertson, 5-2, Jerry Vansell, 4-3, Jason Meyhoff, 3-1, and Greg Lindstrom, 2-1.

On the mound for K-State, junior lefty Adam Novak will start the series Friday night, with freshmen Jon Oiseth and Eric Yanz picking up Saturday and Sunday's pitching duties.

Novak, 0-1 on the year with a 4.05 earned run average, has filled both starting and relief roles for the Cats this season.

Newcomer Oiseth has established himself as the team's leading pitcher, going 4-4 on the season while picking up both of the Cats' Big Eight wins, against Kansas and Iowa State.

Yanz, 0-2, will be looking for his first collegiate win entering Sunday's 1 p.m. contest.

Offensively for K-State, sophomore Matt Miller and junior Tim Decker have been providing the pop at the plate for the Cats.

Miller, the designated hitter, is coming off a .402 week with three home runs, two doubles and nine RBI. That's good enough to put him second in the league in batting for conference games with an average of .412. He'll be trying to extend an 11-game hitting streak going into this weekend's series.

Junior center fielder Decker has also had a hot bat lately, hitting safely in 21 of his last 50 at bats for a .420 average. Decker has also been flawless in the field, not committing an error in 64 chances.

Friday's game gets underway at 7 p.m., with Saturday's contest slated for 3 p.m. The series winds up Sunday at 1 p.m.

Jay Kopriya makes the play during the Wildcats' practice Thursday afternoon. K-State plays Missouri in a three-game series this weekend. The first game begins today at 7 p.m. at Frank Myers Field.

Netters to face double-header

CRAIG PINKERTON

K-State's women's tennis team will try to get back on the winning track this weekend.

The netters will compete against Nebraska on Saturday and Iowa State on Sunday.

The netters are coming off an 8-1 loss to Colorado last weekend in Boulder. The Wildcats' lone point came from Nikki Lagerstrom, who defeated Sara Willens, 6-4, 6-4, in No. 3 singles.

The loss to Colorado dropped the Cats' conference record to 1-1 and their overall record to 4-12.

Although a victory would be difficult to achieve again this weekend, the netters are looking forward to improving their performance from last weekend.

"We worked hard this week, and I think they are ready to play better than they did last weekend," Coach Steve Bietau said.

The Cats are beginning to see results from the work.

"We're just going to keep improving. Everyone we have is playing better than they were a month ago," Bietau said. "That is a tribute to the fact that they are working hard to improve."

Once again, the netters will be short-handed and will have to forfeit three points before the match begins. Karina Kuregian, Alex Thome and Karen Nicholson are all out due to injuries and illnesses.

The remaining four players who are healthy are Summer Ruckman, Martine Shrubsole, Brooke Brundige and Nikki Lagerstrom.

The netters who are healthy aren't letting the fact that they trail before the match even begins get them down.

"This week, everyone had a pretty good practice. We're just concentrating on the individual things and not worrying about giving up the three at the start," Shrubsole said.

The matches will begin at 11 a.m. both days. Weather permitting, they will be played at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area. In case of inclement weather, the matches will be moved into Ahearn Field House.

Aaron celebrates record by selling baseballs on TV

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Instead of celebrating the 20th anniversary of his record-breaking 715th home run at a major league ballpark, Hank Aaron will hawk merchandise today on a home shopping channel.

Aaron broke Babe Ruth's home run record at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium on April 8, 1974, in a 7-4 Braves win against the Dodgers. Each home team in the major leagues will mark the anniversary at its game today, but Aaron won't attend any of the celebrations.

"I'll be on QVC," he said during a teleconference with reporters Thursday. "Hopefully, we can sell some baseballs."

The Braves will honor Aaron before their April 13 game against the San Francisco Giants.

Lacrosse team checks in with Hawks in Lawrence

JEREMY CRABTREE

The Kansas-K-State rivalry lives on in sports other than football and basketball.

This includes lacrosse, as the Wildcats and the Jayhawks will do battle at 2 p.m. Sunday in Lawrence.

"For a long time, we couldn't beat them," Curt Thurman, lacrosse coach, said. "Then in the last year and a half, we have dominated."

"We just never had the push when they would beat us all of the time. We'd get a lead and in the back of our minds, we knew they would come back. They usually did, too."

Thurman said things are different now, as the Cats have captured two consecutive victories against the Hawks.

"We beat them twice in two weeks last season," Thurman said. "The first game we won 16-6, and then we played them in the Final Four and beat them by 10 goals."

Sunday's game could be the most important of the season, Thurman said.

"We need to get momentum going in the championships," he said. "This game will be the turning point of our season because after this game we will start getting ready for postseason play."

Thurman said the Hawks will try to use their speed against the Cats, but K-State will be ready.

"They throw the ball in the middle of the field and just run an attack," he said. "We don't want to run, so we'll try and settle things down and set the tempo."

Before the Cats have an opportunity to face the Hawks, they have to get by Kansas City on Saturday.

Kansas City is a post-collegiate team composed of players in their late 20s and early 30s.

COLUMN

Take a chance on Abdul-Jabbar; it is a win-win situation

Opening night at Bramlage Coliseum for the 1994-95 Wildcat basketball season.

A sell-out. More than 13,500 screaming fans in attendance for the first post-Altman performance of the new K-State Wildcats.

They are there to witness the debut of one of the greatest basketball legends in history. He is going to make K-State the most recognizable college basketball team in the country.

He is the new coach. Wildcat fans, meet your new K-State basketball coach — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar.

Hey, it could happen. Abdul-Jabbar has already established himself as the premier center in both the college and professional game, winning three national championships with UCLA and six world championships with the Milwaukee Bucks and Los Angeles Lakers. He says he is ready to lend his services to the college coaching ranks.

At the Final Four in Charlotte, N.C., Abdul-Jabbar made his interest known.

"If you had asked me three years ago, I'd have said, 'Forget it, you're out of your mind,'" he said of the possibility of coaching. "Now, it's not quite like that. There is a great need for people to teach the game. I don't think a lot of the young players, especially the front line players, are learning the fundamentals."

"That's something I know very well and could teach very well."

OK, there it is. Abdul-Jabbar has thrown his hat into the ring. He's ready to give coaching a shot.

But anyone who thinks he would be interested in K-State has got to be out of his or her mind.

Wait. There's more.

Not only is Abdul-Jabbar interested in coaching, he has made it clear he is willing to go anywhere, start anywhere.

"I'm open to whatever might pop up," he said. "I think there is something there that I could do positively. There's a lot of knowledge that I have to give to another generation."

There are some Cat fans who agree. Before the K-State search committee goes any further, it should stop and ask some serious questions about what Abdul-Jabbar could do for Wildcat basketball.

Forget the questions. Here are the answers.

■ He could fill Bramlage Coliseum to near capacity for every game just by his mere presence on the bench.

■ His reputation alone could gain immediate access to the home of every high-school recruit in the nation.

■ He could attract immediate interest from every 7-foot high-school center. What high-school center would not want to learn the fundamentals of the position from the premier big man in the history of the game? Say goodbye to the lack of a dominant true center at K-State.

■ He would garner more national media attention with his hiring than any other coach short of John Wooden. Lead story on ESPN, CNN, ABC, CBS, NBC. Front page of every newspaper in America. You get the picture.

■ His presence alone would create more national TV games than K-State has ever been a part. The networks would literally engage in hand-to-hand combat to win the broadcast rights to his first game.

■ He would instantly become the most recognizable coach in the Big Eight, soon to be the Big Eight and Those Four Texas Schools.

■ He would bring a winning tradition unequalled by any other individual in history to K-State.

■ He would bring a willingness to start from scratch, to teach the fundamentals necessary for building great basketball players and great basketball programs.

And truthfully, if his first few seasons were not winning ones, which alumnus will have the audacity to give Abdul-Jabbar a call on his coaches show to berate him on his incompetence?

No offense to the Tubby Smiths,

Bob Chipmans or Rick Majerus of the world, but can they do those things for K-State basketball?

Those are the benefits that Abdul-Jabbar brings to K-State. But what does K-State give to Abdul-Jabbar?

There is one big advantage for him. Accepting the coaching position at K-State provides Abdul-Jabbar with the opportunity to test his coaching skills in a major NCAA Division-I conference located within a small media market.

Absent the media circus, certainly to be generated if he were to accept his first position at an east coast or west coast school or in a metropolitan market, Abdul-Jabbar will be able to focus without distractions upon the task at hand — rebuilding a winning tradition at K-State.

Granted, the K-State search committee has said it is looking for a coach with a proven track record. But seriously, questioning Abdul-Jabbar's ability as a college coach is like questioning Rush Limbaugh's ability to judge a high-school debate contest.

Now, the question remains if K-State can afford an Abdul-Jabbar. Projecting the increased revenue and exposure he would bring to K-State, the administration should have the foresight to make some concessions and offer him his market value.

The K-State administration and alumni need to address what is best for K-State. Abdul-Jabbar is the best candidate available, and if K-State doesn't recognize the potential an Abdul-Jabbar would bring to the school and the conference, another university will.

Of course, if he declines, there's always Michael Jordan.

A man who graduated with an animal-science degree was convicted of beating a lamb at a livestock auction to make it seem more attractive to judges.

Kyle Schwedtfeger was found guilty last week of cruelty to animals, a misdemeanor, and was fined $1,000.

Schwedtfeger, 22, graduated from Oklahoma State University. He beat the lamb with his hands at the Arkansas-Oklahoma State Fair Junior Livestock Auction last September while the lamb's 16-year-old owner held it by the head.

The beating was intended to cause the lamb's body to swell so it would feel more firm to judges, officials said. Firmness is a desirable quality in livestock showing.

The lamb's owner, Mike Herrel, 16, of Miami, Okla., was not charged, but had to forfeit prize money he won. He was banned from competing in the auction for two years.

Officials with the Tulsa State Fair said pressure to win is pushing people to use methods ranging from steroids to removing lambs' ribs to improve their shape.

Here's to your health: Former Brockton, Mass., Mayor Richard Wainwright mixed treated sewer water with 30-year-old Scotch and gulped it down.

Wainwright, who served as mayor 20 years ago, believes the technology is available to make wastewater potable.

He took his unusual shot at a City Council Finance Committee meeting Monday as a dramatic way of trying to prove his point.

"Every gallon (of treated municipal wastewater) is cleaner than what is in Silver Lake today," Wainwright said, referring to the city's primary water supply.

Most in the audience responded with amusement to Wainwright's theatrics, but Mayor Winthrop Farwell was irritated.

"I hope when I leave office someday, I'll have the good sense to not engage in that kind of 11th-hour theatrics when there is a very important issue facing the mayor and the city council," Farwell said. "Drinking alcoholic beverages at City Hall is not the image we want to send to our children."

Pizza's on me (sort of)

Alex Thomas may have eaten his way into the big house.

Thomas, 21, of Birmingham, Ala., was indicted Monday on federal charges of fraudulently using other peoples' credit cards to order more than $5,000 worth of pizzas at a restaurant during a 90-day period last year.

Thomas apparently got card numbers from guests at a hotel where he worked as a desk clerk, Assistant U.S. Attorney Mike Whisonant said.

"I don't know exactly how many pizzas we're talking about," Whisonant said. "But he went to the restaurant 73 times and ordered four to six pizzas each time."

Thomas gave some of the pizzas to friends, "but we believe he ate a lot of them himself," Whisonant said.

The artificial arm a man used to break a window in the county jail at Chillicothe, Ohio, will be kept as evidence, the county sheriff said.

The State Highway Patrol arrested Raymond Kellough on Tuesday on a charge of drunken driving. Kellough, 54, of Leesburg, was detained overnight in Ross County Sheriff Bill Knott's jail.

Early Wednesday, Kellough removed his artificial left arm and used it to break the window of his cell, Knott said. Officers discovered the damage and confiscated the arm, which attaches near the shoulder, before moving Kellough to another cell.

Kellough pleaded innocent to drunken driving Wednesday in municipal court and was released on his own recognizance.

Knott said he would charge Kellough with vandalism.

"We'll hold the arm," he said. "It's evidence."

"If I get my way, he's going to pay for the window before he gets his arm back."

WEEKEND

From Bluemont to BROADWAY

You just knew we were going to be trouble as soon as the plane took off for New York. A German amphetamine version of the Partridge Family, with a mother decked out in leather with six, yelling kids in tow.

Somewhere over Chicago, the mother lost total control — of herself and her kids, who were singing German Care Bear songs and jumping up and down on their seats.

Finally, after the mother called a flight attendant some phrases, well, needing no translation, the captain of our plane came back to regain order.

While the blond older daughter translated, the captain threatened to land the plane in Cleveland — "understand policia?"

Things quieted down for the rest of the flight, but as we got off the plane at LaGuardia Airport, the blonde, regal-looking daughter, who was the only one of the group always in control, stopped to talk to the flight attendant one last time:

"You wouldn't have done this if Hitler were alive," she said, then walked off the plane.

Welcome to New York — the ugly right along with the beautiful but never boring.

A place where everyone is from somewhere else.

Fetid streets that reek with the sewage running underneath with blowing trash and debris, but occasionally, your mouth will water after running into the aroma from fresh bagels and croissants from the coffee shops dotting every street.

A concrete playground, complete with barbed wire and rotting corpses of buildings — New York is every stereotype you've ever heard of big-city meltdown, from "Blade Runner" to "Escape from New York," all rolled into one, ugly, overcrowded package.

But your first taste of the Big Apple comes at the mercy of the taxi drivers. The cabs themselves are surprisingly clean, not like some of the horror stories.

But the quarter-inch plexiglass between you and the front seat, with a little revolving drawer to pass on your fares, reminds you. You're not in just any town.

Almost every cabbie is an immigrant, and giving directions can be as interesting as the ride itself.

But the cabs rule the roads. Almost half of the vehicles in downtown Manhattan are taxis. And no sane people would drive their own cars on the same street.

Cabbies live with their foot on the accelerator trying to defy centrifugal force as they plunge down a side street, weaving from lane to lane, bare inches from the cars around them.

Sometimes, they don't even bother to stay in one lane but hedge their bets as they nose out the taxi right behind while honking their horns at the cars still in front.

But despite the laws of physics, you never die in some grotesque pileup. You never see the cabs that show signs of heavy-metal collision.

You enter the island of Manhattan, which is surrounded by New Jersey on one side and Long Island on the other.

You cross the water on the backs of huge, steel-girder bridges, so old they appear like bones of some prehistoric animal.

But the most interesting form of transportation is the subway, which sprawls underground like a second city.

Grab the right train — was it the A or the N? Which way am I going? — and you can get anywhere in Manhattan in a matter of minutes, wondering all the while: Was this the very train all those people were gunned down in?

Welcome to the famous Times Square — well, not actually a square, but just an open area where two roads merge into one — in this case, Broadway and Seventh Avenue.

Here, capitalism in all its various forms and extremes coexist — the glitz of the Broadway show: "Cats," "Miss Saigon," "Damn Yankees" and on and on.

David "Don't bother trying to get tickets" Letterman is two blocks up the street in his brand-new theater, and Radio City Music Hall (featuring the Rockettes) is also nearby.

Billboards the size of Aggieville run along the side of skyscrapers, with models selling clothes without wearing any.

Huge video screens show the latest news and infomercials. Newspaper vendors sell papers in a half a dozen languages along with flagrantly displayed racks of pornography while scantily dressed women ask if you need "some company."

On the island in the middle of Times Square stands a plywood ticket booth selling $80 Broadway tickets where several homeless people have used garbage bags to build an igloo-like shelter from the rain.

But no one blinks an eye. Everybody smokes in New York, and why not? The smog adds a nice, brown haze to the skyline that burns your lungs when you first step outside — so thick that tar and nicotine become one of the lesser carcinogenic substances.

Another thing that may strike you in the Big Apple is your own ethnicity.

If you're like the majority of Kansans — a member of those Germanic and Swedish brethren, the particularly pasty-looking types — being suddenly thrust into the minority can be one of the most exciting facets of your trip.

Stand on a street corner in the heart of Chinatown, where there isn't a word of English being spoken by the hundreds milling around you.

Among the open-air fish markets, the signs are in Chinese. Even the McDonalds™ menu is in a foreign tongue. You've suddenly gone overseas, without the big air fare.

There's Wall Street down near the south end of Manhattan — the financial capital of the world.

But it's smaller than anything you might expect for the heart of the money.

Wall Street itself is no longer than Moro in Aggieville.

You can get free tours to the Stock Exchange to see where people used to jump out of windows en masse.

They no longer do — the windows can't be opened from the inside. The Statue of Liberty is off the shoreline, no more impressive in the distance than the smokestack at K-State's physical plant.

Greenwich Village is the home of New York University, the largest private university in the country.

But unlike its more plains-bound brethren, NYU doesn't have its own land but is just a series of renovated buildings strung along a side street.

Greek housing consists of more renovated buildings, with each fraternity or sorority on its own floor.

And after a few days, you return a hardened Big Apple veteran, smog and crime adapted.

On the flight home, a homey sanity starts to return.

All the freaks are flying into New York. No Hitler youth, just nice, plain Midwestern folk.

A nice welcome back to the best of the two Apples.

ogy, are no exception. Although all candidates are aiming at the entire student body, Adams and Moore are trying to speak with the larger living groups. "We've been talking with fraternities, sororities and residence halls," he said.

Since they are underclassmen, Adams and Moore have been campaigning hard for the freshman and sophomore votes, Adams said.

"We want to get freshmen and sophomores to realize that they can make a difference as underclassmen," he said. "The college years are supposed to be the best four to six years of your life, and you should get involved."

Carrel and Kazi

Another duo that is hitting the campaign trail hard is Steffany Carrel, presidential candidate and junior in journalism, and her running mate, Nabeeha Kazi, sophomore undecided.

While the two say they are aiming at the student body as a whole, they have spent considerable amounts of time talking with multicultural campus groups, Kazi said.

"We want to make sure that multicultural organizations and international students don't feel isolated from student government. We want to give every student a voice."

Carrel and Kazi have spoken with the theater department, honorary societies, Black Student Union, several Hispanic groups and many greek houses, Kazi said.

"We like listening to students and want what the student body wants," she said. "What distinguishes us is that we are familiar with the policies and procedures to get things done."

Dalton and Silvius

Presidential candidate Stacy Dalton, junior in business administration, and running mate Dale Silvius, senior in management, said campaign goal is to talk to people, talk to people, talk to people.

Silvius and Dalton have been hitting the greek houses and other groups trying to spread their ideas.

Students have been asking questions about the proposed Union expansion, tuition increases and parking, he said.

"Unfortunately, Senate has not had a lot of carry-through on parking," Silvius said. "They did that multi-thousand-dollar study, and it is just sitting there."

Eastep and Miller

Ben Eastep, student body presidential candidate and junior in horticulture, and his running mate, Taylor Miller, senior in business administration, aren't trying to aim at any one particular group. They want everyone's vote, Eastep said.

"We just want to get out there and tell people that everybody doesn't have to be so worried about everything," he said. "But at the same time, we are going to try to get things done."

Eastep and Miller have been getting their message out at Manhattan area bars, fraternities and sororities, and they will be participating in the International Parade on April 11.

"We just really want to get our name out there for people to see so that they will look at our issues and vote," he said.

Peterson and Finkeldei

Jeff Peterson, student body presidential candidate and senior in animal science and industry, and his running mate, Brad Finkeldei, junior in chemistry, have spoken to the Young Democrats, College Republicans, several college councils and honorary societies.

"We're trying to make a real effort to reach every student at K-State, in every group," he said.

Peterson and Finkeldei are interested in letting students know who they are voting for, Peterson said.

"We're just being ourselves and want to let people know that we're out there with some one-on-one personal contact with the students," he said.

Kansas State Collegian

Guide to Open House

K-State opens its doors

K-State is inviting visitors of all ages to discover what the University has to offer during its annual Open House this Saturday.

The Manhattan campus will be open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and the KSU-Salina campus will demonstrate exhibits from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Each of the eight colleges will be enticing K-State prospects through exhibits, speakers, demonstrations and hands-on activities relevant to each major.

The College of Architecture and Design will judge egg-drop structures on their stability twice throughout the day. Architecture will also have exhibits on display and have a Sand Fantasy Land, in which children of all ages can sculpt.

The College of Agriculture will have a livestock showmanship contest in beef, horses, swine, sheep and dairy at Weber Arena. Also, agriculture will have a garden workshop, where children select and plant their own foliage plant and take it home to grow.

The College of Arts and Sciences will have a chemistry magic show and hands-on demonstrations.

Two large rooms will be filled with fish, amphibians, reptiles, birds and mammals, both preserved and alive in the biology department.

Visitors can get hands-on experience as those who participate watch journalism students produce a mini-newspaper personalized especially for them.

A group of speech pathology majors will demonstrate songs in sign language.

The mathematics department will demonstrate virtual-reality displays.

Visitors can learn about the effects nature had on the Tuttle Creek Spillway during last summer's flooding and view displays of rocks and minerals with the geology department.

There will be videos and displays from the Departments of Philosophy, Speech, Psychology, Statistics, History and others.

The College of Business will have multimedia presentations throughout the day along with representatives from numerous companies to answer questions.

The College of Education will sponsor a make-it take-it workshop enabling students to be creative with marble painting and print making. The Sunset Zoo will bring animals for students to see.

Children will also be able to listen to education students tell tales.

The Education Council will discuss university life and education program. Visitors can involve themselves in the discussion.

The College of Engineering will give tours of the Triga Mark II nuclear reactor and sponsor its annual high-school balsa wood bridge-design contest. Don't forget the Willie Flip design contest, either.

The College of Human Ecology will have mock therapy sessions and demonstrations of the empathy belly. High-school teams will compete in a foods-and-nutrition quiz bowl.

Visitors will be able to print their own K-State Wildcats Copper Bowl pennant. The department uses a European laboratory screen printing machine.

Students will also be able to have their body fat composition measured using the method of bioelectrical impedance.

The College of Veterinary Medicine will give guided tours through different chambers of the heart and sponsor a petting zoo.

Vet medicine will also demonstrate some of the training specialty dogs go through before going to their owners. This event involves an all-day booth as well.

A children's petting zoo will include lamb, goats, pigs, rabbits and other species of animals.

A program conducted by the Sunset Zoo will give the audience an opportunity to see exotic species of animals from around the world.

Each college will give guided tours, have advisers on hand and have booths set up throughout the day to answer questions.

Students will be able to tour campus living facilities, residence halls, sororities, fraternities and cooperative/scholarship houses.

Some activities start Friday.

The College of Engineering will have a parade at noon and demonstrate robots competing in sumo wrestling, a line race, a maze race and an art drawing contest.

Kate Kiernat, graduate student in college personnel and assistant director of Moore Hall, said she is excited to see all the visitors at K-State.

Ice cream, cheese and a petting zoo all can be found at Call Hall during the 1994 K-State Open House.

"We have a lot of things planned for the day because almost each group of the animal science department has some kind of display or demonstration planned," Randall Phebus, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

Some divisions in the department with informative displays include food science, animal breeding and poultry.

The Dairy Food and Science Club will be selling ice cream in the lobby of Weber Hall, and the Block & Bridle Club will be selling hats and T-shirts.

The dairy bar in Call Hall will be open all day selling cheese, ice cream and other dairy products.

"The ice cream is always one of our biggest attractions at Open House," Phebus said.

Visitors can buy fresh meats in Call Hall's meat lab, which will be open all day for visitors.

"We plan on running things similar to last year," Renee Westgate, food service supervisor in animal sciences and industry, said. "We will be selling ice cream in the dairy bar and giving out free samples of ice cream and cheese."

The animal sciences department is also providing a petting zoo for children. The petting zoo will be located outside Call Hall.

"This is very popular, especially for the kids," Phebus said. "And we're also going to be there to give directions to people."

There will be several luncheons provided on campus by the animal sciences department.

The Little American Royal and the Graduate Student Association will each be host to a lunch.

For potential students visiting the campus, there will be information available about the department.

"We will have booths set up for different majors to help students interested in animal science," Phebus said.

"We'll be there to go over career opportunities in animal and food science."

"This is very popular, especially for the kids, and we're also going to be there to give directions to people."

Campus housing showcased with tours, information tables

SARAH HAPPEL

The K-State residence halls will be showing more than 1,600 people what campus housing offers during Open House this weekend.

Alex Delgadillo, residence life program coordinator, said more than 400 tours will be given throughout the day.

"We probably average 50 tours. A lot of perspective students come with their families to see K-State."

"This is a great opportunity to interact with the students in the residence halls," Delgadillo said.

Kate Kiernat, assistant director of Moore Hall, said she was excited about showing the residence halls to visiting students and their families.

"We have a great time and get to show off the halls," she said.

Besides giving hall tours, staffs and hall representatives from each hall will have informational tables set up at the Union throughout the day to answer questions and portray residence hall living.

At least 12 students will be at the Union at all times.

"We'll wear our hall T-shirts, bring scrapbooks and show what we've done in the halls," Kiernat said.

"We'll show the fun things, the educational things and what each of the different halls have to offer."

Delgadillo said at the end of the tour, students are asked to fill out a survey to help determine what types of questions should be addressed while students tour the halls.

Delgadillo said the most common concern voiced was what students should do if they don't get along with their roommate.

How to become involved and the accessibility and safety of the dorms were other concerns commonly heard from students and parents.

There will also be a bus service set up to take visitors from Goodnow Hall to the Veterinary Medicine Complex to Haymaker Hall and then loop around to Justin Hall and end up back at the south-side of the Union.

Sophomores get preview of KSU, college lifestyle

SERA L. TANK

High-school sophomores will get a jump on college selection and preparation because of a program organized by the K-State Student Alumni Board.

"For Sophomores Only" is a program set up as a part of the Student Life Workshop and will take place during the K-State Open House, Becky Klingler, director of constituent programs for the K-State Alumni Association, said.

One reason for focusing on high-school sophomores instead of juniors and seniors is to assist the students in getting an early start in college selection and preparation, Pat Bosco, vice president for institutional advancement, said.

"We're finding that students and their parents are beginning the process of planning for life after high school earlier than four or five years ago," Bosco said.

"For Sophomores Only" will complement the existing programs for juniors and seniors, he said.

The workshop will begin with orientation today at 8 p.m. in Marlatt Hall. Students will then go on a night tour of campus.

"On the night tour, they will meet typical student to tell them about campus," Casey Niemann, Open House co-chairman for K-State Student Alumni Board, said.

After the orientation, the students will attend a dance and spend the night in the residence halls. On Saturday, the student will attend a class called College 101.

"The class will tell the students the difference between college and high-school classes and what kind of things they can expect from college courses and life on campus," Klingler said.

"Regardless of where the students go to college, we want them to be informed," Niemann said.

Parents are also invited to attend "For Sophomores Only." While the students are attending the College 101 course, the parents will have an opportunity to speak with officials from the financial aid and admissions offices.

"We have sent out invitations to several thousand sophomores, and we've sent our posters advertising the event to high schools all over Kansas," Klingler said.

Art finds audience

AMY L. MATTOCKS

Collegian

What started out as a simple question has now consumed an entire year of Ed Larson's life.

Larson saw a sculpture on campus, liked it and wanted to find out more about it.

"I went to the art department. The art department head didn't know," he said. "He sent me to the Beach art museum, but Jessica Reichman, the curator, didn't know either."

That is when Reichman set Larson up with the Save Outdoor Sculptures program.

The SOS program's primary function is to catalog outdoor sculptures and their conditions. SOS is funded through the Smithsonian Institution and the National Institute for Conservation.

SOS has other ties to K-State. Reichman, curator of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, helped write the program's questionnaire and guidebook. The questionnaire and guidebook are sent to people interested in outside sculptures and their preservation.

"In addition to cataloging the works, SOS advises communities on how to conserve sculptures," Reichman said.

By researching through files in the University Archives, Larson discovered most of the sculptures on campus were made by students enrolled in a workshop called Art in Situation, which was offered in 1969, 1970 and 1971. These were four-credit-hour workshops offered for eight weeks during the summer.

There are 13 sculptures on campus. Of those 13, six were made by students, two by faculty and the remaining five by commissioned sculptures.

Rex Replogle, associate professor and sculpture department head, said the first half of the workshop was spent designing projects, and the second half was spent creating them.

"For three consecutive years, they had a workshop. The idea was for students and even the faculty involved to make art for campus," Replogle said. "Those first years, they had a lot of students involved."

The year Replogle was involved, he oversaw the construction of the fountain in front of the library and the sculpture by Justin Hall.

Not all of the ideas submitted were granted construction. Some of the designs turned down were a giant inflatable hot dog to be put on the football field and a maze between McCain Auditorium and the parking lot.

Some of the projects completed no longer exist. A 74-by-35-foot mural painted on the side of Waters Hall was painted over. Many students did not like it.

At the time it was painted, Charles Thies, graduate student in painting, said, "You know, art is not isolated. It involves all human activity. Most persons like to feel secure. Let's say they walk by a building every day. Then, one day, they notice something is different. There is usually a strong reaction, favorable or unfavorable. In time, they get used to it. But, take it away, and they begin to miss it."

Many of the projects did not require a lot of money to complete. The frieze above the entrance of Lafene Health Center is one of these projects. It was made by Allan Jones during one of the summer workshops.

"It's made of uncut slabs of brick," Larson said. "He took rows of this brick, made the design and then took it back to the brick company's kiln to fire it. If you stand under it and look up, you can still see the holes."

Larson's favorite sculpture is titled Spiral Jade. It stands on a concrete slab between Kedzie and Fairchild halls.

"It was an experiment in using industrial material," he said. "It's a railroad axle shaped with an industrial clip hammer. Lee Luppert, who was a Jesuit priest, used this heavy equipment to make it. He welded it to a train wheel."

Larson was granted $1,200 from the fine-arts fee to help finance the brochure. Larson is also being backed by the Union Program Council, Beach Museum and the K-State art department. He has been granted $1,800 total for the brochure.

Larson said the brochure would be an asset for the University. He said K-State was the only university where students made most of the art on campus grounds.

Larson, along with Ricky Weddell, senior in fine arts, and Kim Logan, graduate student in fine arts, finished the brochure this semester.

Larson did the research, Weddell the photography and Logan the brochure's design.

"We hope to have it out before the end of the year," Larson said. "It looks like it will be out, tentatively, during the summer right after classes end."

"The brochure will be found in the Union, Anderson Hall and the new Beach Museum."

"I'm also planning on leading walking tours."

The information Larson has collected is now recorded in the Smithsonian. The brochure will be added to the collection.

Students smash atoms with reactor

JODI WOLTERS

Collegian

The nuclear reactor in Ward Hall is more than just a nuclear reactor — it is a multi-purpose training facility.

The Training Research Isotopes General Atomic, or TRIGA, reactor has been on campus since Oct. 16, 1961.

The main purpose of the reactor is to teach nuclear-engineering students, said Hermann Donnert, professor of nuclear engineering and director of the nuclear activity analysis lab.

"It is for training," Donnert said. "All our students have to learn how to operate the reactor and the paperwork that goes with it before they can graduate. It is taught in a two-semester course, and they have to pass it."

Alexander Grover, senior in nuclear engineering, said the hands-on training helps students apply what they learn in the classroom.

"It gives us a physical understanding of what we learn in the classroom," he said.

TRIGA is also used as a nuclear reactor.

"It is used as a source of neutrons," Donnert said. "Most of research is done as neutron activation analysis."

"We put an unknown material in the reactor core. When we turn the reactor on, some of the material becomes radioactive. When we measure the radiation being emitted by the reactor, we can perform an undestructive chemical analysis."

The analysis of material has been used for practical applications.

"We were asked by the Kansas Bureau of Investigations to compare power from the work bench of a suspect against the metal in a sawed-off shotgun that had been used in a crime to trace which hawksaw the suspect had used to cut off the shotgun and commit the crime," Donnert said. "The test turned out negative."

The reactor also has been used in agriculture.

"One time, a bunch of cattle dropped dead in a feedlot in western Kansas," Donnert said. "We took samples of the livers of the cattle that died, and we found out they died of antimony, which is similar to arsenic poisoning. Antimony came from a pesticide residue on the cattle's feed."

TRIGA has produced radioactive tracers for research projects in other K-State departments and for other universities.

"We do do work for several different agencies," Richard Faw, professor of nuclear engineering, said. "However, most of the off-campus work we do is for other universities."

K-State is not the only school with a nuclear reactor.

"There are quite a few in the country and quite a few in other universities," Donnert said. "There is one in the University of Illinois and the University of Wisconsin."

When problems arise, the workers at TRIGA can work on it.

"We take care of virtually all the maintenance ourselves," Faw said. "We may have to buy parts, but we take care of the insulation."

The reactor has a reputation for being trouble free.

"It has given us trouble-free service for 30 years," Faw said.

The reactor will be open for tours any time during the all-University Open House.

DEAR CASSIE

by Cassandra

Minnesota men blessed with thick hair

Dear Cassandra,
If "Bad hair day" is worried that she will meet only bald men, maybe she should move to Minnesota. That's where I am from, and men there seem to have much more hair than men in this part of the country. I don't know why that should be true, though. When I lived in Minnesota, I had only one male friend with thinning hair. Since I have moved to Kansas, I have met many bald men. One other thing I have noticed is that men around here seem to be pretty short compared to the men in Minnesota. Do you have any idea why that would be true?

Signed,
Never knew a bald man

Dear Never knew,
You don't know why Kansas men are often shorter and baldier than Minnesota men? There are two reasons. The first is pollution. In 1991, Kansas released 67.4 tons of toxic waste, compared to 31.9 released by Minnesota. The waste just melts men's hair off. They are total victims.

Also, the income profile of an average Kansan is $9,460, compared to $9,766 of a Minnesota resident. With that extra $306, most men in Minnesota buy elevator shoes to make them appear taller. So, you see, it is all an illusion.

You are very perceptive to notice, though. Many Kansas men have been losing out to Minnesota men for many years.

Students can benefit from Russian arts

LORI DAVIS
Collegian

This summer, students from K-State and other Midwestern universities will travel to Yaroslavl, Russia, to study theater, dance and Russian culture.

The Theatrical Institute of Yaroslavl is one of the five best schools in Russia, Achmed Valk, director of dance, said. Students will have the chance to study Russian folk dance, ballet, stage movements and combat, Russian plays, and voice and breath training, which is the institute's specialty, he said. Every day, Russian language classes will be taught as well.

This is the first year of the exchange program. The idea for the program came from a chance Valk received to participate in the first International Festival of Movement and Dance on the Volga river. During his visit, the director of the Theatrical Institute of Yaroslavl approached him about a summer student exchange.

"The students will gain an insight in how a comparable institute is functioning in terms of curriculum and functioning," Valk said.

The trip to Russia will offer more than just classes, he said. Near Yaroslavl and the Volga river, many monasteries contain well-preserved pieces of art and history that students will be able to see. A weekend will also be spent in Moscow.

In addition, he said, students would gain tremendous insight into Russian culture as well as their own culture. Russia, he said, does not have the same conveniences as the United States.

"They will gain a new appreciation or a first-time appreciation for what we have here," Valk said.

One integral part of the Russian culture, the arts, has enjoyed a strong and rich tradition in the country's history, Valk said.

Valk said the arts are considered essential by Russians, like food and shelter.

"It's really one of the basic ingredients that keeps the society together."

Valk said that, unlike in Russia, the arts are some of the first things that Americans trim from a budget when money is scarce.

Doug Hurley, freshman in engineering, is one student hoping to make the trip this summer. Hurley is familiar with Russian culture. In 1990, he visited Russia through another exchange program.

In addition to studying acting, Hurley said another reason he would like to go on this trip is to return to Russia and see what it is like after all the political changes.

Hurley said he remembered the friendliness of the Russian people from his previous visit. Although some of the aspects of culture differ from American culture, he said there were similarities.

The youth in Russia, he said, liked the American music and culture, while the older citizens clung to older ways.

"It's not that entirely different," Hurley said.

Although K-State is the primary university organizing the trip, the theatrical institute is open to students in most of the colleges in the Midwest.

STUDY IN RUSSIA

- Trip costs around $2,500 to $2,900.
- Deadline for first installment is April 15.

Legislature passes revised feedlot bill

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

After being revised several times, a bill changing feedlot water pollution control regulations passed the Kansas Legislature last week.

"We are generally satisfied," Rich McKee, executive secretary of the feedlot division of the Kansas Livestock Association, said. The bill that passed the full legislature is better than the original bill that passed the Senate, but it is not quite as good as the version that passed the House. Bill Craven, legislative coordinator for the Kansas chapter of the Sierra Club and for the Kansas Natural Resources Council, said.

"There is an old saying that says you never want to see sausage being made," Craven said. "Legislation is a lot like sausage."

The original version of the bill, introduced in the Senate, would have required permits only for operations with 1,000 or more cattle or if the cattle posed a significant water pollution potential.

This proposal was not complete deregulation of small feedlots as some people said, Brad Harrelson, director of feedlot services with the Kansas Livestock Association, said.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment would still have been allowed to regulate feedlots of any size that have significant potential to pollute, Harrelson said.

"Somehow this got lost in the emotion of the issue," McKee said. "Just because you don't have a permit doesn't allow you to break the law."

However, once the original bill reached the House, the Kansas chapter of the Sierra Club, the Kansas Natural Resources Council and citizens hurt by pollution from feedlots voiced their strong opposition, Craven said.

"We need regulations over feedlots," Craven said. "Our water quality is so bad and so much of it is directly from feedlots that we need protection for our water."

OLD LAW

Feedlot operators have to permit if:
 > They have 300 cattle.
 > They have a waste containment device, regardless of number of animals.
 > They pose a water pollution threat.

NEW LAW

Requires operators to register with the KDHE if they have 300 cattle.
 > KDHE has 60 days to determine if the facility poses a pollution threat.
 > If there is no threat, no permit is required. If a threat exists, a permit must be obtained.
 > Facilities containing 1,000 or more cattle must automatically get a permit.

Diversity may encourage defensiveness in society

"Defensiveness is encouraged by the politically correct attitude. Human interaction relies on the promise of 'I will,' rather than the threat that comes with 'you must'."

MARTIN VAN SWAAY
Associate professor of computer and information services

CARON CITRO
Collegian

Diversity on our campus will easily become divisiveness if people are told they must value diversity, a K-State faculty member said Thursday.

Maarten van Swaay, associate professor of computer and information sciences, told a group of 31 listeners in Union 213 that human interaction relies on trust and respect.

His speech, titled "Political Correctness: Consequences and Alternatives," was sponsored by the Group for Ethical Awareness and Responsibility.

"Defensiveness is encouraged by the politically correct attitude," van Swaay said. "Human interaction relies on the promise of 'I will,' rather than the threat that comes with 'you must'."

"We cannot be nice to each other if we do not have the freedom to be nasty," he said.

In a politically correct environment, the threat to interaction lies in the safe harbor of silence.

"No matter what you say, you will always be at risk," he said. "Only silence will then be safe."

Several problems were mentioned by van Swaay with politically correct speech, including discrimination, bigoted words and harassment.

He said discrimination is what makes our society thrive.

"We elect one president, a small group of representatives," van Swaay said. "We compliment someone who has discriminating taste."

Even so, harassment is in the eye of the beholder. If the victim claims harassment, then it is, he said.

"It no longer matters what members of one sex say to those of the other sex," he said. "Whatever is said can almost arbitrarily be declared as harassment."

More safety lies in isolated groups of individuals with similar opinions.

"Homogeneous groups leave individuals with no skill to handle differences," he said. "There is no challenge to group opinion."

Diversity should be used to become brighter, to merge and to learn from others, van Swaay said.

Laurie Bagby, assistant professor of political science, said it is positive that van Swaay was willing to talk about a subject that makes people uncomfortable.

"People do seem to be curious about this subject and want to talk more about it," she said.

Kyle Hutson, senior in computer engineering, said he agrees the subject is a difficult one.

"Every time you say something against the PC movement, people think you're bad," he said.

Fulbright scholars travel abroad

RENEE MARTIN
Collegian

Four K-State students are one step closer to winning Fulbright scholarships, which fund one year of studying at a foreign university.

A national screening committee has recommended that Robert Anderson, senior in biology, Scott Davidson, senior in philosophy, Jeff Henry, graduate student in English, and Lynn Seyler, senior in political science, receive Fulbright scholarships.

The scholarships are worth an estimated $15,000, with the amount varying according to each country's currency. About 600 scholarships are awarded to U.S. students each year.

Walter Kolonosky, Fulbright program adviser and associate professor of modern languages, said K-State is among the top schools in the nation that have more than one student recommended for the scholarship.

"This places us in the top 50 institutions in the United States," Kolonosky said.

"There are only about 200 schools who have students selected for the award, and 100 of these probably only have one candidate."

"We have four, so I would say this puts us in the top 50," he said.

The candidates were first interviewed by a campus committee before their applications were sent to the national level.

The applications required the students to write a proposal indicating the area they would like to study and the foreign university they want to attend.

Henry said he would like to study in Sri Lanka, Anderson in Columbia, Seyler in Argentina and Davidson in France.

Committees in each of these countries are reviewing the students' applications before making final selections.

Kolonosky said, however, he is confident the recommended candidates will receive the scholarships.

"I feel they are 95 percent in, in my opinion," he said. "The countries often take the advice of the national screening committee. I have found it is more rare for them not to."

Anderson said he does not share Kolonosky's confidence.

"I am just keeping my fingers crossed," he said.

"I'm not sure I believe him yet. Nobody wants to get their hopes up."

If he wins the scholarship, he said, he will take zoology classes from the University of Andes in Bogota, Columbia.

Movie used to educate students about AIDS

JODI WOLTERS
Collegian

Students interested in knowing more about AIDS can go to the K-State Union Friday and Saturday to watch the movie "Philadelphia."

The Union Program Council will sponsor the movie in Forum Hall at 7 and 9:30 p.m. on April 8 and 9.

One of UPC's goals is to provide educational programs for students. Ann Claussen, assistant director and program director, said this movie will provide AIDS education for K-State.

"One of the goals of UPC is to educate students, and if we can involve students in this entertaining film, that presents such a critical issue that impacts all of us," she said.

"That is the best way UPC can impact students."

Peer educators from Lafene Health Center will have a table set up inside Forum Hall with literature on AIDS.

Free condoms will also be available to students.

Kelley Fink, health educator for Lafene, said UPC contacted her and asked the peer educators if they wanted to get involved.

"After hearing the UPC was bringing in 'Philadelphia,' they contacted us and asked us if we could come in and provide information at tables."

Fink said people may have questions after watching the movie, and that is what the peer educators are there for.

"Our goal for providing education at the table is to provide an opportunity — not only the movie but also the information we have — to be a springboard for the students and anyone else to find out more about HIV and AIDS."

This is not the first time AIDS information has been provided with the movie.

The UPC decided to try educating students this way after hearing it worked successfully at a movie theater in Wichita.

"Some of the students were aware of other theaters that had done this," Claussen said.

The UPC council said its goal for this weekend is not only to sell out the movie, but also to educate people.

We accept news tips.

MONDAY

Steve Holloway, K-State alumnus, watches in a mirror as the back bar of Kite's is auctioned off Saturday afternoon.

Kite's name auctioned to bar owner

"Kite's has been around for years, and we don't want an outsider coming in and taking it."

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon

JOHN MEIROWSKY
Collegian

The owner of one of Manhattan's largest bars now owns the name of Kite's Bar & Grille.

Rusty Wilson, owner of Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, purchased the rights to Kite's name and trademark Saturday for $5,000 at the Kite's auction.

Kite's was forced to close in December for excessive minor-in-possession violations. A.J. Ahlstedt, the former owner of Kite's, decided not to re-open. Ahlstedt filed for bankruptcy and turned the property over to the state.

Wilson said he was not sure what he was going to do with the name yet.

"We want to keep it in Manhattan and Aggieville. But I don't know what we are going to do yet."

Wilson, who managed Kite's for five years, said $5,000 was a fair price for the name.

"Kite's has been around for years, and we don't want an outsider coming in and taking it," Wilson said.

Wilson said tradition is what attracts people to Kite's. He said he hopes to restore it.

Wilson said he had spoken with the owner of Kite's building but had no idea when Kite's would re-open.

Dan Kull, Kite's auctioneer, said he spoke to several auctioneers, and none had heard of an auction of a name and trademark.

Kull said before the bidding began, he had no idea what the name was worth.

He opened the bidding at $10,000.

Members of the crowd laughed.

The first bid was $2,000. Bids continued to flow until about $3,500.

"Think how much money this name had made," Kull interjected.

Bids continued until Wilson offered $5,000.

Along with auctioning the name of Kite's, people were also able to bid on kitchen supplies, bar equipment, and Kite's and K-State memorabilia that hung from walls.

Fred Thibodeau, president of the KSU Alumni Association, purchased 70 photographs of former K-State athletes for about $2,000.

Thibodeau said he could

State prepares for death penalty

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Secretary Gary Stotts and his Department of Corrections staff should have more work soon.

Training programs will have to be created. Operations manuals will have to be written, and rooms renovated. A vendor must be selected and equipment purchased.

A new death-penalty law should take effect July 1, and Stotts and the Department of Corrections will have preparations to make for the first execution, perhaps six, eight or 10 years from now.

Stotts maintains a career state employee's calm about the whole thing.

He acknowledges capital punishment is a difficult issue, but it's not his job to worry about whether it should be enacted. Asked about his feelings, he avoids stating a position.

"We've just simply got to carry out what the public policy is," Stotts said last week, minutes after a death-penalty bill went to Gov. Joan Finney.

The bill would make lethal injection the possible penalty for seven capital crimes, all of them premeditated murders.

Finney has promised to let the measure become law without her signature.

Legislators are waiting for an estimate on the initial costs of preparing for an execution from the Division of Budget.

They will consider the last appropriations bill for the 1995 fiscal year, which begins July 1, when they return for a wrapup session April 27.

The state has not had a death row since 1972, when the U.S. Supreme Court declared all states' death-penalty laws unconstitutional.

Regents bill passes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Board of Regents' appropriations bill finally made it to the governor, after the House approved a conference compromise, 76-47, and the Senate passed it, 31-9, Friday night.

It appropriates $445 million in general fund money and $1.1 billion in all funds for the state's universities, a 3.2 percent increase.

It includes $5.4 million that the regents can spend however they choose, including for salary enhancement above a 2.5 percent increase built into the schools' budgets.

It does not include a mandated tuition increase for students, or money specifically identified for the Partnership for Excellence program.

Passed earlier Friday was the $1.5 billion Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services' budget.

Those were the last two big agency bills to gain passage.

Also approved on the last night was a welfare reform bill that contains a combination of new penalties and new incentives designed that will encourage welfare to keep poor families together.

NATO stages 1st air attack

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Two U.S. F-16 fighter jets bombed Serb targets near the besieged Muslim enclave of Gorazde on Sunday after Bosnian Serb forces overran government defenses to reach the outskirts of the town.

It was the first NATO attack on ground positions in its 44-year history. In February, NATO jets downed four Serb planes violating a "no-fly zone" over Bosnia.

Bosnia has been convulsed by civil war since seceding

Aviano, Italy, and said the attack was requested by U.N. peacekeepers in Gorazde.

"We said we would act if we were requested to do so," President Clinton told reporters in Washington. "We have now done so and will do so again if we are requested."

Clinton called on the Bosnian Serbs to return to the negotiating table.

"I very much hope that now the attacks will cease, that the Serbs will go back, that the talks will resume," he said.

Maj. Dacre Holloway, a U.N. military representative in extent of the damage was being assessed.

Italian RAI state television said at least two tanks were hit.

Bosnian Serbs accused NATO of hitting civilian targets.

"NATO aircraft fired four missiles at civilian targets," Gen. Milan Gvero, deputy commander of the Bosnian Serb army, was quoted as saying by the Bosnian Serb news agency SRNA. He said there were civilian casualties, but did not elaborate.

► SOLDIER CHARGED IN DEATH OF FELLOW SOLDIER

JUNCTION CITY — A Fort Riley soldier has been charged with murder in the death of another soldier, officials said.

Charges were filed against Pvt. Robert B. Grady, 19, of Service Battery, 4th Battalion 5th Field Artillery, in connection with the March 11 death of Pfc. Michael Regehr, Maj. Ben Santos, the post's public-affairs officer, said.

Another soldier remains under investigation in the case, Santos said. He said both soldiers were in custody at Fort Riley on Saturday.

Thousands of people including students, prospective students, alumni and their families discovered K-State during this year's All-University Open House Friday and Saturday.

Clubs and organizations from every aspect of campus life were represented by tables in the Union.

Some of those included the Rainforest Action Group, Student Dietetics Association, sororities and fraternities, the Parachute Club and financial aid and admissions.

Rick Davis, student building manager, said he estimated 2,000 to 3,000 people were in the Union on Saturday. He said the first floor was especially packed.

"From 10 to 2 o'clock this floor was jam packed," he said. Tom Muenzenberger, associate professor of mathematics, was at a booth on the ground level of the Union.

His booth featured a video and descriptions of other demonstrations taking place in Cardwell Hall.

"I saw at least 100 people while I've been working here," he said. "The most popular thing at the booth is a video, Donald in Mathmagicland. It is always the most popular thing we have."

The mathematics booth also featured maze puzzles and brain teasers.

The Union wasn't the only building on campus with Open House activities.

Durland Hall was home of the robot competitions. Students in computer engineering and computer science competed, built and programmed robots for Open House.

The College of Agriculture had demonstrations in Call, Seaton, Shellenberger, Throckmorton, Waters and Weber halls.

Activities included a 50th birthday party for Smokey Bear.

Senate candidates dismissed, reinstated

Three candidates were reinstated Friday after being kicked out of the student election.

The Student Governing Association Grievance Committee dismissed three candidates from the election Thursday night in a closed meeting.

The candidates were reinstated Friday, because the committee violated the candidates' rights to due process by not notifying them of the violation and the hearing.

A grievance was filed against David Frese, Mark Tomb and Matt Niemann, Student Senate candidates, for campaigning as a party without registering with the Election Committee.

Dan Lewerenz, a fourth member of the party running for Student Senate, was not dismissed, because he did not take part in a party press conference Wednesday.

Frese said the party did not register, because it was registered last year.

"I thought we were covered," Frese said.

Frese addressed the committee Friday and asked it to reverse its decision against the other two members.

"They were going on my advice," Frese said. "It is unfair to can these guys too."

"If you can't trust the vice president, who can you trust?"

Frese said he asked Shanta Bailey, chair of the Election Committee if the party needed to file again.

He said he never received an answer from her so he assumed the party was OK.

Money discussed

The candidates for student body president agree on at least one item wholeheartedly.

The reduction or maintenance of the current level of student fees and tuition was a common theme among the candidates at the debate Friday afternoon.

A few creative ideas were tossed around, as to how to lessen the burden on student pocketbooks.

Ben Eastep, junior in horticulture, said he would lower fees by $200 per student.

To do this, Eastep said he would put a drag strip by President Wefald's house.

It would bring in a tremendous amount of money, he said.

Fees have gotten out of control, Stacy Dalton, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, said.

► HOUSE, SENATE PASS BOARD OF REGENTS INCREASE

TOPEKA, Kan. — The Board of Regents will receive a 3.2 percent increase in funding and more control over what to do with it under a bill sent to Gov. Joan Finney.

The bill contains money for a 2.5 percent salary increase for faculty members, and a pool of $5.4 million more for operating expenses.

That money could be used to increase faculty salaries beyond the 2.5 percent increase. The money also could be used for student assistance programs or anything else the board wants to use it for.

The Senate passed the measure on a 31-9 vote on Friday evening, while the House passed it in a 76-47 vote earlier in the evening. The bill would appropriate about $445 million in general fund money for the regents and its universities.

Some critics contend the additional money falls far short of the increase in state aid that local public schools received. Others said too much money was appropriated for the regents.

The Legislature on Friday also approved a bill appropriating money for the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services. That budget comes to $1.5 billion in all funds, including federal money.

► BOEING UNVEILS NEW AIRCRAFT USING MUSIC, LIGHTS

EVERETT, Wash. — With a touch of Disney and a bit of Sinatra, Boeing on Saturday unveiled its newest jetliner, the 777.

An estimated 100,000 people, most of them company workers and their families, filed through a gigantic assembly plant to view a colorful multimedia show and get a look at the new twin-engine, wide-body airplane.

In a show designed by Dick Clark Productions, Boeing stressed its theme of working together with employees, customers and suppliers.

Unlike previous Boeing rollouts, this event was short on VIP speeches, putting the emphasis squarely on those who build the planes.

The 777, which will carry 305 to 375 passengers from 4,500 to 8,400 miles, depending on model, is only slightly smaller than Boeing's flagship 747-400 jumbo jet.

It's the first Boeing plane designed entirely on computer — there was no full-scale mockup — and Boeing went to unprecedented lengths to involve airline customers in its design.

"The 777 has changed the way we do airplane design, and that is going to have a profound effect on The Boeing Co.," company President Phil Condit said.

► SHUTTLE FIXED; MAP IS POSSIBLE

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla.

— Engineers working frantically on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean fixed a broken radar on space shuttle Endeavour on Sunday.

The fix will allow the shuttle to create an unprecedented three-dimensional map of Earth's mountains, volcanoes, forests, deserts, oceans and rivers.

One day into the flight, the two radar systems on Endeavour had mapped 1.5 million square miles. That's equivalent to one-quarter of the United States.

Scientists hope to map 18 million square miles by the end of the 10-day flight.

Among the sites surveyed Sunday: the Strait of Gibraltar, Mauna Loa volcano in Hawaii, the Austrian Alps, forests around Prince Albert, Canada, and dust storms in Africa.

"The quality of the data is excellent," said Charles Elachi, a geologist at Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., and science team leader for one of the radars.

Commerce Bank

"At Commerce Bank, we know it's tough to do your best in school if you're hassled by money problems. So we offer Money 101 — a package of banking services especially for college students. Use any or all of them.

Money 101 is a Student Loan Program with a difference. All student loans are the same — same rates, same terms. Only the banks are different. And Commerce Bank can save you interest. While other banks capitalize interest as many as 16 times while you're in school, Commerce doesn't until you graduate — meaning real interest savings.

Money 101 includes a Student VISA or MasterCard to help you get the things you need — and cash advances, too.

The low-cost Money 101 Checking Account helps you keep track of expenses with a complete monthly statement.

And for maximum convenience, sign up for Money 101's Connection 24 Card. It gives you access to your checking and savings accounts 24 hours a day at any Connection 24 ATM (Automated Teller Machine) in Kansas — and other CIRRUS and BankMate ATMs nationwide.

So call me or stop by today and sign up for Money 101 — find out how top performance banking can help your performance at school."

In-state-tuition law needs updating, better definition

"It's a very old and conservative law, and we are the first to offer suggestions to our legislators to update it."

RICHARD ELKINS Director of Admissions

AARON GRAHAM
Collegian

You only think you are a Kansas resident.

For fee-paying purposes, state law says you may not be a resident even though you pay Kansas taxes, own a car registered in Kansas, are a registered Kansas voter and possess a Kansas driver's license.

If you take a trip longer than six months, you can kiss your in-state tuition goodbye.

Kim Claflin, sophomore in elementary education, graduated from Manhattan High School, paid in-state-tuition her freshman year and has to pay out-of-state tuition since getting married and temporarily living at Fort Knox, Ky.

"In 1990, I married a person who was in the military," Claflin said. "I was at KSU and dropped out when I got married and lived in Manhattan for two years."

"I paid Kansas taxes during that time."

Claflin said her husband was transferred from Fort Riley to Fort Knox, but she still considered herself a Kansan in a temporary living situation in Kentucky after the move.

"I maintained my Kansas driver's license and arranged for an absentee ballot to vote in Kansas while I was in Kentucky," she said.

While at Fort Knox, Claflin enrolled in classes at the University of Louisville in Louisville, Ky., just a few miles from Fort Knox, she said.

When Claflin filed for divorce in 1993, she said she informed K-State she wanted to enroll again for the spring 1994 semester.

"I got a letter from admissions saying I was considered an out-of-state resident even though I paid taxes in Kansas, had a Kansas driver's license and had my truck registered in Kansas," Claflin said.

The University of Louisville offered Claflin in-state tuition even though she was not a resident of Kentucky. She said the Office of Admissions at K-State told her she could receive a similar deal.

WHO TO CALL

To contact Sen. Lana Green, call 296-7360.

"They told me that as long as I had a military ID, I can get in-state tuition," Claflin said. "They never told me it had to be a Fort Riley ID. I was really ticked off because the communication at admissions was so bad."

Claflin didn't find out until a few days before fee payment in January that she would not be paying in-state tuition, she said.

She appealed the decision to the K-State residence committee, which consists of five faculty members and one student, but the committee decided the admissions office was correct to rule her as an out-of-state resident, Claflin said.

The committee ruled that Kansas law requires Claflin to pay out-of-state tuition for 12 months because one must live in Kansas for a full calendar year without a six-month break prior to entry at K-State.

Richard Elkins, director of admissions, said the University does not make the rules but only follows laws established by the Kansas legislature.

"It's state statute, not the University's policy," Elkins said. "It's a very old and conservative law, and we are the first to offer suggestions to our legislators to update it."

"But if we liberalize the law, that means a loss of dollars, and it goes down in defeat."

Elkins said the difference between in-state and out-of-state tuition is about $2,400 per semester.

Kansas has 67 different rules for 67 different situations when considering residency. Residency for tuition purposes is one of those 67 laws, Elkins said.

"Under this law, the individual must be emancipated to gain residency in Kansas," he said. "One must be living in the state for at least one calendar year with the intent to stay."

Cobain's suicide astonishes fans

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — The apparent suicide of Kurt Cobain has left fans and critics comparing the grunge-rock guitarist to other groundbreaking musicians who died too young.

Cobain died just three years after his emergence as a pop music phenomenon.

Radio stations around the country broadcast tributes to Cobain, MTV interrupted its usual programming for a career retrospective, and fans mourned the star's tragic death after his body was discovered Friday at his Seattle home.

"It reminds me of Jimi Hendrix. This is a guy who hasn't even hit his prime," fan Steve Kennedy of Pompton Lakes, N.J., said.

"It's like Jim Morrison — you'll never know what else he could do."

Cobain, the lead singer of the popular grunge rock band Nirvana, shot himself.

OPINION

APRIL 11, 1994

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

K-State headed toward election disaster

After last year's two run-off elections, you'd think special attention would be placed on the organization and execution of this election.

The fate of more than 130 candidates and the future of the Student Governing Association is in the hands of people who can't calculate two-thirds of five.

The members had to ask for help from a candidate they tried to kick out of the election to determine the number of members that constituted a two-thirds majority at a meeting Friday.

After last year's two run-off elections, which were conducted at an added expense to students, you'd think special attention would be placed on the organization and execution of this election.

This has not been the case. The committees have violated open meetings laws, denied students due process and delayed expenditure report reviews all before a single ballot has been cast.

The responsibility for reviewing election grievances was given to a separate committee earlier this year with the idea this would give the Election Committee more time to deal with other matters.

However, four members of the Election Committee are also on the six-member Grievance Committee.

The Grievance Committee met in a closed-door meeting Thursday night to review a grievance against members of the Wild Turkey Workers' Party.

It did not contact the Collegian or any of the candidates involved. By doing so, it broke the Kansas Open Meetings Act.

The committee dismissed the Turkeys from the election at the meeting but had to reinstate them because it violated the candidates' rights to due process.

It also reviewed expenditure report violations of candidates who were not present.

The committee had expenditure reports from student body presidential and vice presidential candidates on April 1, but did not review them until April 7.

Final expenditure reports were due from the candidates on Friday. The Election Committee was still reviewing them Sunday night.

If the actions of these committees continue, K-State might set a new record. Maybe there'll be a sign on I-70: "K-State: The only school ever to repeat the same election 15 times."

Humming the National Anthem won't make country's problems disappear

I've been called unpatriotic before.

When I went to Topeka with some friends to protest the Desert Storm mess, some veterans called me unpatriotic. Once, someone wrote to the Collegian about one of my columns and actually used the phrase, "America: Love it or leave it."

I'm a little sick of being called unpatriotic.

William McKeen must think I'm unpatriotic. In Friday's Collegian, William said "The persistent problem ..." (not "A problem," but "The problem") "... is those fellow Americans who have decided to condemn America."

William said our nation is in a moral decline because people aren't patriots anymore. He said we've lost faith and pride in our Nation. "Obviously," said Will, "It started with the little things."

The little thing he is referring to is a general lack of respect for the symbols of our country.

William is angered when people don't remove their hats during the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner." He feels the Pledge of Allegiance should be reinstated into the morning activities of public schools, and he is opposed to the Supreme Court's decision that flag burning is freedom of speech.

Because of all of this, William calls himself old-fashioned. He claims to come from the "old school" that has respect for America. He claims to be one of the true patriots who has the ability to think positive rather than obsess about the negative aspects of our nation.

In reality, William doesn't understand what it means to be a patriot. His has a narrow, brainwashed view of what it means to care about a country.

It starts with his preoccupation with symbols. William thinks the lack of respect for the symbols of our country has led to the negative thinking that is "The problem" in America today.

Will thinks that somehow it is the flag and the Pledge of Allegiance that made our country great.

What made our country great was hard work, vast natural resources and a willingness to put those resources to work in making war on other countries.

What William advocates is a patriotism that has nothing to do with my patriotism. In revering symbols, William is able to ignore the issues that the symbols stand for, and their implications. He doesn't have to think about all the bad things he wants to de-emphasize in his column. He just has to sing the National Anthem.

William's optimism and positive thinking is the antithesis to true patriotism.

True patriots take the time to educate themselves about their country. True patriots look their country's past, and especially its present, straight in the face, with a realistic attitude.

True patriots try to solve their nation's problems rather than ignore them.

William's views of America may be old fashioned, but they are certainly in fashion now. His has a self-serving blindness that was carefully nurtured in the Reagan-Bush years, an ability to feel good about oneself and one's country as it goes all to hell.

He would rather ignore the country's problems because he doesn't yet have to shoulder the burden of these problems.

William should talk to people who work nine-to-10 hour days and are still below the poverty line. He should talk to senior citizens who, as President Clinton said, "have to choose between medicine and food." He should talk to the shrinking middle class and tell them about his patriotism.

William should talk to the ghosts of the 100,000 Iraqis killed in the Gulf War for no apparent reason and tell them about his patriotism.

I really like the United States. I enjoy living here, and I hope to live here for most of my life.

Like William, I don't feel guilty about the evil things my country did before I was born.

Unlike William, however, I feel it is important to know about these things, rather than just thinking positive because these things still go on.

And, if these things continue to go on, William and I will both be guilty.

But I won't be quite as guilty as William because I will at least do something to try to stop these things. If nothing else, I will keep talking about the bad things I see.

William doesn't want to talk about the bad things — he wants to recite the Pledge of Allegiance.

I care about my country in a real sense. William cares about a specific America. His America is a country I do not believe in or care for. It is not everyone's America, it is the America of the rich, white men.

Cobain's suicide a warning to Generation X

I miss the comfort in being sad
I'd rather be dead than cool
I hate myself and want to die
Look on the bright side is suicide

These were the words of Nirvana's singer, guitarist and songwriter Kurt Cobain who, after 27 years in this life, decided a few days ago that he'd had enough of it.

Kurt's suicide represents more to some of us than to others. While our parents scoff at another screaming junkie's demise, some of us saw in Kurt the scorn, the disdain, the cynicism and the disenfranchisement our parents have left as our generation's inheritance.

Many of us identified with his mistrust of baby boomers' ideals. We're disillusioned with our pasts and doubtful about our futures. When Nirvana's "Smells Like Teen Spirit" rended our polite veils of denial and we vented our anger in unison, it was the first time our generation found something to rally around. Rage has become our common language.

Poor Kurt was crowned with the thorny responsibility of being the voice of our generation. The irony was that he never wanted to be coronated as such. He only wanted to sing, play and write for whomever listened.

Unlike so many rock stars before him, he shunned the roles of icon, legend or leader. He was his audience. With little time his crown became an albatross around his neck.

It was Kurt's life to live and Kurt's life to take. While it is easy to castigate him as a coward, it is much more difficult to imagine what would drive a person with wealth, a loving family, fame and respect to give it all up.

Nirvana fans are in a real funk. The Seattle crisis hotline has seen an increase in the volume in calls, according to administrator Susan Eastgard, from parents concerned about their children, distraught adolescents and their friends, and even surviving friends of Kurt. She claims 30,000 people committed suicide in America last year with one victim every 17 minutes. There is little public outcry; there are no telethons; there are no marches on Washington, although our people are obviously in a crisis.

In our society, a person having trouble handling a situation is labeled "unstable." During the 1988 presidential race, Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis was rumored to have had a nervous breakdown after his mother's death. Voters then assumed he wasn't quite as sane as George Bush, who as president later ended up using the psychotropic drug Halcyon. Virginia candidate for US Senate Oliver North is now facing accusations of alleged psychological problems after his tenure in the Vietnam War.

The zeitgeist of our generation is one of anger, amorality and disillusionment. If we don't shed our Victorian ideas of mental health and become more at ease with who we are as individuals and as a generation, we will continue to self-destruct from AIDS, teenage pregnancy, violence, racism, angst and suicide. Right now, our generation is imploding.

During the past several years, we have been therapied, pop psychoanalyzed, politically corrected, and Oprahed until many of us no longer know our own selves and don't care to find out. The media represent our generation with gangbangers, juvenile delinquents and gangsta rap while the rest of us wonder why the baby boomers have all the jobs and government aid. We ask, "Where and what is our birthright?"

Until we control the media and government, we must be proud of the trends we follow and the diverse ideas we believe in instead of trying to measure up to the previous generation that believed it could change the history of humankind with sex and flowers. We can certainly do better, but not if we don't take care of what's eating us alive. If we don't, there won't be enough of us around to make a difference.

If you're having difficulty being happy with who you are right now, don't follow Kurt's example. There will be no worldwide media coverage of all the other people who kill themselves. Most suicide victims are ordinary, unglamorous, unknown people. Kurt envied such a death but was never granted it.

Don't forget bike fee still alive; don't let it pass without a fight

Dear Editor,

Don't be fooled by Collegian headlines. The bicycle permit fee has not been nixed.

The bicycle permit and regulation issue is still very much alive, and now is the time to make your voices heard.

The council on Traffic, Parking and Police Activities is having a public hearing about the proposal at 3 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union Big 8 Room. The council will make its decision on the proposed regulations after the public hearing, so it is important that you make your objections to the current proposal known. Be there.

If you don't want to be paying $5 for a bicycle parking permit and be subject to more anti-bicycling regulations on campus, now is the time to act.

What's wrong with the proposal? Five dollars for a permit and improved facilities sounds like a bargain. It's not. Here's just a sample of what's wrong.

There is no plan. How will the permit system improve bicycling on campus? I've heard everything from bike racks, to signs, to paint to safety brochures, but no details.

Exactly what am I getting? I've heard allusions to a five-year plan. What is it? Show me a plan for improving bicycle parking and riding conditions on campus, and I'll support it.

The penalties for violations are out of line. The proposed fines for bicycle parking and moving violations are $5 to $10 higher than the fines for similar violations for automobiles. Impoundment is a possibility for all violations of bicycling regulations, whereas only more serious offenses for automobiles are subject to impoundment. The penalties for bicycling violations need to be brought in line with those for other vehicles.

If you've read the proposed regulations, you know there's a lot more wrong. The last thing we need to do is exacerbate the car parking problem on this campus by discouraging bicycling. These proposed regulations will do just that.

On Thursday, let the council know that if it wants to get serious with bicyclists, then bicyclists want it to get serious about meeting our needs on campus. Speak out at the public hearing.

K-State lags way behind other schools in funding unions

Dear Editor,

April is one of the busiest times of the year for students. We are trying to wrap up classes, bring up grades and vote during elections.

However, the upcoming vote on K-State Union enhancement will have a significant effect on every student who enrolls in this University next year and the years to come.

No, not just because it will add a $25 fee for full-time students and a $12.50 fee for part-time students, but because it will add a responsibility.

This responsibility will be expressed as students endure the reconstruction of the Union and enjoy the new programs Union Program Council has to offer.

Reconstruction of the Union admittedly seems pointless if you just walk in and look around.

However, Union employees are to be commended for the significant measures they have taken to cover up the back-ups in the sewer system, heating and cooling problems and the fact that the electricity is maxed out.

Students will enjoy the new budget for UPC has soon as the vote is passed. Currently, the budget is a mere $30,000.

Interesting to note, at Indiana University, there are 16 programming committees. The amount generated from the students, and probably elsewhere, to fund this is $215,000.

Also, closer to home, Wichita State University's programming board receives $67,988 for its activities and programming. That is almost twice as much money as our programming council — for considerably fewer students.

Thomas Jefferson once said, "Let every man who fights or pays exercise his just and equal right in his election."

The debate about Union expansion affects every student on this campus because we all pay, one way or another.

The vote is April 12-13 from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the Union and from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. at the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Remember, you only have yourself to blame if the vote does not turn out the way you want it to.

Soldiers ignore pleas to aid Hebron victims

Authorities have released a letter in which the Hebron massacre gunman asks God for forgiveness.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — A Muslim guard at the Hebron mosque where a Jewish settler massacred 30 worshippers said Sunday that Israeli soldiers refused to help stop the shooting.

Also Sunday, Israeli authorities for the first time released the text of a letter found in the gunman's bag, in which he asked God to grant him a place in "the land of the righteous."

The typewritten letter was titled, "A version of a brief confession from the bridge of life," the national Itim news agency said.

In it, Baruch Goldstein thanked God, "in whose hands my recovery and death lie."

"May it be thy will to heal me, and if heaven forbid I shall die, my death shall be in repentance for all the sins I have committed against you."

"And may you grant me a role in the Garden of Eden and the land of the righteous."

The message closed with a handwritten passage from the "Hear O Israel" prayer that religious Jews say several times daily. It ends, "One Lord of the world ... I shall not fear."

Goldstein was beaten to death by surviving worshippers at the Tomb of the Patriarchs, a site revered by both Muslims and Jews as the burial place of Abraham.

Muslim guards ignore pleas for aid

Muhammed Abu Salah, one of three Muslim guards at the Tomb, told the commission investigating the massacre that Goldstein pushed past him into the hall where Palestinians were praying and opened fire.

Abu Salah raced to call soldiers for help, but they would not enter the hall, he said.

"They heard me but refused to agree to what I requested," he said. "I told them that there was a settler firing, and they also heard the shots and they started shooting outside."

Two different kinds of bullets

Two Hebron hospitals gave medical investigators two types of bullets recovered from victims of the Feb. 25 massacre, an apparent indication that more than one gunman was involved.

Dr. Dahoud Labadi said two kinds of bullets were turned over to investigators. He said the team also examined X-rays to determine where bullets hit victims.

The presence of two kinds of bullets supports earlier testimony and Palestinian contentions that Goldstein had an accomplice.

A police ballistics expert told the inquiry commission last week that one bullet found at the site did not match the Galil automatic rifle used by Goldstein, or the rifles of soldiers.

Goldstein's wife demands investigation

Goldstein's wife, Miriam, demanded that the commission investigate the source of the mystery bullet.

Mrs. Goldstein testified before the commission behind closed doors last week. Her testimony was released Sunday.

"Perhaps there were other people who opened fire, and not especially on the Jewish side," she said.

Muslims claim responsibility for rifle, grenade attack

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — The Islamic fundamentalist Al-Gamaa Al-Islamiya, or Islamic Group, claimed responsibility Sunday for a rifle and grenade attack that killed Egypt's top anti-terrorism official.

The group also threatened further assaults on intelligence and law enforcement officials in its statement, which was faxed to a Western news agency.

The killing Saturday night was the most daring operation carried out in Cairo in the two-year campaign by Muslim radicals to overthrow the secular government and turn Egypt into an Islamic state.

The government had claimed to have curbed the extremists, but the attack showed they could strike in the capital and kill the man assigned to destroy them.

The victim, Maj. Gen. Raouf Khayrat, 48, was deputy chief of state security intelligence in charge of religious terrorist activities.

Interior Minister Hassan al-Alfy, speaking Sunday at Khayrat's funeral, said:

"The terrorist operations only increase the police determination to confront terrorism."

The Islamic Group has been blamed for much of the violence.

Police believe five gunmen attacking from a motorcycle and a car carried out the assassination of Khayrat as he left his home near the Giza Pyramids, security officials said Sunday.

The extremists regularly kill police in southern Egypt, but the slaying of Khayrat was the first major attack in Cairo since a homemade bomb was thrown at a tourist bus last December.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Netters overpowered by conference foes

The Netters lost to Nebraska 9-0 on Saturday.

On Sunday, the Cats lost 7-2 to Iowa State.

The next match for K-State is against KU on Wednesday in Lawrence.

CRAIG PINKERTON
Collegian

Not only did K-State's women's tennis team have to do battle with a pair of conference foes, they also had to fight the weather.

Saturday, the netters lost to Nebraska 9-0 while playing indoors at Ahearn Field House. On Sunday against Iowa State, the netters faced temperatures in the 50s and strong winds from the north in their 7-2 loss at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area.

Against the Huskers, K-State started out strong in the doubles competition, but things went downhill from there. Martine Shrubsole and Nikki Lagerstrom won the first set 6-2 in No. 1 doubles but dropped the final two sets, 6-4, 7-5, to Nebraska's Alison McNellis and April Yarnus.

"They just overpowered us today," Coach Steve Bietau said. "I'd like to say that if we had our girls playing their normal positions, we could have won, but Nebraska was just too strong for us."

Brooke Brundige was responsible for both of the netter's points against Iowa State. The junior defeated Ginney Linney, 7-6 (4), 6-4, in No. 4 singles, and she then teamed up with Summer Ruckman to beat Angie Miller and Linney, 6-2, 4-6, 7-6 (3), in No. 2 doubles.

For Brundige, the weather played an important factor in the way she had to play the match.

"The conditions definitely had a big bearing on the match today. Basically, it was a mental game because you couldn't count on your best shots to go in like they would on a normal day," Brundige said.

Bietau was pleased with the way Brundige was able to adjust to the weather in her match.

"The thing you have to do is play with a higher margin of safety and make as few mistakes as possible. She (Brundige) did a good job of that today," Bietau said.

Lagerstrom was the only netter other than Brundige to win a set against Iowa State. Lagerstrom won her first set, 6-2, against Miller in No. 3 singles before dropping the final two sets, 6-4, 6-2.

For the seventh-straight match, the Cats had to forfeit matches due to injuries and illness. Once again, they defaulted on No. 5 and No. 6 singles along with No. 3.

The losses during the weekend dropped the netters' record to 4-14 overall and 1-3 in the conference.

Things don't look much better for the Cats either, as they will travel to face the top three teams in the conference within the next week. Two of the top three teams are nationally ranked by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association and Rolex. The netters will meet No. 5 Kansas on Wednesday, unranked Oklahoma State on Sunday and No. 31 Oklahoma next Monday.

Once the tennis version of the Bataan Death March is over, the netters will face these teams again on April 22 in the Big Eight Championships in Oklahoma City.

Summer Ruckman nails the overhead smash during a match against Iowa State. Ruckman's teaming with Brundige in doubles brought one of the two Wildcat wins during the weekend.

Lacrosse team has 1st loss of season, dropping 7-5 to Kansas City

JEREMY CRABTREE

Rain played havoc on many outdoor events during the weekend, but K-State lacrosse coach Curt Thurman was thankful for the rain.

It gave his team a chance to regroup after a 7-5 loss to Kansas City on Saturday.

"After the loss, a day off will give us a chance to regroup," Thurman said after Saturday's game with Kansas in Lawrence was canceled because of rain.

In the loss to Kansas City on Saturday, the Wildcats had trouble clearing the ball.

"We would start to throw the ball to clear it, and they would intercept it," Thurman said. "Then when we would get shots — they wouldn't go in. One time we had 10 or 12 straight shots, and none of them went in. Their goalie played well, and we had some bad passes."

The loss marked the first defeat of the season for the Cats.

"Last year, we didn't lose for the first time until the tournament," Thurman said. "It was good to lose now. We've got it behind us now, and now we can get re-focused."

The game was close throughout, but Kansas City led most of the way.

At one point, the Cats tied the game at 4-4, but K-State could pull ahead.

The Cats will travel to Oklahoma next weekend to play on Saturday in Tulsa.

On Sunday, K-State will travel to Stillwater, Okla., to face Oklahoma State.

Jones gives NBA scouts shooting display

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

K-State senior guard Askia Jones made a strong bid for the upcoming NBA draft with an MVP performance Saturday in the championship game of the Portsmouth (Va.) Invitational Tournament.

The invitational, which is an all-star game for seniors, was played in front of scouts from NBA clubs and was televised on ESPN.

In an exhibition reminiscent of his 62-point explosion against Fresno State, Jones funneled in a game-high 30 points.

Jones hit 27 in a quick, second-half outburst, including an eight-for-eight mark from three-point range, to break open a one-point game and lead the White squad to a 110-99 victory over the Blue team.

His long-range bombs, some as far out as 30 feet, drew rave reviews from the ESPN announcing crew.

"When I came here to play, I was a little out of shape," Jones said. "But the team sacrificed some shots, looked for me and gave me some good screens."

K-State teammate Anthony Beane also played in the championship as a point guard for the losing Blue squad. Beane scored seven points, but ended the game with two turnovers.

Former K-State guard Gaylon Nickerson also made a big splash.

Nickerson won the invitational slam-dunk championship and drew good reviews.

Nickerson finished his collegiate career this season at Northwestern Oklahoma A&M.

"I was happy with the results," Nickerson said. "I wish we had won it all, but it was fun."

Nickerson transferred after playing only one season at K-State.

He averaged 9.4 points a game as a starting guard for the Wildcats during the 1991-92 season.

Historically, the invitational has been a proving ground for players not considered first-round draft picks by the NBA, or players from small colleges who haven't had a chance to demonstrate their talents in a national spotlight.

Tubbs exits OU for TCU challenges

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH, Texas — Billy Tubbs, the Sooners' winningest basketball coach, said Saturday he will leave Oklahoma after 14 seasons to take on a new challenge — the struggling Texas Christian program.

"I came here because I think it's an exciting adventure. It's a tremendous challenge, and it brings with it a lot of excitement," Tubbs said during an afternoon news conference.

Tubbs replaces Moe Iba, who was fired in March after seven seasons. TCU ended the season 7-20 and with attendance sagging below 3,000.

TCU athletic director Frank Windeger said the school sought Tubbs because "he is a builder. He builds programs. He builds young men."

Tubbs said he decided to make the move because he believes TCU is committed to building a winning program.

He also said he was ready for a change.

"You can only get excited about going to Manhattan, Kansas, so many times. I'd like to see some other places around the U.S.A.," he said.

Swept. Not a pretty word to a baseball team, especially if you're on the losing end of it. Like K-State was after dropping a three-game homestand to the Missouri Tigers.

The Wildcats, now 11-24 on the season, have a conference record of 2-10.

Missouri improved to 23-10 on the year.

Errors plagued K-State this weekend, with the Cats committing three Friday, five Saturday and six on Sunday.

With Missouri leading the Cats 5-2 on Saturday, the game was suspended in the top of the seventh because of weather.

The delay didn't help K-State, as Missouri picked up where they left off en route to an 8-2 victory.

The Cats never got back on track, losing the final game 8-2.

Foreigners flee war

Thousands of civilians die as civil war breaks out in Rwanda after deaths of Rwandan and Burundi presidents.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KIGALI, Rwanda — Fires burned on the outskirts of the devastated capital of Rwanda, and hundreds looted aid warehouses as fighting abated Sunday after three days of savagery. At a hospital in Kigali, doctors claimed, soldiers slaughtered at least 100 patients in their beds.

Relief officials estimate as many as 10,000 people have been killed in Kigali alone. The fighting — the result of a decades-old struggle between the Hutu and Tutsi ethnic groups — has forced hundreds of Europeans and Americans to flee the country, many for neighboring Burundi.

Foreigners were leaving by air from Kigali airport or by convoy to Bujumbura, Burundi's capital.

"The last of the convoys containing all Americans who wish to leave has either passed into Burundi or is about to pass into Burundi," President Clinton said Sunday in Washington. About 250

Americans, mostly missionaries and aid workers, were in Rwanda.

In Kigali, Eric Bertin, a coordinator for the French Doctors Without Borders, said when he and colleagues arrived at a hospital Sunday, they found patients they treated the day before had been killed by soldiers overnight.

He estimated that at least 100 people were murdered, many in beds in tents set up around the hospital.

"We have decided it is no use to work here anymore," Bertin said. "It is useless to cure someone who is going to be killed anyway. They were just lying in their tents dead."

Elsewhere in the city, bodies were strewn in the streets. Fighting had raged since the presidents of Rwanda and Burundi — Juvenal Habyarimana and Cyprien Ntaryamira — died in a suspicious plane crash on Wednesday on return from a conference in Tanzania aimed at ending ethnic strife in their countries.

The Rwandan government said the plane was shot down by unidentified attackers. U.N. officials were prevented from going to the crash site.

In the rampage that followed, residents were dragged from their homes and shot to death or hacked to pieces. The acting prime minister was slain as he sought refuge. Aid workers, priests and nuns were targeted in the massacres.

Gangs armed with knives, guns and machetes went house to house at night demanding food, money and alcohol, foreigners who fled Kigali said.

Outside the capital, fighting has pitted the Hutu-dominated army and the mostly Tutsi Rwandan Patriotic Front. The two sides reportedly agreed to a cease-fire on Sunday, but its effectiveness was in doubt.

Foreigners continued leaving the capital Sunday, carrying whatever they could gather. One man toted a tennis racket; another held a thermos bottle.

Legislature begins wrap up

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The 1994 Legislature, perhaps a late-bloomer, seems bent on making Gov. Joan Finney eat her words when she called it a "do-nothing" session on March 31.

At the time, the governor was stung by the rejection of her pet project for this year — submission to the people of a constitutional amendment that would provide for public initiative, the process under which citizens can propose laws and amendments.

A Senate committee had just killed a highly restrictive initiative proposal that most observers considered worse than nothing, so Finney was in a defensive mood when she said, "Certainly, I would say it's a do-nothing session."

Gearing up for the grand finale of this session on April 27-29, when lawmakers return for three days of cleanup work, the Legislature took these major steps toward proving her wrong before it adjourned the regular portion of its session Friday night.

■ Sent to Finney a limited death-penalty bill, which a strong majority of the public supports and which she has all but guaranteed she will let become law without her signature.

■ Sent the governor a welfare-reform bill that may be the most sweeping effort at overhauling a system badly in need of change since it was created.

Royal Canadian Air Farce actors Luba Goy and Roger Abbott depict a couple set up on a blind date, as Don Ferguson, whose character set them up, stands aside to give advice to Abbott's character. The comedy trio entertained a large crowd Saturday afternoon in McCain Auditorium with slapstick comedy skits.

Group pokes fun at U.S., Kansas

The Royal Air Farce flew into McCain Auditorium Sunday, bringing jokes about Manhattan.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian
Laughing at yourself is a good thing once in a while.

Especially if you are made fun of with such wit and wisdom as the Royal Canadian Air Farce brought to McCain Auditorium on Sunday.

The Canadian comedy group, starring Luba Goy, Roger Abbott and Don Ferguson, touched on numerous subjects in the duration of their performance. The jokes about Manhattan and Kansas were hilarious.

The show began with a survey of recent news (or as close to news as you can get) — such as the new partnership of Amnesty International and the Alzheimer's Association. Their new slogan is "Forgive and Forget."

Ferguson said, "Hillary Clinton is in the news again." After which, the three of them paused, turned the page, and continued on with other news. It was very amusing.

When conducting a survey of Kansas to the audience, one question asked: "In her wildest, wildest dreams, an assistant professor at K-State's salary for next year would hopefully be: (A) not lower than it is this year. (B) 4.5 percent higher. (C) one-fourth of K-State's basketball coach's." Another question asked: "How would you describe your governor? (A) smart and successful. (B) witty and intelligent. (C) Joan Finney."

Hold it! Republicans were also the target of their skewed sense of humor. Citing differences between the United States and Canada, Ferguson said, "We call an overweight idiot a buffoon — you call it Rush Limbaugh."

The "Manhattan Minute," with Goy and Ferguson got quite a few laughs. It began with the phrase, "Manhattan, gateway to Ogden (wouldn't that make a mayor proud)." It touched on the high points of Manhattan, like when after it rains, every street is full of water puddles.

And how the intersection at Bluemont Avenue and Tuttle Creek Boulevard can be a nightmare.

Of course, the "Minute" was supposedly sponsored by the Junction City Chamber of Commerce.

Toward the end of the show, the Air Farce invited three audience members up on-stage to help in a routine.

The sketch, concerning mistaken communication between a furnace repairman and a doctor who treated men with sexual problems, was simple and funny.

Mistaken communication is one of the oldest comedy tricks in the book, but when done well, it never ceases to amuse.

Clinton advised to legalize drugs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton didn't like it when his surgeon general raised the possibility of legalizing drugs. On Sunday he heard similar advice from the pulpit of his wife's church.

The Rev. Walter Shropshire Jr., a minister at the Foundry United Methodist Church, said such a step might make a safer environment for all Americans.

If doctors could write prescriptions for narcotics, addicts could obtain them cheaply and (they) would not have to go out and arm themselves to obtain the money, Shropshire said in a sermon on Christian fellowship.

There was no immediate response from the Clintons or others attending the service.

Surgeon General Dr. Joycelyn Elders started a ruckus last year when she said the government should study the idea of legalizing drugs as a way to reduce crime.

The president promptly disassociated himself from her comments and said no study was needed. Clinton said in 1992 he believed his brother, Roger, once a drug abuser, would not be alive if drugs had been legal.

Shropshire, 61, raised the issue as an example of a topic on which people of faith had sharply differing opinions.

He quoted the words of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, that "we can agree to disagree, but that we love each other."

Hillary Rodham Clinton is a United Methodist. The president is a Baptist.

They often worship at Foundry, but have not joined the congregation.

Shropshire also said, "I'm not encouraging recreational use of drugs, (but) all of society needs to reexamine the economic base for our use of drugs."

Shropshire, a former physicist for the Smithsonian Institution, said he had been aware of the furor over Elders' remarks.

"She is a good Methodist, and I have been following what she has been proposing," the minister said. "I did not change my sermon at all because (the president) was there," he added.

Alumni to revisit campus

LISA ELLIOTT

Nine K-State alumni will be returning to campus to interact with students today through Friday.

All nine colleges including K-State Salina have alumni returning to speak in informal settings as part of the Kansas State University Alumni Fellows Program.

The program, which began with two alumni fellows in 1983, is sponsored by the Deans' Council, the President's Office and the Alumni Association.

Alumni are chosen to return as distinguished guests and as mentors, friends and counselors by the college they graduated from.

"They're not paid. They give of their own time to do this," said Becky Klingler, director of constituent programs for the Alumni Association.

U.N. bombs Gorazde; Clinton calls for talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton called on the Bosnian Serbs to return to the negotiating table Sunday, hours after two U.S. jets bombed targets in the town of Gorazde in response to a call from U.N. peacekeepers.

"We said we would act if we were requested to do so," Clinton told reporters. "We have now done so and will do so again if we are requested."

Clinton said he hoped the Serbs would cease their attacks on the Muslim enclave, adding that he had no reason to believe they would retaliate for the NATO jet strikes.

"I very much hope that now the attacks will cease, that the Serbs will go back, that the talks will resume," he said.

"We were retaliating," he added.

"The United Nations made it absolutely clear that there were U.N. personnel in Gorazde, that an attack on the town would be interpreted as a clear violation of the rules."

DEAR CASSIE,

by Cassandra Duveaux

Write to Cassandra, 116 Kedzie Hall, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Reader sympathizes with 'Desperate'

Dear Cassandra,

I am writing in response to "Getting desperate." It sounds as if her roommate is used to getting anything she wants and is a real bitch.

In Desperate's letter, she informed us that her roommate's parents were involved. Am I mistaken, or are we in college now? This matter should involve only the two roommates. Therefore, running to mommy and daddy for advice about something that was her own damn fault seems unnecessary and just plain wrong. Desperate made it obvious in her letter that money doesn't grow on trees for her and new clothing may not be a regular occurrence. I feel sorry for Desperate, and I encourage her to do anything possible to get her money back. I think it's time her roommate grew up a little and took some responsibility for her actions. I also think Desperate should take an inventory of her room. Who knows what else may be missing?

Signed, Don't get mad — get even

Dear Even,

I agree with you until you advocate revenge. Maybe it's because I don't believe in the get-even mentality, or maybe it's because I just got done watching three hours of "Kung Fu." In one episode, a character said, "If revenge is not mine, then whose is it?" The main character replied, "No one's." Desperate needs to seek justice, but not revenge.

DIVERSIONS

SpringDance
baffling in its beautyRUSSELL FORTMEYER
Collegian

Emotional outbursts and romantic escapades propelled SpringDance '94 into a very enjoyable evening of dance.

Principal choreographers Achmed Walk, Vera Orlock and Luke Kahlich surprised many audience members with their out-of-the-ordinary dance program. The extensive use of piano and vocally-backed music was very refreshing.

The first act was eclectic, with a few very noteworthy standouts. Haley Hoss wowed the audience into oohs and aahs with her self-choreographed "Bird of Prey." Her unpredictable solo about the rituals of birds was as imaginative as it was swift. Her entire body would tense up into a bird-like position and then spring into a flighty reverie. Hoss just kept moving, each muscle reflecting her control. It was, by far, one of the more memorable dances of the evening.

"Pride and Prejudice," Smruti Patel's self-choreographed solo dance, was different. It mainly focused on self-erotica via the use of a full-length mirror and sexual gesturing.

Guest Choreographer and KSU alumna Patricia Durbin choreographed "Belief, Dreams and Reality." Her opening solo dance to the music of Kenny Loggins was graceful. She was definitely the strongest dancer in the show. She had no trouble executing her routine. It was a breath of fresh air from some of the sloppier movements by the company.

Although there were some very good performances by the company, the group as a whole had a hard time of staying in sync. It was very disturbing when hardly any of the dancers on stage were together. It just didn't flow very well.

The eagerly awaited, if not controversial, second act brought the company's talents to light. It also shed light on the actual use of the architectural structures designed by Robert Arens, professor of architecture.

Unlike the first act, where each piece of work was separated by a pause to allow the audience to know who had choreographed it, the continuous second act was somewhat hard to follow.

"Vessel," part of Vera Orlock's "The Path to Heaven," was of particular interest. The uncredited dancer of this piece did a wonderful job of actually representing an amphora. Although it did not use the architecture itself, it played well against the backdrop.

One dance in the second act was like Christo gone mad. It was baffling. The dancer rolled herself up into a long strip of paper, very much like a cocoon. However, she didn't shed her wrappings and celebrate her newfound freedom, but instead wiggled out of the paper and walked off-stage. It was disappointing.

The piece by Luke Kahlich, director of SpringDance, was entitled "Village," and it was excellent. It was danced by a group. The allusions to Egyptian sculpture and architecture were fascinating. The "villagers" arranged themselves around the architectural pieces like spiritual statues guarding a temple. It was a delightful piece of work.

Kahlich managed the architectural structures quite well. The structures were part of the dance. They weren't simply obstacles to work around.

Gina Cortes, the costume designer, clad the dancers in some of the most smashing costumes of the Manhattan cultural year. Every different dance number had its own clothing identity. In "Sums of Six," Cortes put the dancers in baggy pants opposed by a tight-fitting shirt. On the dancer's chests, Cortes applied numbers in abstract derivations. It is nice to see a cultural event in which the people involved have had complete artistic control.

India Fest '94 brings culture to Manhattan

SERA TANK
Collegian

Manhattan had the opportunity to sample India's food, music, culture, art and dance during India Fest '94 on Saturday.

The event at Manhattan Middle School began at 5 p.m. with a dinner that included many of India's cuisines.

"It is a general misconception that all Indian food is spicy. Our foods range from very sweet to very spicy," Abdul Nizar, vice president of the India Student Association and graduate student in computer science, said.

Some of the dishes served were samosa, vegetables wrapped in flour and deep fried; channa, which is the same as American chick peas; and dal, a lentil gravy.

For dessert, rasgulla and gulab jamun were served. Both are sweet dishes made out of milk and sugar.

The beverage served was lassi, which is buttermilk, made of yogurt and sugar, and has a sour taste. An exhibit was set up to display Indian art, statues, cookery and traditional clothes. One statue was of Lord Ganesh, an Indian god who is half man and half elephant.

"Most people in India have these displayed at the entrance of their homes. We pray to him whenever we begin anything," Ayesha Chirimar, member of the India Student Association and graduate student in computer science, said.

Common cooking utensils around India were also exhibited.

"Most of our cooking things are made out of steel because it is easier, and many of our dishes need a lot of heat," Chirimar said.

There was a table that displayed traditional Indian clothing, such as the wedding dress and the sari.

"The sari is most commonly worn by women in India," Chirimar said. "We also wear a lot of very bright colors."

There was also an exhibit of Rangoli. Rangoli is patterns made with several types and colors of grains and flower petals spread on the floor into a flower-like design with a brass lamp in the center, Chirimar said.

"Rangoli is done during some festivals at people's homes," she said.

Six-year-old Sheeba Gill, Manhattan, performs a dance from the state of Punjab, India, Saturday evening during India Fest at the Manhattan Middle School. Gurinder Gill, Manhattan, choreographed the dance and said it is traditionally performed for the bride before her wedding.

SARAH HUERTER
Collegian

Other displays at the exhibit were wood work, leather boxes, statues, Indian instruments, and brass pitchers and bowls.

The second part of the night was a cultural show at 7:30 p.m. There were several dances from different parts of India performed. The dances ranged from a classical solo performance to wedding dances.

A fashion show highlighted different fashions from all over India for men, women and children.

A traditional wedding ceremony, which usually takes from one to two days, was condensed into a 15-minute production in which the traditional Indian chants were translated into English for the non-Indian language-speaking audience.

India Fest '94 ended with the audience singing the national anthem of India.

"I come to this almost every year. I like the sharing of culture in Manhattan. There were some new things this year, and the audience was more diverse than in past years," Ann Hawks, Manhattan teacher and audience member, said.

One audience member said the festival was very accurate in its attempt to summarize Indian culture in one night.

"It was very representative, but there is so much diversity in India that you could not possibly show it all in one night," Mukta Pahwa, audience member and India native, said.

EDUCATION

Teacher's arrest record concealed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A fourth-grade teacher charged this week with selling cocaine had a prior drug conviction that Kansas City School District officials did not know of before hiring her full time in 1991.

Her situation has raised questions about the procedures districts use to check backgrounds of prospective teachers.

Juanita Smalls, 51, was charged Thursday in U.S. District Court with selling cocaine out of her home. She was a substitute teacher when she pleaded guilty in 1990 to selling cocaine.

Kansas City School District officials said she was hired as a full-time teacher in August 1991.

"If we knew about that prior to hiring them, we wouldn't hire them as teachers," Bill Dittmeier, attorney for the school district, said.

New employees are required to get a Kansas City police report showing their Jackson County records, Dittmeier said. However, Smalls didn't have a police record when she was originally hired as a substitute teacher in the mid-1980s.

The charges Thursday accused Smalls of making several cocaine sales for a total of about $2,500 to a police informant the past few weeks.

Smalls, 51, pleaded guilty in Jackson County in March 1990 to selling crack cocaine. Jackson County Circuit Judge David Shinn sentenced her.

She had no criminal record and told Shinn she was almost finished earning a master's degree. Shinn sentenced her to the minimum — five years — then released her after 120 days in prison. She was still serving her five-year probation when arrested this week.

Dittmeier said school district officials probably missed Smalls' conviction because substitutes work intermittently.

To catch a conviction in such a case, he said, the school district would have to do annual criminal checks on all employees, which would not be affordable or practical.

Other districts use various approaches to screen prospective teachers. In the Independence School District, early-childhood instructor and classroom-teacher applicants must sign a release allowing district personnel to check for a past criminal record.

Early-childhood teachers also are subjected to a check through the Missouri Division of Family Services for any problems with child abuse or neglect.

The procedure is similar in the Fort Osage School District. Since the district began doing routine criminal checks, it has not had an out-of-state candidate. But the district would try to get information through the network of fingerprint records that is expanding nationwide, Doug Hatridge, assistant superintendent for personnel services, said.

The Blue Valley (Kan.) School District doesn't do police checks because there is no single law-enforcement agency that can be consulted, Gary Gordon, assistant superintendent of personnel and planning, said.

Instead, the district checks references and contacts former employers.

But the reluctance of some former employers to disclose personnel information for fear of legal troubles poses an obstacle for districts.

In the Turner (Kansas) School District, the principals of each building handle the background checks, which includes a look at college records, student-teaching records and former employment.

Through references, principals determine whether applicants have faced legal problems or other questions about their abilities.

Joe Snyder, in his first year as principal at Turner, said he has not yet consulted a law-enforcement agency about a prospective teacher.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for. Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations. Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Kite's closing marks the end of era not say whether the price was fair. "They are symbols. You can't put a price on them," Thibodeau said.

Thibodeau said the Alumni Association planned to give the photos to the athletic department, which would sell the photos at the Catbacker auction, a fundraiser for the athletic department.

Many K-State alumni and former Kite's patrons were present to get a last glimpse of the bar and take home a memento.

Chris Heersche went to K-State from 1968-73 and frequented Kite's often. She said she was so sad to see the bar close, she cried in the back room.

"Kite's hasn't changed much. Except for the little details, it's the same," she said.

Heersche drove from Wellington with the hopes of bringing back the stuffed bobcat that sat on top of the back bar.

In a bidding war, Heersche got the bobcat for $430. She also picked up a color photo of former K-State basketball star Mitch Richmond for $65 and several other pieces of K-State memorabilia.

Craig Collins, a K-State graduate and resident of Junction City, came to get something with the Kite's name on it.

Collins had four Kites' menus in his hands. He picked them up for $3.25 each.

"I'm done purchasing now. I'm just reminiscing," Collins said.

Collins said he was in a fraternity and used to hang out with his friends there.

"Kite's hey day was in the '70s before the drinking age was raised," Collins said. "It's the end of an era. This place brings back memories."

As the auction concluded, there were no misty eyes. Parents told their children about the people who were in the black and white photos.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Marc Hughes, Riley, and Tom Burnham, Junction City, looks at photos auctioned off at Kite's Bar and Grille Saturday afternoon.

They began taking down the photos from the walls, unscrewing lamps and removing glass as bids continued for items in the back room.

Collins wrapped his arms around the Kite's menus. A glazed look filled his face. He stood by the bar, stared out the windows and smiled.

Residency disputed

Elkins said anyone who physically leaves the state for more than six months is generally no longer considered a resident of Kansas.

Because of this, he said, this kind case is fairly common.

"To have residency, you have to have a physical presence in the state," he said.

"People can pay taxes in every state if they have property in every state, but they are not residents."

"It's state law. We don't have a choice."

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said each case that deals with residency for fee purposes is decided entirely by the University.

"Each case is handled on an individual basis," Oleen said.

"That hearing committee has the power to make that decision."

"There is what I call wiggle-room in these kinds of cases."

"I don't know exactly what circumstances caused the hearing committee to decide the way they did, but it appears to me that she may want to pursue this case."

Oleen said she recommends students who think they have been mistreated in terms of their residency classification contact her.

sources for funds, Dalton said.

"We can't run the purple flag out and say send money this way," she said.

Money can be a deciding factor on whether or not a student can come to K-State, Jeff Peterson, senior in animal sciences and industry, said.

The state government has the ability to propose a tuition hike at any time.

Student government needs to work with the state and lobby to keep tuition down, he said.

"We can't expect the state to focus on higher education if we don't focus on higher education," Peterson said.

While working with state government is a necessity, student government itself needs to be watched, Michelle Smith, junior in political science, said.

Student Senate needs to grab a hold of financial responsibility.

Smith said she thinks an outside group should be established to look into Student Senate's budget as a sort of watchdog.

Student Senate's watch over its own funds is like "cookie monster guarding the cookie jar," she said.

Handling money matters is one of the student body president's duties.

Communicating and dealing with the administration is another.

A member of the audience

during the debate asked how students would know that the candidate wouldn't buckle under the administration's thumb once they were in office.

Steffany Carrel, junior in journalism and mass communications, said students can't elect a patsy that will go in, smile, nod and agree with everything the administration proposes.

Carrel said she has proven her ability to stand up against the administration through her work to instate a policy for academic minors and the continuance of the traditional grading system.

The administration can't be approached in an abrasive and hostile way though, she said.

"You have to go in with an open mind, communicate, facilitate and always keep the students' needs first," Carrel said.

Students are the No. 1 priority, Smith said.

After all it isn't the administration that pays for the student body president's salary, she said.

"It isn't Jon Wefald who pays your paycheck," she said.

"It isn't the Board of Regents. It's the students."

Dalton said she would be able to hold her own with the administration if necessary.

She said she's learned not to trust anybody over the age of 35.

Eastep said he wouldn't have any problems working with the administration.

"We're not going to let Jon boy push us around," he said.

Closed meeting violates regulations

Tomb also said he told Bailey what the candidates intended to do.

"I told here we weren't going to spend any money, and that we were going to mutually campaign for each other," Tomb said.

"If that threw up red flags, I don't see why she didn't say something then."

Karen Erickson, member of the committee, said all the candidates were responsible for Frese's actions.

"Everyone is responsible to understand the guidelines, and they needed to be registered," she said.

"It is part of being involved with other people."

Kara Rogers said she knew Frese felt responsible, but she was not willing to reconsider her decision.

"This is not something we can bargain with," she said.

Andrew Tomb, Mark Tomb's brother, brought a separate complaint to the committee Friday.

It asked the committee to reconsider its decision on the grounds it violated the candidates right to due process by not notifying the candidates of their violation and allowing them to be present at the hearing.

The campaign regulations state that students have to be notified of campaign violations and allowed to be at a hearing on the complaint.

Bailey said she did not know that the meeting needed to be open or that the committee needed to notify the candidates.

"I was not trying to keep anyone out," she said. "I didn't know."

By not notifying the candidates or the Collegian, the committee violated the Kansas Open Meetings Act.
